Hansard is 50

Hansard reporting of complete sessions of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario began on 23 February 1944 with the 21st Parliament. The reports were prepared by shorthand reporters who dictated their notes to typists. Copies of each Hansard on onion-skin paper were distributed only to party leaders, the cabinet and the legislative library. Formal printing and indexing began in 1947.

Today's debates are recorded on audio cassettes. A staff of 50 transcribes, edits, formats and indexes the reports on computer. About three hours after adjournment, the report of that day's House sitting is transmitted to the printer and to the parliamentary television channel for broadcast throughout the province.

A commemorative display may be viewed on the main floor of the Legislative Building.

Hansard on your computer

Hansard and other documents of the Legislative Assembly can be on your personal computer within hours after each sitting. For a brochure describing the service, call 416-325-3942.

Le Journal des débats a 50 ans

Le reportage des sessions intégrales de l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario, fait par le Journal de débats, a commencé le 23 février 1944 avec la 21<sup>e</sup> législature. Les comptes rendus ont été préparés par des reporters qui dictaient leurs notes en sténo à des dactylos. Les fascicules du Journal des débats, en papier pelure, n'ont été distribués qu'aux leaders des partis, au Conseil des ministres et à la bibliothèque législative. L'impression et l'indexation ont commencé en 1947.

Les débats d'aujourd'hui sont enregistrés sur bande. Le personnel de 50 fait la saisie, la révision, la mise en pages et l'indexation du Journal sur ordinateur. Trois heures environ après l'ajournement de la Chambre, le compte rendu de la séance est transmis à la maison d'impression et à la chaîne parlementaire pour être diffusé à travers la province.

Une exposition pour marquer cet événement est étalée au premier étage de l'Édifice du Parlement.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

EMERGENCY TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr Ron Eddy (Brant-Haldimand): Last Thursday marked a very important achievement by six municipalities in my riding of Brant-Haldimand because now the county of Brant and the city of Brantford have access to the enhanced 911 public emergency reporting service.

I congratulate the councils of the city of Brantford and the county of Brant on this important achievement. A great deal of time and effort has gone into bringing this important initiative to the residents of the entire county and the city.

The proposal was initiated by the council of the county of Brant some four years ago and required a great deal of research and coordination by county and city staff and the strong support of the Southwestern Ontario Wardens' Association.

This important initiative was accomplished locally without any involvement or assistance from the Ontario Ministry of Culture, Tourism and Recreation. This was a perfect opportunity for the government to work with the county to provide leadership so other communities across the province could benefit from their experience. However, the province was of little assistance, and now other municipalities are looking at the Brant county-Brantford initiative as a prototype.

Brant county will be the first jurisdiction to use the most advanced 911 system that is available. Small municipalities in rural areas will benefit from the Brant county example because of the unique billing system: a few cents on each subscriber's telephone bill.

I congratulate the city and county on this important initiative.

DUFFERIN AREA HOSPITAL AUXILIARY

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I rise in the House today to acknowledge all the hard work and dedication the Dufferin Area Hospital Auxiliary has provided to the community of Orangeville and district. The hospital auxiliary is celebrating its 40th anniversary this year.

With a membership of 180 volunteers, the auxiliary has provided support to the staff and patients of the Dufferin Area Hospital by operating a gift shop, assisting at the admitting desk, in the emergency department, operating rooms, ambulatory care, and has even provided clerical support in the labs, as well as fund-raising for the hospital building and equipment fund.

As with many organizations in our community, the Dufferin Area Hospital has been busy raising funds for the new hospital. Later this week the Dufferin Area Hospital Auxiliary will fulfil its pledge to the hospital building fund and turn over the last instalment of its five-year commitment to the building fund of $350,000.

I would like to congratulate the Dufferin Area Hospital Auxiliary for all the important duties it performs in and outside the hospital. The care community would not be able to have the wonderful quality of care that it has currently without the support and assistance of the Dufferin Area Hospital Auxiliary.

As politicians, we often talk about how communities must look after themselves by focusing on community-based programs. We can all learn valuable lessons of community support from the Dufferin Area Hospital Auxiliary and how it has worked tirelessly in our community for over 40 years.

I wish them all the best and hope their next 40 years are as successful as the previous 40.

UXBRIDGE FAMILY RESOURCES SHOW

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I'm pleased to rise in the Legislature today to inform the House about the Uxbridge Family Resources Show to be held at the Uxbridge seniors centre on Saturday, April 30, 1994, between 10 am and 4 pm.

The family resources show is sponsored by the Durham West Childcare Initiative. It's a celebration to promote the importance of the family and togetherness in our communities. It will be a forum for family organizations and clubs that demonstrate the resources and services they have to offer the Uxbridge community in a fun and festive environment in celebration of 1994, the International Year of the Family.

The day's events are going to include some children's entertainers, the Joseph Gould Jazz Band, which you've heard me speak about before because it has won gold, karate demonstrations and story readings. There will be a supervised children's play area, refreshments and many information displays, all about family resources and services in the Uxbridge area of my riding.

The Uxbridge Family Resources Show will be a great opportunity for everyone in the Uxbridge area to find out about the many local sports clubs, service clubs, schools and churches in the community.

I'm pleased to have the opportunity to announce that right here in the Legislature today. I invite anybody who might be here or watching or who lives in the Uxbridge area and all members of the Legislature, including yourself and your family, Mr Speaker, to attend and enjoy the show at the Uxbridge family show. It'll be the 1994—it might be the first one of many to come—Uxbridge Family Resources Show.

STUDENT DEBATING COMPETITION

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): Recently the

Ontario Student Debating Union held its 1994 provincial seminar and debating competition at St Andrew's College in Aurora. This competition was held to select the Ontario participants for the Canadian student debating championships to be held later this month in Winnipeg.

Six students representing different geographical regions of the province and from three different debating categories were selected from the Aurora debate. The top bilingual competitor was Neil McGraw of Collège Notre-Dame in Sudbury. The top French-language debater was Stéphanie Malherbe from the Lycée Claudel in Ottawa.

The top four English-language debaters were Sacha Thacker of Lorne Park Collegiate in Toronto, Dawnelee Hill of Fort William Collegiate in Thunder Bay, John Matterson of the Ursuline College in Chatham and Robert Mulvale of White Oaks Collegiate in Oakville. Of particular note is Dawnelee Hill of Thunder Bay. As a person with a disability, having less than 3% vision, Dawnelee's participation was an inspiration to us all.

Next month all of these competitors will be meeting with the Lieutenant Governor here at Queen's Park. I believe all the competitors deserve our congratulations and the winners our best wishes for good results in Winnipeg.

ORGAN DONORS

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): The week of April 17 has been designated as Organ Donor Awareness Week, and on behalf of my caucus colleagues, I would like to take this opportunity to raise public awareness about this important issue.

Last year 566 Ontarians received organ transplants, transplants that meant a chance at a new life. Sadly, almost 1,000 others are left playing a waiting game, uncertain that a donor organ will ever become available. Unfortunately, this tragic situation occurs because the public is unaware of the importance of donated organs. Too few people in Ontario have signed organ donor cards and discussed their wishes with their families.

This critical need for donors is what prompted the Mutual Group to take action and launch, in the fall of 1992, a national organ donor awareness program, By Mutual Consent. This program believes that by providing accurate information about organ donation and encouraging families to discuss this important issue, some of the barriers that currently prevent donation from occurring can be broken down.

I congratulate the Mutual Group on making a solid commitment to organ donation and I would encourage all members of this House to join the Mutual Group at a reception to recognize national Organ Donor Awareness Week this Wednesday evening.

In conclusion, I urge you to remember that each person in this province can make a difference in addressing the critical need for organ donors by signing an organ donor card and ensuring that our family members are aware of our wishes. "By Mutual Consent" we can break barriers to organ donation.

INJURED WORKERS EDUCATIONAL NETWORK

to inform the members of this Legislature of a book launch that took place in my region on March 24. The Waterloo-Wellington Injured Workers Educational Network, which was formed last spring, officially launched its first project, A Guide to Filing a WCB Claim.

The network serves a multipurpose role in our community. It provides a localized support group for individuals seeking information, support and advice. The network is a community-based organization bringing together diverse agencies, organizations and groups which deliver services to injured workers in the Waterloo-Wellington area.

The booklet is written in plain language. It offers dos and don'ts and explains the process and the steps that are involved. For those individuals, especially those not having union representation, who have never had to deal with an injury claim before, it can be rather intimidating when they do not know what to expect. As with anything else, education is a key element to understanding, assisting and guiding.

The educational network is composed of various individuals and representatives from local unions, employee associations, injured workers and representatives from various service organizations and agencies at the municipal and provincial levels. Each of these representatives brings to the education network valuable experience and understanding of the system and the process.

I wish to take this opportunity to commend this group for its efforts, its understanding and its desire to enhance service delivery and empower injured workers through education. The booklet is unique in that it provides information specific to the services in the Waterloo-Wellington area, unlike other more general brochures which are available.

I understand this is the first of many projects for the Waterloo-Wellington Injured Workers Educational Network and I wish it well in its joint efforts for information-sharing and education.

RETAIL SALES TAX

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Ottawa South): The Minister of Finance has announced today that he has decided to reduce his tax on the brew-on-premises industry. I have raised concerns about this tax on at least five occasions in this House and I have spoken to the minister informally about the problems his tax would create and has created.

My first response to the minister's announcement today is to say thank you. My second response is to ask him two questions.

First, why did he not reduce the tax earlier, when it was plain for all to see that it was killing business and putting people out of work?

As soon as the tax was implemented last August, sales volumes plummeted by as much as 50%. Shortly thereafter, people started losing their jobs and businesses started to close. In fact, to date, over 400 people have lost their jobs and dozens of operations have gone bankrupt or into receivership. The minister steadfastly refused to lower his tax, while employees lost their jobs and small business entrepreneurs lost their businesses and their homes they had put up for security. This tax reduction comes too late for these victims.

My second question for the minister is this: Why did he ever even implement this tax at such a high rate in the first place?

You-brews had been a small business anomaly in Ontario. They were growing and thriving during the recession. They had created 2,000 jobs and 235 small businesses before the tax took its toll. Our Minister of Finance cannot be forgiven for failing to recognize that this fledgling Ontario small business industry, instead of being penalized with taxes for growing, ought to have been, at a minimum, left alone to prosper and to create jobs.

The new tax took a success story and turned it into a tragedy. The minister, incredibly, turned a silk purse into a sow's ear.

BICYCLING SAFETY

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): I'd really like to congratulate the London Free Press, the Toronto Sun and other media for promoting safe cycling and the wearing of bicycle helmets.

In Ontario two million cyclists, including almost 500,000 people over the age of 15, rely on bicycles as their primary means of transportation. The Highway Traffic Act recognizes bicycles as legitimate vehicles entitled to share the road. They must be equipped with a working bell, horn and proper lights.

As of October 1, 1995, approved bicycle helmets will be mandatory when cycling. At Queen's Park, a bicycle safety team has been formed to effectively implement this legislation. It includes representatives from the ministries of Transportation, Health, Education and Training, the Solicitor General and Correctional Services and Culture, Tourism and Recreation as well as the Ontario Head Injury Association, the Children's Bike Helmet Coalition, police services, the Ontario Cycling Association and cycling groups from both Toronto and Ottawa.

The mandate is to raise bicycle safety public awareness and modify behaviour in order to reduce the number of bicycle accidents, the resulting injuries and their associated economic and societal costs. One of the team's goals for 1994 is to increase the acceptance of helmet use and to educate the public on the correct way of wearing bicycle helmets.

I'd like to show the Legislative Assembly this wonderful poster, produced by the government, to encourage young children, especially adolescents, to wear their helmets and to be safe.

CONSERVATION

Mr Paul R. Johnson (Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings): On Friday, April 15, my colleague Fred Wilson and I had the honour of unveiling for the Napanee Region Conservation Authority its conservation strategy. The NRCA, together with other agencies and the public, has developed a shared vision for the Napanee and Salmon River watersheds and a clear path to get here. The conservation strategy will guide the authority's activities over the next decade. The 1990s have brought new challenges to the authority but also many opportunities. The strategy offers creative ways to deal with expected challenges and a way to deliver the programs efficiently and effectively.

Innovative ways to manage resources include new partnerships with the public and other agencies, improved public relations and outdoor education, better protection of environmentally sensitive areas and involving residents in efforts to improve the health of the natural environment. The strategy turns its focus to anticipating and addressing problems before they occur rather than reacting to them later.

The Napanee Region Conservation Authority will also improve its financial situation through various means of increasing its resources and improving efficiency.

The application of the conservation strategy will contribute to improvements to wetlands, woodlands and wildlife managed by the authority and ultimately to improvements in water quality in the Bay of Quinte.

I would like to congratulate the NRCA board, its chairman, Wayne Parks, its manager, Terry Murphy, and all those who contributed to the conservation strategy.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

IMMIGRATION AND REFUGEE POLICY

Hon Elaine Ziemba (Minister of Citizenship and Minister Responsible for Human Rights, Disability Issues, Seniors' Issues and Race Relations): This is National Citizenship Week, and it is being marked across Canada this week to celebrate the privilege of belonging to this great country, Canada. It is a time to thank Canada for its generosity and to ask ourselves how we can contribute to its future.

Ontario has always valued the immense contribution immigrants and refugees have made to the province's social, economic and cultural life, and unless we are from the aboriginal community, we are all immigrants or descendants of immigrants. It is therefore ironic that the federal government chose to announce decisions last Friday which will affect newcomers, immigrant settlement organizations and all Ontarians.

Federal Immigration Minister Sergio Marchi said that effective May 15, the adjustment assistance program, also known as AAP, will be restricted to government-sponsored refugees. Effective June 1, fees for immigration services will increase, including the introduction of a $500 application fee for permanent residency for successful refugee claimants, who were previously exempt.

As my colleague Tony Silipo, Minister of Community and Social Services, pointed out to reporters at a press conference last Friday, changes to the AAP will hurt an estimated 5,000 indigent independent immigrants and in-Canada refugees living in Ontario for less than a year. Since many of these people will not be able to find work immediately, they will have no option but to seek social assistance until they are employed. This will end up costing Ontarians an estimated $16.5 million annually in additional social assistance costs alone.

It is unacceptable that the federal government continues to download costs to this province. The decisions Ottawa announced last Friday come on top of the ceiling on Canada assistance plan payments and signal a continuing abdication of financial responsibility to the people of this province. Before Ottawa released its budget in February, this province asked the federal government, and especially our Ontario colleagues, to address the cap on CAP issue. It didn't, and now it is exacerbating the situation with its latest action.

The AAP has been on the books since 1948, providing necessary assistance to newcomers. Ontario will be particularly hard hit by Ottawa's changes because it is home to 59% of all immigrants and refugees who come to Canada, yet it receives only 39% of federal immigration funding for settlement and language training. Ottawa spends $760 on every immigrant who comes to Ontario, compared to $1,900 for those who settle in Quebec and $1,500 for those who settle elsewhere in Canada.

I am dismayed at this unilateral federal action, which was made without appropriate consultation with either this government or community partners despite the fact that Ontario is about to begin negotiations with Ottawa on a provincial-federal immigration agreement.

This just emphasizes even more the need for a bilateral immigration agreement. According to Mr Marchi's statement, Quebec is exempted from the federal decisions because it negotiated a bilateral accord signed in 1991.

Ottawa's decision to modify the AAP will have a devastating effect on many newcomers to Ontario and indeed to Canada. The restriction of AAP will result in ending federal financial assistance for food, clothing and housing to eligible indigent refugee claimants who have been accepted as UN convention refugees to Canada.

I'm also concerned that legitimate refugees, unable to pay the newly introduced application fees, will not have access to landed immigrant status, denying such refugees their full participation in our society. Several community organizations have already expressed fear that the federal government's actions last Friday will add new obstacles to refugees who have left life-threatening situations to come to Canada. Community organizations serving newcomers will have to deal with additional pressures resulting from these changes.

The changes to AAP, the continued cap on CAP and the absence of fair treatment for Ontario in settlement and language-training funding are not fair. They are not fair to Ontario, they are not fair to the newcomers who choose and want to contribute to our society, and they are not fair to the many organizations that help newcomers settle and integrate into our province.

I am therefore calling on Mr Marchi to rescind his decision on changes to the AAP and to discuss with his provincial counterparts, as well as community partners, how we can all work together to provide appropriate support to newcomers in the most effective, efficient and cost-efficient manner.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Responses?

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): It is quite unclear, frankly, just what the purpose of the minister's statement has been today. If we look at the first two paragraphs, I think all of us in this House can well agree with the minister that we want to celebrate National Citizenship Week, that we want to celebrate the fact that so many people continue to choose to come to Canada, to become Canadians, to participate in Canadian life and to give to this country their talents and all that people from all over the world can give. All of that we support in what the minister has said and we believe equally in that.

But the rest of the statement is one where frankly what one hears is a kind of selective outrage that's going on. The minister chooses to talk about some things the federal government has done. What about her own government and what it has done to refugees and what it has done to people from other countries who have come here?

Why, if this government says it feels so strongly about the issue of refugees, did the Minister of Community and Social Services last summer say that for sponsored immigrants on welfare, their cheques were going to be cut to $50? That was done last summer, done with no discussion, just wham, it was done.

If this government feels so strongly about the question of refugees and immigrants, then why did the Minister of Health rise in her place only a few short weeks ago—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Beer: —to announce that she's taking $48 million out of the system in terms of helping refugees, in terms of allowing foreign students to be on OHIP?

What we have here, I simply say to the minister, is that there's an awful lot of hypocrisy that's going around, both federally and provincially, on this issue.

The minister says, "We're going to sit down and start to negotiate a federal-provincial agreement." Well, where have you been? This is 1994. Where were you in 1993? You could have negotiated an agreement. Where were you in 1992, in 1991? You have not negotiated an agreement, and by the minister's very own words, the fact that the Quebec government had an agreement meant, therefore, that it was protected from this change. Where has this government been in arguing the case for better immigrant settlement and adaptation and better treatment of refugees?

I remind the minister responsible for citizenship that it was the federal Liberal government that finally acted on the question of work permits. This was something that we and I, as minister, had put to the previous government, and it is something Mr Axworthy moved on and said yes, it makes sense. Refugees don't want to get social assistance, they want to work, and a way of doing it is to ensure that they can get work permits.

Where also has this government been on the subject of English as a second language?

Again there needs to be a negotiated settlement to ensure we have the dollars necessary for those settlement programs. The question is not, does the federal government have a responsibility? We agree with the government. They do have a responsibility. But this government has a clear responsibility, knowing full well that there is no immigration agreement between the federal and provincial governments and knowing full well that the Canada assistance plan is going to end and will have to be replaced with something else.

Where are you? Where are your ideas? Where are your plans? Where are your proposals to sit down with the federal government, with other provinces, if you wish? Remember that in terms of immigrant settlement agreements—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Beer: —there are six provinces that already have signed agreements with the federal government.

This government has been in office since the fall of 1990, and it never seemed to be important to them in 1990 or 1991 or 1992 or 1993. Now, all of a sudden, we get this statement from the minister, which is supposedly having something to do with National Citizenship Week, and what it turns out to be, in the words of Jim Bradley, is that it's number one and number two and whatever other numbers are at play where you blame everything on the federal government.

There are things that the federal government, of whatever political stripe, does that we may not like, but what we have to do in this place is to call the government's tune and say, "If you've got specific proposals to improve the way in which immigrants and refugees are dealt with, then let's put them forward."

Go out and negotiate that agreement. Go out and make changes to the ESL agreement. Recognize good things that the federal government has done, such as allowing the work permits. But that's what you should be doing: getting up today in this House and announcing what positive measures you are going to do. Are you going to go back and change what the Minister of Health did earlier this spring and change what the Minister of Community and Social Services did last summer? That's the challenge.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Burlington South.

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): Let's just take it right to the people. Let's go to the people now. We're ready.

Interjections.

1400

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): I am quite shocked at the machinations and the responses coming from the Liberal benches.

At the outset can I just simply say that nothing in this announcement today changes the capacity of Canadians to welcome new Canadians. Nothing in this announcement today diminishes the compassion that our country has to welcome new Canadians. What in fact is contained in this document, rightly or wrongly, is a clear understanding that all Canadians are having to struggle with the ravages of a recession and that all Canadians are sharing in the responsibility of seeking solutions to the economic times we find ourselves in.

I think it's fair for our country and indeed this province to look upon today's announcement just as a worker who's been laid off at the General Motors plant in St Catharines has to look at today's announcement, just as a family struggling to survive on social assistance in this province, just as a small businessman who's laying off several of his long-time employees. All Canadians, and that includes all of us who are ourselves the products of new immigration to this country, have a responsibility to look upon this announcement as a new challenge.

The largest opportunity that faced the leadership of the Ontario government on this issue was opened during the Meech Lake discussions. It's very clear that it was in those discussions and in that context that Quebec clearly enunciated its vision of where it belonged in our country. It tabled in those discussions what its view was on immigration and what it was prepared to do to determine its own future with respect to immigration. At that time, David Peterson, the Liberal Premier of Ontario, chose not to take a similar position for Ontario, and so today's announcement is clearly an indication of the failure on the part of the Ontario Liberal government in 1989 and 1990, during the Meech Lake and subsequent discussions, to deal with the issue of a federal agreement.

Today the Minister of Community and Social Services, who stands in this House on a weekly basis and is, quite frankly, assaulted by all members of the House for the problems that exist in this province, problems around the growing number of our citizens on social assistance, the growing number of vulnerable children in this province—this is yet one more issue that has fallen on to his table, along with the Premier's, to deal with with the federal government.

I listened intently to the member for York-Mackenzie, who presented himself for the leadership of the Liberal Party, and I am sure that he personally has his own sense of priorities for this province that he would have brought had he become the Liberal leader. For that reason, I suggest that he save his speech, the one he gave to the government and to the Conservative Party of Ontario today in the House, and share that with the 98 federal members who were just recently elected.

The dialogue should begin immediately with those individuals who won in the last federal election to represent Ontarians' interests, not just the Ontarians who are today paying the taxes for this province—we're told time and time again that Ontario taxpayers pay a disproportionate amount, a larger share, in order to share in the vision of our country. But it's equally important that those 99 or 98 federal Liberal members of Parliament begin the dialogue as to what kind of home we are going to provide for new Canadians in the province of Ontario.

There will always be a home for new immigrants in Ontario. It's part of the vision of Mike Harris and the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario. But I remind all members of the House that nothing in this announcement today diminishes the capacity of our country to welcome these people and nothing diminishes our ability to work with these people and their families to ensure that they become contributing members of an Ontario society to assist us back on the road towards prosperity.

That's what Mike Harris believes and that's what the Progressive Conservative Party feels about this announcement today.

ORAL QUESTIONS

SPECIAL INVESTIGATIONS UNIT

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): My question is to the Attorney General. If anybody needs the protection of gun control legislation in this province, it has to be the Attorney General, because she keeps shooting herself in the foot.

She has done it again at the SIU, the special investigations unit, where the SIU has had to suspend a special investigator who was hired under circumstances where he was subject to charges for obstruction of justice and forgery with the Waterloo police department. Minister, you know that you've had this problem in the past; in fact, in December, with another hiring. Would you please tell the people of Ontario why and how this could have happened again.

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): As the member is well aware, appointments to the civil service are not done by politically elected officials. There is a process that goes forward, and a very clear process that goes forward, under which people are hired under the public service. That process was followed in this case.

The member is well aware that the allegations that have been brought were not known to either the Waterloo Regional Police or to the SIU, that thorough checks were made and thorough reference checks were made, and that this has arisen subsequently. One of the issues we need to be clear about in this kind of case is that this kind of allegation can arise no matter how much care in hiring is undertaken.

I would simply say to the member that we take very seriously the concerns that have been raised about the personnel in the SIU. We have undertaken and are continuing to undertake with the various police organizations in the province a review of the hiring practices to ensure that they meet the standards that are followed by the police. I will have no further comment on the particular allegations that have been made.

Mr Chiarelli: Minister, you will be judged by your conduct and you will be judged by how you fulfil your responsibility. You are the minister responsible to the people of Ontario and to this Legislature for the SIU. On December 14, you were asked a question by the leader of our party about Mr Fred Winston, another case where a person was hired without any proper checking of credentials, a person who was hired as an investigator of our police across this province.

If you expect the police to have any confidence in the administration of justice, how can you possibly continue to have hiring practices of investigators that show that it's complete incompetence? You are responsible for the SIU and you have to answer.

Let me read briefly what you said to this House in December: "It is not only police officers who have to be concerned about the very serious and very sensitive mandate of the SIU but all of us and all citizens, because this is an extremely important part of our community accountability of our police forces, and it is of interest to everyone in the province that the integrity of the unit be maintained."

Once again, Minister, how can police officers and the public across this province have any respect for the SIU when you can't even hire its investigators in a proper fashion?

Hon Mrs Boyd: The hiring round in which the case that the member has just cited took place and the most recent allegations happened at the same time. We undertook, following that hiring round, a review of the hiring practices because we agree with the member that it is of very serious consequence.

This subsequent allegation has come up, and again I would say to the member that we take it just as seriously as we did before. It was part of the same round, and the review that is being undergone in terms of any future hirings is a very serious undertaking on our part and one that we are doing in conjunction with the partners in the police community.

We agree that the police have every right to expect that those who are investigating their behaviour are beyond reproach. It is of very great concern to us that this sort of problem has occurred, but now that we know it has, we are taking the steps that are there.

This is not a new situation. It is the same round of hiring that went on before and there were obvious flaws which we have already admitted to and are taking steps to ensure do not occur again.

Mr Chiarelli: Minister, you and your ministry have admitted to flaw after flaw with respect to the SIU. It has been a comedy of errors, very sad errors, from the beginning. You have undertaken to review it; you've undertaken audits. Nothing has happened; nothing's come back to this House. There have been no reports on this to the people of Ontario. It is time that you accept your responsibility, that you place some responsibility for this in the hands of the legislators of this province.

I'm asking you now, Minister, will you refer to the standing committee on administration of justice all these problems that have occurred with respect to the SIU? There's only one way that you're going to restore confidence in our police officers and the public across this province and that is to get some sort of open discussion where everybody can get involved in it and where the people can be satisfied that you're actually doing something. So will you in fact refer this matter to the standing committee on administration of justice so that the people of the province can get to the root of this problem?

Hon Mrs Boyd: The audit report and the response of the director of the SIU have in fact been released to all the members of this Legislature. We made an undertaking in our response to the audit report to undertake consultations with the police community, with their official representatives, and with representatives of the broader community who have expressed equally serious concern about the SIU, and that we would be back with recommendations as a result.

We are involved in a very intensive process looking at some of the procedural issues that have been raised, the relationship with the coroner's office, the kind of process that is involved in these investigations and how to sort out the independence of the various forces that are concerned. When that is completed, we will certainly come forward with additional response.

Many of the issues raised in the audit report have already been rectified. In the report of the director to the audit report, there is a very clear accounting of the steps that have already been taken and put into place which have corrected many of the deficiencies that the audit report pointed out.

We have some issue with some of the suggestions that the audit report had and we are discussing those with those most concerned. I would say that in the past few weeks the opposition has been very concerned with referring many issues to the administration of justice committee, and it is very clear that there is a concerted effort to try and ensure that this committee is overloaded in its work. There are many ways to accomplish the same goals, and I will not commit to make a reference to the justice committee of this report until our consultation is complete.

CANCER TREATMENT

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): My question is to the Minister of Health. The minister's own report on cancer care tells of the need for new specialists and new equipment so that cancer patients will get the treatment that they need when they need it.

In fact, that need is urgent. For over two and a half months the minister has been sitting on a report that says that if funding and approvals aren't in place immediately for two new radiation machines at the London Regional Cancer Centre, cancer patients in southwestern Ontario will not be able to get the treatments that they need.

The London cancer centre is already under pressure to meet regional requirements and it's already operating with extended hours. Putting new machines in place takes time, and those machines are needed urgently in less than a year. If the minister doesn't act immediately, it won't be merely waiting lists that we're concerned about but the availability of treatment itself.

I'm asking the Minister of Health if she will commit today to provide the funding and to ensure the speedy approvals and to guarantee that those radiation machines, which are required in the London Regional Cancer Centre, are on stream and operating in less than a year. Will the minister indicate to us that she is willing to act?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): As the member is well aware, just recently, on April 8, I released the government's cancer strategy for the future, Life to Gain: A Cancer Strategy for Ontario, a strategy that provides for a network to coordinate services, for a task force to look into prevention, for improvements to support services to meet all of patients' needs as well as expanded treatment.

We are working with the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation to review their needs, of which of course the London cancer centre would be one, and I'm not in a position today to say yes or no to the member's question. But I can certainly assure her that as we review the future plans of OCTRF and the need that it has identified for additional radiation machines and other expansions of the treatment network, I'm quite confident that we are in a good position to meet the needs of cancer patients in the 1990s.

Mrs Sullivan: The minister refers to her report which was issued in April and made absolutely no reference to a document which she had received from the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation two months prior to the issuing of her report, which identified the very specific urgent needs, including the need for two new machines and a commitment to fund those machines at the London cancer centre. The report is quite specific: Without those machines being put into place, there will not be appropriate treatment available in less than a year. In less than eight months, there will not be appropriate treatment available. The minister's had that report for over two months.

Once again, I ask the minister, will she commit to this House today that people in southwestern Ontario will have access to and availability of radiation treatment when they have cancer that requires that treatment?

Hon Mrs Grier: I know, because of the member's very real and genuine concern about this issue, she will be very pleased when I'm able to tell her that her facts are quite wrong. In fact, as we work with the OCTRF to have it review the plans it submitted to us a couple of months ago, we find that the number of machines and the need are very much in sync. I can assure her that people in southwestern Ontario will have the same quality of care and the same access to treatment as people anywhere else in this province.

Mrs Sullivan: I refer to the report, and the report itself says that planning must begin and funding must begin immediately to put those new machines in place. The minister is incorrect in her interpretation of what's included in that report. The report also says that there are up to 80 radiation oncologists who are in a position of shortfall. The minister is in fact misstating what's included in this report.

I also want to indicate that while her cancer report used fancy words, there was absolutely no commitment to action other than setting up committees, and we need more than that. We need a real commitment from this minister, including a commitment of dollars and a commitment according to a time line.

The minister announced that there would be operating funding for some new machines that were placed in Toronto, Kingston and Ottawa, but made no commitment to increase the operating funding for the Princess Margaret Hospital at which there will be new machines to increase their complement to 16 machines, double the current capacity. It makes little sense for the minister to provide half a loaf when a full loaf is due.

I'm asking the minister if she will commit today to providing appropriate funding to the Princess Margaret Hospital so that it can indeed operate the machines that will now be in place this year.

Hon Mrs Grier: The member quotes from a report that was received two months ago and it says planning should begin immediately. What I'm telling her is, the planning began immediately. The planning now shows the number of machines we need is different from the number in the report she's quoting, precisely because we have committed funding to longer operating and better utilization of the existing machines. I'm sorry she's unhappy that things are getting better for people with cancer in this province, but that happens to be the reality.

With respect to Princess Margaret, I also know that she will be delighted to know that I have in my hand a release from Princess Margaret that commends the government for its cancer network, indicates Princess Margaret's support for what we've done and confirms Princess Margaret's willingness with us to work to meet the needs. The problem is that we have a cancer strategy, we have a plan and we've put funding in place, something that has not happened in this province before.

TENDERING PROCESS

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I have a question to the Minister of Transportation and it follows a story in the Hamilton Spectator.

Minister, on January 10 a deal was signed between three unions and a consortium bidding on Highway 407. Ten days later, these unions held a fund-raiser for the NDP, and I believe you were there.

I have a copy of a memo from Michael Reilly of the Labourers' International Union of North America regarding that fund-raiser. It says:

"It's important that you personally apply yourself to making the evening a success by calling those contractors and influencing them as to the importance of the said evening in the purchasing of a table, a half-table etc: as much as you can squeeze. Don't take no for an answer.

"I am sure I don't have to tell you that the prestige and the name of 183 is important and must be maintained for all future lobby efforts that benefits."

That evening raised $100,000 for your party. As I've said, I believe, Minister, you were at that.

Eleven weeks later, that consortium that signed a deal with the unions was awarded the 407 contract. Minister, is $100,000 the going rate for government contracts now?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): I can assure the critic opposite that there is absolutely no link between a fund-raiser and the awarding of the contract regarding the superhighway 407. Allegations of this type are just preposterous, nothing short of this. I think the member opposite is spooking himself as he dims the light.

Very early in the process, when the process was put forth, cabinet distanced itself from the decision-making process by appointing four deputy ministers to choose a winner. The confidentiality of the process was supervised and certified by Price Waterhouse.

When you announced that the CHIC had won the bid, you said they offered the best value for money. You did not say that it was because they gave the lowest bid. Minister, was CHIC the lowest bidder for the 407 project, and will you disclose the bid to confirm this?

Hon Mr Pouliot: First and foremost, let me set the table so the member opposite will have a clear picture. The request for proposal stated that there shall be no lobbying attempt to any politician or to government officials, so therefore I don't know if it was the lowest bidder. I understand that negotiations are still going on. What took place in the first instance is that a consortium was chosen to negotiate, and within a matter of three to four weeks we are hopeful that all the details will be released.

Mr Turnbull: That answer is absolutely alarming because he said he doesn't know whether they were the lowest bidder. I have a copy of the agreement between CHIC and the three unions. It clearly says that no other workers shall be allowed to work on the 407 project in exchange for a commitment that there will be no strike action taken by the unions. As well, it provides for a wage increase of up to 22% over the five years. I have been informed that the losing bidder did not sign a deal with the unions—listen to this, folks—because they were told not to by your staff, Minister. Minister, why did your staff advise them not to sign a deal?

Hon Mr Pouliot: One can really appreciate the tone here. You don't really have to be too clever to tell the member that he's imputing motive and by doing so indirectly soiling the reputation of four deputy ministers, trying to find a flaw in due process.

I go back to his original question. The question that I'm quoting verbatim and answered will attest to it: "Is $100,000 what it takes to buy or secure a contract?" Put your seat on the line when you impute motive, my friend. This is a contract well over $1 billion. Enough is enough. You can't grab a club and say things when you have no responsibility. Put your seat where your mouth is. Of course, the process is flawless. Negotiations are still going on and in the fullness of time we will release all that is to be known and said. We're aboveboard regarding the most important highway project in North America.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): New question. The member for Etobicoke West.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I guess the question from the member still stands: Why did your staff tell them not to sign the deal? You didn't answer that.

ONTARIO HYDRO AGREEMENT

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): My question is to the Chair of Management Board regarding the deal reached by the Power Workers' Union and Ontario Hydro. Under the terms of that deal, not one single Hydro worker will be laid off in the next two years, whether there is any work for them to do or not.

When I asked the Premier about this, I was told that $67 million from the employee pension fund would be used to cover the cost of this unprecedented job security. Today we learned that 6,000 Hydro managers can block the use of this money because they belong to a different union. The bottom line is that the Power Workers bargained away something they had no right to put on the table.

What will this mean to Ontario Hydro now that you can't get the $67 million from the pension fund? I had suggested earlier that this means 600 to 800 employees, who are no longer considered valued employees because there's not work for them, will now be kept on payroll for two years because your government signed an agreement it didn't have any right to sign. What is the cost to the taxpayers? What does this mean to Ontario Hydro?

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet): The member should know that the question he's asked should have been directed to the Minister of Environment and Energy. Unfortunately, he's not here today.

I don't have any direct contact with the negotiations between Ontario Hydro and its unions. As a matter of fact, neither does the government. The member suggested in his question that the government signed a deal it had no right to sign. The government is not a signatory to the deal between Ontario Hydro and its unions. I'm certainly prepared to ensure that the Minister of Environment and Energy is made aware of his question so that an answer can be provided.

Mr Stockwell: When this announcement was made, this group over here seemed to have lots of ties to this particular agreement. They stood in this House, applauded and broke their arms patting each other on the back. Now that this deal is derailing, they want nothing to do with it. The fact is simply this, I say to you, Mr Management Board Chair: that you committed to a deal that was going to take $67 million out of the pension fund at Ontario Hydro. You agreed during that negotiation that 800 jobs would not be declared surplus, costing the taxpayers $50 million.

We learned on CBC Radio today that the pension fund money cannot be accessed because 5,000 particular employees will not allow you to touch it. The simple fact remains that you were given $67 million you can't access. You have committed to two years of no layoffs and will have 800 surplus employees coming to work with nothing to do.

I ask you once again: What is the cost to the taxpayers? What is the cost to Ontario Hydro? Does this now jeopardize your promise that Ontario Hydro rates will not go up, considering that you cannot access this money?

Hon Mr Charlton: The member across the way continues to play very fast and loose with words. As I've already suggested, the agreement to which he's referring was an agreement between Ontario Hydro and its employees. I'm not familiar with the details of that agreement. I will ensure that the Minister of Environment and Energy is aware of the question he's raised and that he will receive an answer.

Mr Stockwell: This is from a minister who just stood up and said "playing fast and loose" with the information. He's admitted himself he knows nothing about it, so how do you know anyone's playing fast and loose with any of this information? That's the shame of the whole thing. I've stood in this place and told the Premier about this and he started referring to Professor Irwin Corey, for heaven's sake. That's how much he knew about this particular deal.

I say, through you, Mr Speaker, to the minister: As far as your friend the Power Workers' Union is concerned, it is Ontario Hydro's problem, not the union's. John Murphy says, and I quote from CBC Metro Morning: "If the society does take that position, if they do challenge and are successful in stopping Ontario Hydro getting the relief of $67 million, then the company really has to figure out a way of coming up with that $67 million." In effect, he said: "Tough. We signed a deal. We're going to live by it."

You've signed a deal you had no right to sign, so now you're $67 million in the hole and he doesn't care. He's not conceding anything because he's got a signed contract, a contract I warned you about three days after you signed it.

What assurance can you give Hydro customers that they will not be on the hook for this incredible, expensive and illegitimate deal that will now see 800 employees go to work for two years at Ontario Hydro, costing the taxpayers $50 million to $70 million, and there will be nothing for them to do?

Hon Mr Charlton: The member opposite continues to contend that this government signed an agreement it had no right to sign, when it signed no agreement at all. Perhaps that's a reflection of just how little he understands about that of which he speaks here in the House today.

I repeat my comment of earlier: I will ensure that the Minister of Environment and Energy becomes aware of the questions he's raised so he can provide a full response to the member.

CHILD CARE

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Last Thursday I addressed a question to the minister regarding whether his government had put forward a specific proposal—

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): Wrong minister.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Who else is there to ask, Frances?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Order. You can start again.

Mr Beer: Thank you, Mr Speaker, and I will begin again. My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Last week I asked a question, whether the minister and his government had submitted a specific project to the federal government for child care reform. The minister in his answer indicated that he had.

I've subsequently learned that not very long after meeting here in the House, the minister had a discussion in his office with representatives from a variety of child care reform groups and that he indicated at that meeting that no specific separate proposal had been submitted for child care reform to the federal government. Just so the minister is clear, we're not talking here about Job Link, which is a program that encompasses many things, but specific to child care reform.

In addition to chatting with people who attended that meeting, I have doublechecked with the office of the federal minister, and as of this morning no specific proposal had been received from this government on child care reform. We have also talked to people in the Ministry of Community and Social Services who have also said there is no specific proposal.

Minister, I ask you to clarify the public record. My question again is simply this: Have you sent to Ottawa a specific, written, cabinet-approved proposal regarding child care reform?

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): Let me hasten to remind the member—if he wishes to look back at Hansard and the answer I gave him, I will say to him today what I said to him then, which is that I have spoken with Mr Axworthy on at least the three occasions I outlined to him about both the child care needs of this province as they relate to Job Link and the child care needs of the province as they relate to child care reform.

I made it very clear to him, as I did to the people I met with last Thursday, that a specific written proposal on the first part, on the Job Link connection to child care, had already been submitted to Minister Axworthy and that a written proposal on the reform initiatives had not been given to him. I said that to him last time he asked me the question, so there's no difference between what I'm saying today or indeed what I said to the people I met with and what I said to him the last time he asked me this question.

The specific written proposal to reflect the kinds of things that I have discussed directly with Mr Axworthy is being put together now and will be going there very shortly.

Mr Beer: With respect, that was not clear from your answer in the House the other day. The answer you just gave is a far fuller and more specific answer. What I question is why you did not give that answer here in this House but chose to wait until you met with the child care advocates. What you said in this House was that you had asked him on several dates. I assumed that therefore a proposal had gone forward. But we were discussing very specifically proposals around child care reform, because it is you and your government who have been arguing that the federal government is not prepared to fund or to assist in funding child care reform. In Ottawa, Mr Axworthy said they have funds under the strategic initiatives fund to in fact help Ontario.

My supplementary question is twofold. First of all, I find it absolutely incredible that this government, which has been in power since the fall of 1990, would not even have a proposal ready to go as soon as that new government came in last fall, particularly because they had set out the concept of their strategic initiatives fund during the election. You still aren't ready. You haven't put it forward. You've simply said it's going to come.

Would you tell us, will that proposal be to Ottawa before the end of this month and, when it is ready, will you table it in the House?

Hon Mr Silipo: I don't know whether I'm going to be able to table it in the House. That's not necessarily because I would not want to but because in terms of fulfilling the nature of our discussions with the federal government I'm not sure it would be appropriate.

But let me be very clear. I wish I were able to find the Hansard much quicker, but I will find it and I will read it out to the member again on another occasion so he's clear that what I'm saying to him today is in no way inconsistent with what I said to him the last time he asked me this question, that on each of those occasions I met with Mr Axworthy, I discussed the child care needs of the province both as they related to Job Link and also as they related to some of the reform initiatives. I can say to the honourable member that Mr Axworthy was quite interested in both of those pieces.

It's important to point out also that the strategic funds the federal government has outlined were not outlined until the federal budget came out in February. We have been working very hard to get the package together and to provide the written package to Mr Axworthy. But I can assure the member again, as I did the last time he asked me this question, that Mr Axworthy knows exactly what we are asking for, and if he's interested in funding there won't be any excuse for him not to provide the funds.

SPECIAL INVESTIGATIONS UNIT

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): My question is to the Attorney General. It appears that last Friday a gentleman by the name of Wayne Allen was suspended as an SIU investigator. He was hired in spite of the fact that he has been charged by Waterloo police with obstructing justice, forgery and obtaining a secret commission.

My question is a little different from the question from the Liberal Party, which was the party that formed the SIU. My question is quite simply this: When Fred Winston was hired, it was clear that the fault for the hiring of Fred Winston was Mr Morton's. Now it appears that Mr Morton—and this is the interesting twist in this scenario with Mr Allen—says: "It wasn't my fault that we hired this person. It was the government's fault because they wouldn't let me properly investigate."

Who does bear responsibility for hiring investigators at the SIU? Is it Mr Morton and his policy or is it you and your policies?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): In fact it is the same question that was asked before. These two people were hired at the same time under the same process, and the allegations that have been made about the most recent case have been subsequent to that. All the employment checks, all the reference checks were done in that case, unlike the previous case, and all of them showed that this person had a clear record at that time. The allegations have surfaced subsequently.

The answer I gave the previous member is exactly the same answer I would give to the member who is asking now: Civil service employment is under the Public Service Act and is clearly spelled out in the Public Service Act. It is true that some of the hiring practices under the Public Service Act are different from the hiring practices under the Police Services Act, and it is exactly that difference that we committed to look into in December. There have been no hirings since December. In fact, we continue to have those consultations with the police community and with the public service commission on the exact way in which we can ensure that the kinds of difficulties we encountered in that particular hiring round do not continue to plague the agency.

Mr Harnick: The minister says, "Same time, same process." What I have to say is, "Same time, same process, and you hired two lemons."

It's interesting. Mr Morton made a speech this past February, and in response to a question concerning the SIU's hiring practices he stated, "I am the person who takes full and complete responsibility for the hiring of personnel."

What I want to know, Minister, is whether you or Mr Morton will take charge of what's going on at the SIU and accept your responsibility for developing a policy with respect to hiring SIU investigators. Lord knows how many more of them have problems in their background that you don't even know about because you have no policy to deal with properly checking their backgrounds in a place as sensitive as the SIU.

I want to know whether you or Mr Morton will develop a policy for hiring investigators at the SIU so we can hear again that this won't ever happen again.

Hon Mrs Boyd: I have several times this afternoon and will again commit to the member that that is exactly what we are doing, in conjunction with the official representatives of the police community and in conjunction with our colleagues at Management Board who are responsible for the operation of the public service in the province. I would say very clearly to the member that that undertaking was taken by the director to me and in response to the audit report, which required the same thing, and that that is precisely what we are doing.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): My question is for the Minister of Transportation. Minister, we have recently heard of the benefits of the tremendous capital investment your ministry is making in my area, in Durham region. Durham region is benefiting dramatically from the expansion of the 407 that's propounded, and the GO Transit expansion to Oshawa is being eagerly awaited. We know it'll be arriving by the end of this year. Some $53 million is being spent to bring this line to Oshawa and some 1,060 person-years of employment are being created. This will benefit Durham region and my riding—Oshawa, Whitby—dramatically. Is everything on schedule, Mr Minister?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): Indeed a difficult and timely question. Yes, the commitment to expand rush-hour GO Transit service remains, and this will be done in 1994. You're right: The government has committed $53 million to expand GO Transit service to Oshawa. What we want to do, simply put, is to provide a safe, reliable and affordable service and yet honour the commitment to Whitby, where 32 trains will remain in service. This is a win-win-win situation we're looking forward to sharing with the users.

Mr White: Just this morning, I have received in my mail a number of cards—just this morning's; I haven't received this afternoon's mailing as yet. These cards all reflect the concern of people in my riding not only that we have that GO service the minister spoke about but also that we reinstate an adequate level.

We have from my riding, my constituency, concerned about those issues, people who have used the GO train service for 21 and 22 years, who are having that service cut back. They're wondering why we're spending the capital money on that. Will you be willing to listen to their concerns and look at a fuller level of service as it expands?

Hon Mr Pouliot: Departing from form, with high respect, Mr Speaker, may I have a couple of those cards?

Mr White: I'll give you a thousand.

Hon Mr Pouliot: I say to Harry Smith, I say to Shirley Jones, that we will monitor the demand. If the demand is there, we will go from rush-hour to full-time service in the not-too-distant future, depending on availability of funds. I would like to meet the demand.

TOW TRUCK INDUSTRY

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): My question is for the Attorney General in her capacity, as they say, as the chief law officer of the crown. The issue relates to the vultures who hover around parking lots in Metropolitan Toronto and other communities waiting to tow cars away, charge them a big price and inconvenience the people.

Gwen Rideout of Ajax has written a public letter where she has brought to everyone's attention the fact that on a Saturday morning recently, about 1:15, her car was towed from a visitors' parking lot where the posted sign read, "Cars without a permit between the hours of 2 and 5 am will be towed." The daughter was visiting friends and came down at 1:15, but the car had already been towed.

The police refused to press charges of theft. This person feels it was theft, because the car was towed away contrary to the signage that we see.

This is just one example of what we see happening on a pretty widespread basis. Could the Attorney General tell us whether she believes that people who take away and tow cars in these circumstances, the parking lot pirates, should in fact be charged for doing so?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): I'm hardly going to give the member a legal opinion about such a matter, and he's well aware of that. He is quite right that other communities, not just Metropolitan Toronto, have this problem. I must say that it is a cause célèbre in my own community, that we have a very enterprising towing company that is currently the subject of a municipal campaign by someone who is campaigning for mayor on the grounds that the municipality should control these towing contracts.

I would say to the member that there is enough concern about the various jurisdictions that I'm certainly prepared to look at what our ministry would do, but charges of course are laid by police officers. Municipalities do license these towing companies. There is a shared responsibility in these matters. I would be very happy to look into the issue for the member, but it appears to me that this is not a simple matter of making a decision based on the kind of facts that he's brought forward here.

Mr Bradley: Very often the people who are the victims of the vultures who hover over the parking lots are those people who are visitors to Metropolitan Toronto or to other larger centres in the community, because they don't know the practices. They may believe the signs, may believe what people are telling them are the rules.

It is alleged as well that there are municipal law enforcement officers who get up to $30 for spotting cars to tow. They're called bounty hunters. Would the Attorney General tell us whether she believes this is appropriate, for people to be paid as bounty hunters for vehicles that are parked in parking lots, not illegally?

Hon Mrs Boyd: Where the responsibility for parking has been handed over to municipalities, those kinds of decisions need to be made by the municipalities themselves. If indeed the municipalities have made a decision that it is appropriate for them to hire and to enable people to undertake that kind of a situation, that is their decision. What I privately might think of such a thing is hardly at issue. We have indeed agreements with many municipalities about the responsibility for parking, and those municipalities need to take that responsibility where they have assumed it.

ALCOHOL SMUGGLING

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I have a question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Minister, the LCBO revenues to the province have decreased by $90 million over the last two years. Do you suppose this is because Ontarians are drinking less?

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): That's a very straightforward question. I believe that there are a number of reasons why revenues have dropped in Ontario. Part of it is that people are drinking less.

Mr Eves: Well, surveys done in the United States of America and here in Canada indicate that Canadians and Americans drink per capita almost exactly the same amounts of alcoholic beverage. So the minister will know that in fact Ontarians are not drinking less and that isn't the problem in your declining revenues.

Even Mr Brandt, the conservative man that he is, estimates that the province loses about $800 million a year in revenue to illicit underground liquor sales in the province of Ontario. That translates into at least a half a billion dollars a year in shortfall in revenue to the Treasurer and the province of Ontario.

In the past 10 years the minister will know that seven distilleries have closed in the province. She will also know that there are approximately 300 to 400 illegal wineries operating in the province and she will also know that tobacco smuggling networks are now trafficking in liquor sales. What are you and your government doing about this increasing problem?

Hon Ms Churley: First of all, I will say that studies show that people are drinking less spirits and more beer and wine, and that is a fact. But the member did ask about the smuggling problem.

Taxation obviously usually comes under the Finance minister, but I certainly hope that the member is not suggesting that this government reduce taxes on alcohol. We have already lost $500 million from this treasury that could be going to programs that we sorely need in this province, so I hope he's not asking us to do that.

I think he's behind here. The province has been dealing with this problem for a couple of years now. We have put a number of steps in place and will continue to do so. We've set up the illegal alcohol task force. It's important that all government agencies and all of the police community work together on this. It is a serious problem, as the member suggested, and we are doing that.

We established investigative service units to combat illegal activities in June 1993. We've granted officer status to provincial offence officers, who actually have more inspection responsibilities and abilities. As you know, Mr Speaker, the investigative services unit has increased its staff. There is a lot of activity out there.

It's very important that people be educated about this issue as well, because there are health issues related to this. Some of the alcohol that's smuggled contains very dangerous products. I urge all of us in this House to let people know that there are serious health risks involved and that this government is involved with the federal government and will continue to do everything it can to combat smuggling, but we will not be reducing taxes.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr David Winninger (London South): My question is directed to the Minister of Community and Social Services on the issue of student welfare. Many constituents in my riding, including teachers dealing with high-risk students, have expressed concern to me about how student welfare is being abused.

I recognize that some students suffer serious physical, mental, emotional and sexual abuse in their homes and that these people need protection at all reasonable cost so they may be educated or trained in a secure environment as they rebuild their lives and take their place in society. However, there is a perception that other students are leaving home merely to collect student welfare because they don't like the rules, the curfews or other parental controls.

Minister, what steps are you taking to curb abuse of the welfare system by those under 18 years of age so that funding will be protected for those who have a genuine need?

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): I appreciate the question and I do acknowledge that in fact a similar question was asked by the member for St Catharines some time ago. I appreciate this point being raised again because I think that it's an important issue for us to discuss.

Like the member, I would agree that we need to be careful that we keep in mind that the basis for this provision existing in the legislation is to allow for support to be given to those young people who are indeed victims of abuse or in other ways fit the definition of "special circumstances" that is outlined in the legislation. Where there is some outright abuse, part of the work that we are going to be doing through the case file reviews that I announced earlier will help us to check that situation.

Beyond that, as I've indicated earlier in this House, I believe that what we need to do in this area is to define more clearly the rules that apply, define that term "special circumstances" in a more detailed fashion, and then to ensure that it is applied in a more consistent fashion throughout the province. We are doing some work now to outline that and to put that out into the system in a useful way.

Mr Winninger: I would ask then what communication there has been with educators, students and welfare case administrators to ensure that student welfare benefits are used appropriately.

Hon Mr Silipo: Again, I can tell the member that certainly informally the discussions are continuing, but I know there are some specific initiatives that are being taken also with respect to pulling people together in a more organized way.

There is on May 5 in Kingston a session which I think is the first of a number of sessions that are planned that pull together the kind of people the member referred to—educators, youths themselves, people from the system and others—to help us look at which specific changes need to be made.

I think that out of those discussions we will have some clarity that we can bring to this issue and then be in a better situation to sort out the perception from the reality of what the problem is here and to continue all of that in the spirit of continuing to provide the support to those young people who need it.

INTERPROVINCIAL TRADE

Mr Monte Kwinter (Wilson Heights): I have a question for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. Earlier this month you attended a conference of ministers dealing with the issue of interprovincial trade barriers. In a report of the meeting you're quoted as saying:

"Lankin backed off a proposal under which her government would retaliate against other provinces that don't open their markets to the same degree as Ontario. Instead, Ontario agreed that all provinces would treat all companies as well as they treat their own, with some exceptions."

Minister, that sounds very fair and equitable, but it really is a recipe for inequity. If you'll look at the free trade agreement, I want to give you an example of a situation under the Glass-Steagall act in the financial sector: "Canadian financial institutions, securities dealers, banks wanting to do business in the United States are prohibited because of the Glass-Steagall act." Notwithstanding that, the United States says in Canada they're allowed to do it: "We want to be able to do it in Canada but you can't do it here, but we will give you an undertaking that if we ever change our rules, you'll be able to do it."

That is the kind of thing that could happen under your proposal. Because Ontario is the main economic force in Canada, it is the desirable place for a lot of the other provinces to want to do business. It is very easy for them to say, "This is the way we treat our particular companies in our provinces, but we want to be able to treat your particular companies in the same way as you treat them." 1500

That to me indicates what you're going to have is an extension of the same kind of inequities that we have now where we are prohibited from dealing in other provinces, where the other provinces would be able to deal in Ontario. Could you respond to that?

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): I thank the member for the question. I actually think we hold a very similar opinion on this issue.

I would take issue with how the press reported a change in position, and I'll set out for the member that there are two approaches. One is reciprocal non-discrimination and the other is national treatment that he's identifying in his question.

Reciprocal non-discrimination, which is the position Ontario has been putting forward in these negotiations as being the basis of how we would proceed with bringing down barriers, says, like we did with Quebec, "Unless you bring down your barriers with respect to construction contractors and construction workers not being able to work in Quebec, then you won't have that access in Ontario any more."

For those provinces that don't bring down barriers, then they would have to deal with the same situation in Ontario, because we feared that this could be a game of negotiations in which Ontario, which is a very open economy to begin with, gains nothing in terms of access to other markets and others continue to have access to Ontario, and that the whole goal of those who want to see interprovincial trade barriers coming down could be thwarted by not having a tough reciprocal approach in this.

The other approach of national treatment has some of the pitfalls that you talked about. There are yet, on the other hand, a number of provinces that feel that this is consistent with GATT and free trade agreements that we've signed internationally.

The position I've taken in negotiations is to speak very strongly for the need to absolutely minimize any general exceptions to this trade deal, and in fact got agreement from the federal government and from some others to take general exceptions out of the overall agreement—

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Holy smokes, Mr Speaker, let's go. Time.

Hon Ms Lankin: —and to move into some of the sectoral agreements, to have very specific, transparent and known exceptions that we would negotiate on.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): Is this a tape recording?

Hon Ms Lankin: I will wrap up. My commitment to the province here and the message I delivered at the table was that the success of those sectoral agreements will in fact determine the answer to whether or not Ontario agrees to an agreement that doesn't have reciprocal non-discrimination and moves to a national treatment agreement.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): I would urge the members to keep their questions short and sweet and the answers short and sweet.

Mr Kwinter: Minister, in all the reports that came out of your meetings, there was one particular issue that I didn't hear anything about, and I think it's absolutely critical to any kind of interprovincial trade barrier resolution. That is the dispute settlement mechanism. In a country where there are no borders, there are no custom forms going from one province to another, how are you going to make sure, without casting any aspersions on our neighbours, that in fact these things are going to be carried out? Who is going to be able to police it and who's going to be able to adjudicate any particular abuses if they're identified?

Hon Ms Lankin: Again, there are a number of approaches that could be taken on dispute resolution. Ontario has taken the position that it should be effective, ie, it has got to work, it has got to get resolved for people as to questions, concerns or complaints that they have; that it should be inexpensive—we don't want to see one that would have a cost to private parties or governments that would be difficult to bear; that it shouldn't create a huge bureaucracy to administer this agreement; that it should not involve recourse to the courts and legalities and long-drawn-out processes. We want to see one that has at its base effective political mechanisms for governments to deal with the issues, government to government, and resolve them within the context of an agreement.

There are a number of proposals that are being developed which come at the possibility of this from slightly different ways. One of the issues is the access of private parties to the dispute resolution mechanism, and at what stages in the dispute resolution mechanism. Those are things that are all currently under discussion and under negotiation, and I'd be pleased to keep the member informed on an ongoing basis.

I want him to know that there are negotiations, meetings going on this week on this issue in Vancouver. We're actually very hopeful that we'll be arriving at a procurement agreement, which will be the biggest piece of all of this.

Lastly, I want to say that the member might read reports from the minister from Alberta, who indicates that there are seven provinces lined up on one side and three on the other. I hope he has been misquoted, because it certainly wasn't the indication of the provinces at the meeting I was at in Halifax. I think in fact there's a growing consensus, and the leadership being shown by the federal government in this has been helpful as well.

WORKPLACE HEALTH AND SAFETY AGENCY

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): My question is to the Minister of Labour. Under section 10 of the Occupational Health and Safety Act, the Lieutenant Governor in Council is charged with appointing all members of the board of directors of the Workplace Health and Safety Agency, including the executive director of the agency.

The executive director is charged with managing "the operations of the agency in accordance with the directions of the board of directors." This individual is to be the CEO of this organization, responsible directly to the board and appointed by the government. The act is very clear about this.

Could you tell us today then why the agency is proceeding to hire, with your blessing and your knowledge, a new executive director through regular civil service competition and make that person accountable directly to the two vice-chairs at the agency rather than the board of directors? Is this not a direct violation of the act by your government?

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): I'd like to get back to the member across the way with that specific question.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The time for oral questions has expired.

WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I rise on a point of order with reference to section 97 of the standing orders, particularly paragraph (d). This section of the standing orders is with respect to written questions which are placed on the order paper.

I have now 22 questions on the order paper. Five of them are substantially past the period of time when the response is required from the minister under the orders. Section (d) of the standing orders indicates that:

"The minister shall answer such written questions within 14 calendar days unless he or she indicates that more time is required because the answer will be costly or time-consuming or that he or she declines to answer, in which case a notation shall be made on the Orders and Notices paper following the question..."

There has been no such a notation with respect to the questions which are overdue. There has been no indication that a minister declines to answer. There has been no indication that more time is required on any of these questions.

The questions refer to the operation of the OHIP fraud line, feasibility studies and cost analyses on the Ontario health card photo identification feature, environmental sensitivities, the chiropractic review and the full accounting of the $647 million which has been promised for long-term care reform.

These are important questions. I have been asked by many organizations and individuals to seek the responses to these questions. We know that the purpose of a written question is that the issue is perhaps not of urgency, which is covered—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Thank you. Minister, perhaps you'd like to give some explanation to the question that is requested of you. Would you have any explanation at all?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): No.

The Deputy Speaker: You have no comments to make? There's nothing the Speaker can do, except to ask the minister. The minister has no comments.

Mrs Sullivan: Mr Speaker, the standing orders are very specific. They say, "The minister shall answer such written questions within 14 calendar days," and there are precise—

The Deputy Speaker: Let me repeat to you, for your benefit, what I have said is that the minister heard you. She didn't want to make any comments whatsoever and the Speaker is not in the position also to answer the question for the minister, so I believe that the Chair has treated you fairly.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I move that notwithstanding standing order 96(h), the requirement for notice be waived with respect to ballot item number 50.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

PETITIONS

GUN CONTROL

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Oriole): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas it is imperative that we make our streets safe for law-abiding citizens;

"Whereas any person in Ontario can freely purchase ammunition even though they do not hold a valid permit to own a firearm;

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen to an alarming rate;

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Tim Murphy's private member's Bill 149 to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario Outdoors Card."

I support this petition and will be affixing my name.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario"—

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): Not true. Not true.

Mr Arnott: —yes, it is true—"to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards while not providing boards with the required funding to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating costs of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

It's signed by a number of my constituents and I endorse it as well.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I rise to present a petition on behalf of the hundreds of residents who live in my riding in the community known as Wilmot Creek.

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord;

"We, the undersigned, therefore petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows," and I hope the Tories are listening, particularly the member from Mississauga:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible with third reading of Bill 21."

I've signed that petition and I know the member for Northumberland is in agreement with that.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, but since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined by the Ontario Human Rights Code and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all such references to sexual orientation should be removed from the code.

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to refrain from passing Bill 45."

I have signed the petition.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): Like my colleague from Durham East, I too have a petition, only this one is from the residents of Twin Elms in Strathroy in the county of Middlesex. They petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in leased-lot communities; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible with third reading of Bill 21."

I have signed my name to this petition.

GUN CONTROL

Mr Robert V. Callahan (Brampton South): I have a petition signed by a number of the citizens of the province of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas it is imperative that we make our streets safe for law-abiding citizens;

"Whereas any person in Ontario can freely purchase ammunition, even though they do not hold a valid permit to own a firearm;

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen at an alarming rate; and

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Tim Murphy's private member's bill, Bill 149, to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario Outdoors Card."

It's signed by a number of residents.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

AMMUNITION CONTROL ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994

SUR LA RÉGLEMENTATION DES MUNITIONS

On motion by Mr Chiarelli, the following bill was given first reading:

Bill 151, An Act to control the Purchase and Sale of Ammunition / Projet de loi 151, Loi visant à réglementer l'achat et la vente de munitions.

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): The bill restricts the sale of ammunition to persons holding a valid Ontario Outdoors Card with the appropriate hunting licence or a valid firearms acquisition certificate.

EMPLOYER HEALTH TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPÔT PRÉLEVÉ SUR LES EMPLOYEURS RELATIF AUX SERVICES DE SANTÉ

Mr Sutherland, on behalf of Mr Laughren, moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 110, An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act / Projet de loi 110, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'impôt prélevé sur les employeurs relatif aux services de santé et la Loi sur les accidents du travail.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): The government is proceeding with its amendments to the Employer Health Tax Act to ensure that self-employed individuals pay provincial health tax.

Since 1990, employers in Ontario have been helping to fund, through an employer health tax, our health care system. The government is moving now to equalize this situation by requiring people who are self-employed to pay their fair share of health tax as well.

This bill would ensure that self-employed individuals with income of more than $40,000 a year, some of which must be earned in Ontario, pay the employer health tax. Individuals in this category will be taxed on their net self-employment income according to a similar rate system that applies to Ontario employers.

After consulting with stakeholders, the government has agreed to provide the self-employed with a 22% tax deduction on their health tax otherwise payable. This deduction will compensate self-employed individuals for the fact that they were unable to claim health tax as an income tax deduction on their self-employment income.

The government recognizes that Ontarians who earn self-employment income from businesses located in jurisdictions other than Ontario have legitimate concerns about the application of this tax to their self-employment income earned outside of the province. After consulting with these stakeholders, the government has agreed to apply the tax only to the proportion of an individual's self-employment income allocated to Ontario for personal income tax purposes. This will prevent double taxation should other provinces implement a similar tax.

The employer health tax for self-employed individuals will apply to fiscal periods ending after December 1, 1992. There will be prorated relief for 1993 fiscal years which straddle the date of the 1992 budget announcement. The revenues this tax will generate will help the government to continue to provide quality health care for all Ontarians.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Questions or comments? Are there any other members who wish to participate in this debate?

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Orillia): I rise to participate in today's debate as the Revenue critic for the official opposition. I have some very strong feelings about Bill 110 and I'd like to put my remarks today not only in the context of Bill 110, which is An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act, as it has been stated, but also in the general context of tax policy.

These debates on taxes and tax policy are a very good opportunity for people who are watching the debate to have a better understanding of how taxes—tax policy, fiscal policy—have impacts on our economy and perhaps what some of the alternatives are.

I'd like to start this debate by reminding the parliamentary assistant, you, Mr Speaker, and members in this House as well as people who are watching that once again we have an example of a piece of legislation which is a result of last year's 1993 budget tabled by Floyd Laughren almost exactly one year ago. The legislation itself to implement that budget announcement was not tabled until October 26, 1993, and here we are today, April 18, 1994, debating second reading of legislation.

For those who understand the legislative process, they will understand my frustration. We have a piece of legislation implementing a tax which the government has been collecting now since last year. We know that this was part of the 1993 budget. The 1994 budget is yet to come and we have just heard from the parliamentary assistant today that they will be making some changes to Bill 110 and bringing forth amendments.

What I found interesting and frustrating was that just last week we debated the retail sales tax bill, Bill 138, and today, April 18, a week after that debate, where we were in exactly the same situation of debating a piece of legislation almost a year after it had been announced, and certainly almost a year after it had been implemented, we see an announcement from the Treasurer where he is announcing a lowering of the produce-your-own-beer-and-wine tax on last year's tax. We know that the Treasurer will be bringing forth his new budget within a matter of weeks, some are predicting days; most are expecting the new provincial budget before the end of April.

One can only wonder whether it was the debate in the House just last week that convinced the Treasurer to make this change in the tax structure for those who produce their own beer and wine. I would hope that the debates in this Legislature do influence government policy. As the representative for the riding of Oriole since 1985, I have said on numerous occasions that I believe that an individual elected to this Legislature can influence public policy no matter which side of the House they sit on.

Having had the opportunity to serve on the government benches between 1985 and 1990, I will tell you that you can certainly influence in a more direct way the development of public policy as a member of the government and as a member of the executive council, the cabinet, but as I believe is shown by the announcement today by the Treasurer in advance of his new budget, I believe an individual on the opposition benches can influence public policy in a positive way, notwithstanding the fact that it is often in the form of criticism as well as offering alternatives and advice to the government.

I find it absolutely amazing that within weeks of the new budget, the Treasurer would announce that he is going to be amending a piece of legislation in this House, implementing last year's budget, that has not yet completed second reading, and this is just weeks before the new budget. Talk about creating chaos. Talk about creating frustration. Talk about sending out the wrong signal of stability and predictability. As much as we welcome the reduction in taxes to the produce-your-own-beer-and-wine industry—we do welcome those; it is long overdue.

The announcement today by Mr Laughren, the provincial Treasurer, says that these debates are long overdue, especially if we are going to be able to influence the government not only in the fiscal and economic policies that they are bringing forth to the province of Ontario, but also in delivering the message to them that the number one priority for my constituents in the riding of Oriole and the number one priority of concerned citizens across Ontario is a strong economy and a hope for a job in the future.

There are people who have lost their jobs who always believed that they had secure jobs. There are people today in Ontario who are worried they are going to lose their job tomorrow. Therefore, in order to give those individuals confidence that they will have an opportunity to live and to work and, yes, to play in the province of Ontario, and to give individuals confidence that there will be opportunities for their children in this province, the tax policy of the government is extremely important because tax policy can dampen the economic activity in the province of Ontario.

Sometimes I do feel like a broken record because over and over again we offer the government good advice, we offer them good suggestions and they simply don't listen to us. As we begin the debate on Bill 110, which is an amendment to the Employer Health Tax Act and some amendments to the Workers' Compensation Act, my theme will be similar.

As I said, once again we see a piece of legislation which is a year late, tabled in October to implement a budget that was presented last spring of 1993, and here we are having second reading of a piece of legislation that could affect 38,000 self-employed people, people who consider themselves small businesses, and we know that it is the small business, the singular, often self-employed, the entrepreneur, those who are building small businesses in this province, who make up 85% of the economic activity in the province of Ontario, not just those 38,000 but the hundreds of thousands of individuals who are actively employed in the small business sector.

Certainly, the 38,000 of those who would be classified as self-employed are the ones who have a very significant interest in Bill 110 and are quite frustrated that at a time when the economy is just beginning to recover—we know that recovery is slow and we know that it unfortunately is not producing as many jobs in the private sector as we would like—they see Bill 110, which yet again is anything but an economic stimulus. It is a further economic depressant, particularly for those individuals who, for the first time, are having to face a new tax. I have said this before and I will say it again: Tax reform should not mean tax increases.

We heard Bob Rae proudly stand in this House and refer to his new tax commission, a mandate for looking at fair taxes in the province of Ontario. What people thought that was going to mean was the moving around of taxes, tax reform, making sure that people paid their fair share. But more and more I've heard people refer to the NDP tax commission not as the Fair Tax Commission but as the More Tax Commission. If there is one thing that the province of Ontario cannot tolerate at this time, as we just begin to come out of this recession, it is new taxes.

I believe that everyone should pay their fair share of taxes, and if in fact this were a tax reform bill that extended the opportunity to pay a fair share, one could legitimately argue that the overall rate could be and should be reduced for everyone. I think there would be tremendous support for the notion that says, "If you are going to expand the base on the tax to include those who rightly should pay their fair share, then this should not be yet another revenue grab, this should not be seen as the government attempting to take more, and certainly at this important time in Ontario, as we want to see economic recovery and jobs created in the private sector, this should not be a time when government takes additional dollars out of the economy in the form of new taxes."

Bill 110 will take additional dollars out of the economy in the form of new taxes on the 38,000 self-employed individuals who will have to pay the EHT. What I'd like to say again, since we are now discussing the employer health tax, is the history of where this tax came from. It's important to put on the record that at the very same time that the employer health tax was brought into being in the province, Ontario health insurance plan premiums were eliminated. So in fact you did have real reform. You had the elimination of what some saw as a very unfair tax called premiums for health insurance benefits, called OHIP. Those premiums were a tax, and that tax was unfairly being paid.

Why was that tax unfair? Because what we saw in the province of Ontario was that the OHIP premium was being paid by some employers; some employers were paying all of it; some employers were paying part of it; some employers were paying none of it. We saw as well about 11% of the population of Ontario were paying their own premiums, and who were those people who were paying the premiums? Primarily they fell into the category of those who could least afford the premiums: the working poor.

The other thing that we saw was a huge bureaucracy collecting premiums. Yet we know that because of the values of compassion within the province of Ontario, if there was someone who could have and should have paid their premium but didn't, and found himself in a medical emergency, he did receive care. No one was turned away. As it should be, we responded to the needs of individuals in the province of Ontario by looking after those who were in a needy state of medical emergency.

Then the policy of the government said—and this was not just the policy of the Liberal government; this was also the policy of the Conservative government before us, and I believe that it was a just policy: "If you pay three months in back premiums, we will cover you for all of your expenses." So it was very unfair, in my view, to continue OHIP premiums. We know that there was only a small portion of the total costs of health care in Ontario paid for by OHIP premiums. The intention of the employer health tax was never to pay the full shot of the health care costs in the province of Ontario.

One of the benefits of our single-payer plan in Ontario, that's our Ontario health insurance plan, is that health costs are funded from numerous sources. In the past it was premiums; now it is the employer health tax which pays today just a portion—I think if you would look at the figures you would see that the employer health tax today is paying for about 16%, 17%, maybe 18% of the cost of health care in the province of Ontario.

Where does the rest of the money come from? That's a very good question as we debate the employer health tax. We know that some of the money, some of the resources we spend on health care through the Ministry of Health, comes from personal income tax, a portion of it comes from sales tax and a portion of it comes from corporate taxes as well. Some of it undoubtedly will come from the varying fees and licences.

How can I say exactly how much comes from each one? You can't, and that's because the way the province of Ontario collects its resources and then allocates its funds is one where all the money goes into one big pot and that big pot is called the consolidated revenue fund. Then the province, through the treasury, says to each ministry, "For the services, this is how much you will receive."

We know the Ministry of Health is receiving almost one third of all of the dollars collected by the provincial treasury. We know that, of the approximately $17 billion that's spent by the Ministry of Health on behalf of the taxpayers of the province of Ontario, the employer health tax generates less than 20% of the total cost of health services.

Why was it called the employer health tax and why have we kept that name? Well, when we look at how we fund health services and when we consider not only what's happening in Ontario but what's happening in other jurisdictions, we know, and we believed at the time we were in government, that it was extremely important for employers to have an interest in the health of their employees. We know it is extremely important for business to feel that they are participating in helping to keep the costs of health care services down and under control. We also know, particularly from our neighbours to the south, that often business is looked to to share the cost of providing health services for their employees.

An example in the United States today, where the debate on how they're going to be providing health care to their population rages—and, unfortunately, I believe it's become a very partisan debate rather than looking at the examples of what the options are for them. I don't wish to offer the Americans any advice during this debate but rather to explain to Ontarians who are watching what is happening. I think sometimes we tend to export our rhetoric to the United States, particularly our rhetoric about some of the concerns that we have within our system, and they feed it back to us and then we buy it.

In fact, the debates that are going on in the United States are because the Americans, an overwhelming percentage—a recent Harris poll that I heard the results of suggests that almost 90% of the population in the United States are dissatisfied—I'm sorry, I've got the number wrong. It was almost 70%—67% of the people in the United States were dissatisfied with their own plan for the delivery of health services and almost 90% of Canadians were quite satisfied with the method that we use for the delivery of services.

It's important that that be a part of this debate because one of the things we know is that the cost of health care services to employers in the United States is a very significant part of the Clinton plan. But even before the Clinton plan, payment by employers for their employees' health coverage was the way that the United States functioned.

The result of that is that in steel, for example, what we've heard from Lee Iacocca and others in the steel industry is that health care costs employers more than steel and almost $700 per employee in the United States, whereas in Canada—and this is one of our competitive advantages—the cost to employers on the same basis would be approximately $50 or $60 per car for employees. So it's $700 a car, more than the cost of steel, in the United States; $50 to $60 per car in Canada.

That is an enormous competitive advantage, but what it signifies in the North American context and around the world is that business does have an obligation to help keep their workforce well and healthy. Also, because of their interest in sustaining and maintaining our competitive advantage in Canada, it is very important for us to be very aware of the implications of a payroll tax such as the employer health tax.

I can tell you that when the employer health tax was brought in, the amount of revenue that it was expected to generate was in fact considerably less than what it is generating today. The estimates that we had from the treasury on how much revenue would be generated from the employer health tax were less than what is actually being generated.

I can say with honesty that it was never our intention to see the employer health tax take as much in the way of revenue out of the employers, if you will, from their payrolls, as has been the reality. It is one place where rather than just extending the tax to generate even further revenue, if I were giving the government a place, and I am giving the government a place, where it could look to lower the tax, the employer health tax, in my view, would be a very good place to look. The reason is because payroll taxes, which the employer health tax is, can be seen by many to inhibit job creation. Particularly at a time in the economy today when what you want to do is spur job creation in the private sector, relief on the payroll tax would be a very good place to start.

So I would say to the government that Bill 110 could be amended, and should be amended, to reduce the rate so that you would see this as a benefit to the payroll taxes of employers, who could then create more jobs in the private sector.

I'm sure that one of my colleagues is going to say, "Well, why didn't you do that when you brought the tax in?" That's a fair question, and I'm going to answer that question here and now today. When this tax was brought in, Ontario's economy was booming. It was so buoyant that many thought it would continue for ever, and I was one who hoped and prayed that it would have, because Ontario led the western world in economic activity at the time that we eliminated premiums for OHIP and brought in the employer health tax. In those times, as I said, our estimates of the revenue that would be generated from the employer health tax were less than the amount of revenue that it is actually bringing in.

So you have an opportunity as government, since the taxes that it is generating are higher than what was anticipated or desired at that time and the economy has changed—rather than being the most buoyant economy in the Americas, in North America, and in fact in the western world, what we have is an economy that is struggling to come out of this terrible recession that has ensued since those buoyant and happy days of the late 1980s. One of the ways that you could respond to that as you extend, through tax reform, the employer health tax to all of those, who would be more than willing to pay their fair share as long as they didn't feel they were paying more than their fair share—then I think you would have much greater support for Bill 110 or a bill of its type.

There are a number of things that I'd like to say, but I don't want the debate to go on for too long. I do believe that the extension of the employer health tax in the way the government is doing it really will hamper the kind of entrepreneurial spirit of the individual self-employed that is needed at this particular time in order to ensure a stronger recovery in the province of Ontario.

I also believe that one of the things government must do is eliminate red tape, eliminate the kind of bureaucratic, "one more form to fill out" kind of attitude of government. What I see in the way that the EHT is being implemented is in fact more bureaucratic red tape, more forms, more paper and more of that burden on the small business person, the self-employed, who can least afford, in many cases, the kinds of expertise to fill out all of these forms on their behalf.

The proposed structure—and I am looking for some clarity in the form of amendments from the parliamentary assistant, because I think the government is responding to one of the big arguments that I was going to make about the employer health tax with amendments. So I'll be watching for those amendments very carefully, because I think that as it is proposed in Bill 110, unamended, this will unfairly penalize people who invest large amounts of capital in their businesses in Ontario, and also those who have income from sources outside Ontario.

I think I heard the parliamentary assistant say that they would be making amendments that would address that concern. The only thing I would say to him is that the problem with placing the amendments today, on April 18, 1994, is that, again, you've been collecting this since last year and the people who are paying and must pay have waited too long. That was the sort of change that in my view should have come when the legislation was tabled in October. Certainly the government had sufficient time to see how this act was being implemented and how the tax was being collected from the time it announced it in the budget in April until it tabled the legislation in October.

Here we are offering amendments to this piece of legislation almost a full year after it's been in place. I would ask the parliamentary assistant, have you been collecting this tax? What are you going to do? Will your amendments be retroactive so that you can refund to those people if you have collected the tax inappropriately? Will the amendments be retroactive to the date when the tax started to be collected? Now, if I'm mistaken—and it could be that they have not been collecting the tax—then in fact I'd ask that they clarify that so that if there is any confusion out there, people will know.

The other reason I ask for it to be clarified is my assumption that some of this may be done through the income tax system. If it's being done through the income tax system, the final filing date for income tax is April 30 and therefore the timing of this could not be worse for individuals who will be affected by the EHT. So I'd ask for some clarification on what the implication here is.

Some clarification, I think, would be helpful to those individuals who are concerned about the impact, particularly for those who have made large capital investments, as well as those who have income from other sources outside Ontario but where the payroll and the earnings actually are within Ontario. I'd ask for those to be clarified by the parliamentary assistant before the end of the debate today. Perhaps he could when I wrap up my remarks, which will be in just a very few minutes.

One of the things that I'm always asked is, "What would you do differently?"

Mr W. Donald Cousens (Markham): I've never asked you. I've never asked the member for Oriole, "What would you do differently?" We don't want you to get in.

Mrs Caplan: I hear Mr Cousens asking the question yet again. He does it all the time in his two-minute responses, so I'm going to pre-empt him today. I see he is in tears, he is so upset. Sometimes around this place it's good to have a little laugh. We can't take ourselves too seriously. But I do take Mr Cousens very seriously when he says, "What would you do differently, Elinor?"

I'd like to place on the record the recommendations of the Liberal minority report for the standing committee on finance and economic affairs of the province. These are our recommendations for this coming budget, which is coming down within the next few weeks. I hope the Treasurer has listened. He's had these recommendations for some time now, but I would like to place them on the record.

There are seven recommendations and I will just take a few minutes to put them on the record. What you will notice is that many of these recommendations were very similar to the Liberal minority report on the budget last year. The Finance minister didn't listen to us last year, but I'm hoping he will listen to us this year.

The first is probably the most significant and important recommendation. It's the reason I will be opposing all of the budget bills from last year's budget, because I believe it was wrong fiscal policy last year to raise taxes in the province; I believe it was wrong economic policy to raise taxes. I think it hurt the economy. We are saying to the government, "The 1994-95 budget must contain no new or increased taxes," and that includes fees.

Second, "The 1993-94 budget"—that's the one that's coming now—"must present Ontarians with an action plan for getting the economy moving again." That may well include some tax decreases, and I hope we see it will, such as was evidenced today by the tax decrease on the produce-your-own beer and wine.

Third, and this is extremely important if the business community as well as consumers and citizens in Ontario are going to have confidence, "The government should adopt the accounting standards of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants for both the public accounts and the budget statements." If he did that, maybe the Provincial Auditor would then attest to those budgets and it would instil greater confidence in the budget-making capability and the books of the province. That is extremely important, if we are going to have investors confident enough to invest in Ontario.

Fourth, "In order to instil a sense of confidence among consumers and investors, the government must keep to its deficit reduction plan set out in the 1993 budget without resorting to questionable bookkeeping." According to Mr Laughren, they're already off by $2 billion; they're not going to make the $6.8 billion. It's my hope that we will see the deficit plan come in at $8 billion or less. I would have preferred to see the achievable $6.8 billion that was in the expenditure reduction plan, but I fear we will not.

Fifth, "The government must initiate a serious review of public expenditures. The government must examine how to 'reinvent' itself and redefine how it delivers its services."

I'm going to put this statement on the record, because it is something I believe in fundamentally as a Liberal. I believe very strongly that if the government would embrace this, we could get on with delivering of services that the people of this province need and want in a way which is certainly both more effective, more efficient and more affordable, and that is:

"Government should provide only those services that government should provide and that only government delivers best. The government should decide which tasks can be best performed by other levels of government or the private sector and which tasks should be eliminated entirely."

Sixth, "The government must initiate measures to get the"—

Mr Cousens: How many points do you have?

Mrs Caplan: I have seven points. "The government must initiate measures to get the Workers' Compensation Board costs under control and ensure that employers do not face any more assessment increases." It's extremely important.

Seventh, "The government must restore the balance of current provincial labour law to ensure that both sides have equal rights in the bargaining and organizing process."

That is the standing committee on finance and economic affairs Liberal minority report. It's their recommendations to the government of an alternative fiscal and economic plan that we believe, if the government would follow it, would bring prosperity to Ontario.

The other thing I'd like to say is that I'm very proud of the work that's been done by the Lyn McLeod job task force. As we are discussing tax policy and fiscal policy, I would commend to anyone who hasn't seen it the Getting Ontario Working Again document that has been put out by our leader and our caucus. I know many people have seen it. The report is available. It is a comprehensive plan to get Ontario working again, and it has a five-part plan for success.

The one that is probably the most significant when you're discussing tax policy is that if the government commits itself to getting Ontario working again, we would do that by setting the kinds of goals that would be a stretch, that would require getting everyone to work together to reduce unemployment from the levels that Bob Rae has said are likely during his term of office and beyond.

We're saying that's not good enough, that if you had a government with the kind of foresight and vision Lyn McLeod and her team are proposing, tax policy and economic policy and social policy could go hand in hand to renew the vitality of the Ontario economy.

Let me tell you what this paper has to say about taxes. That's only one part of the plan, so it's important that we look at it comprehensively, but because we don't have a lot of time, I'd like to place on the record what they say about taxes.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I understand she's reading from the book, because she keeps making reference to it. I'd be really interested to get a copy of that book and I want to know if that's available for circulation to all the members. Can we get one?

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): That's not a point of order. The honourable member for Oriole, please resume your participation in the debate.

Mrs Caplan: We would gladly make a copy available to any member of the public or any member of the Legislature who would be interested in reading the paper.

Under the part of the recommendations entitled "Letting the Economy Breathe," the Liberal task force found that the job-creating sector of our economy, that is, the private sector, feels stifled "as it looks to grow and expand. If we can find ways to let businesses 'breathe,' we are convinced that they can and will grow and create jobs" in the private sector of the province.

"(a) Taxes: There is no doubt that economic growth in Ontario is being hampered by taxes. We are recommending that we set a goal of actual tax reduction—specifically a 5% reduction over a five-year period.

"The [jobs] task force fully appreciates the challenge of this, considering the province's substantial deficit and continuing spending pressure.

"However, we have concluded that the necessary economic growth to generate the incremental jobs may not be possible without some tangible evidence of action by government to improve consumer and business confidence.

"In very general terms, to effect a 1% annual decrease in the level of taxation, Ontario would need to see an incremental annual 0.5% growth in the real GDP. The task force believes that the total plan for the 'Getting Ontario Working Again' team should have the potential to deliver an incremental GDP growth in that range."

We speak about a dramatic reduction of regulation and paperwork, and of course that is extremely important, and we set the goal of a 50% reduction in the cost for businesses in dealing with regulation and paperwork imposed by government.

We also speak about the need for deficit management and make the commitment to a balanced operating budget within the first mandate of a new government.

As I said, I'm not going to go through this in detail. This speaks to an alternative, a plan, a suggestion for fiscal and economic policy. It also has some very specific and concrete suggestions regarding tax policy. With a budget coming out in just a few weeks, there is still time for the Treasurer to reconsider the misguided tax policy of the NDP government, which during this time of economic recession has been devastating to the private sector, to businesses and to individuals in this province, who would have preferred to have the additional dollars to spend on capital investment or purchases for families.

I don't think anybody believes there are easy and simplistic solutions. I certainly don't. However, I do think that with a government that perhaps, rather than being ideologically driven, would open its mind—if they would open their minds to ideas and suggestions such as the ones we have put forward, I think we could see a better economy, more jobs and certainly a greater sense of confidence and predictability coming at a time when that's exactly what Ontario needs.

The last thing Ontario needs is a bill like 110 that simply raises, or attempts to raise, additional revenues in the province. We know what's happened in the past when NDP tax policy has attempted to raise an additional $3 billion. The actual fact is that we have seen $2 billion less collected in revenues in the province, notwithstanding the additional tax structures and tax increases that have been put in place by the NDP.

I am aware that the world has changed. I know that in the late 1980s the province of Ontario was prosperous and led the western world in economic activity. I know that today we are lagging behind many of our neighbours in economic recovery. I think the difference between leading your neighbours and following your neighbours is leadership in government. I'm proud of the leadership in opposition that Lyn McLeod has put forward, the alternatives and the suggestions that the Liberal caucus has put forward.

I would say to the NDP government, which should be focusing its time and its attention on governing and not simply on electioneering, that this is a good time to look at changes of policy that will help the economy of Ontario rather than further hindering it. I believe that Bill 110 will further hinder the economy of the province of Ontario, and I will not be supporting Bill 110.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Jim Wiseman (Durham West): It's a pleasure to stand here this afternoon after listening to the Liberal critic. I'm somewhat taken aback at this new level of zeal to be tax fighters like the Tories.

If you go back to the budget of 1984-85, which saw revenues of $23.38 billion, I wonder where she was when that was increased by almost $2 billion in revenue enhancements to $25 billion, or where she was in 1986-87 when it went up almost $4 billion, or in 1987-88 when it went up $3 billion, or in 1988-89 when, my goodness gracious, it went up $4 billion again. Then in 1989-90, when it went up $5 billion, I wonder where she was.

I'd also wonder where she was in the last year of the Liberal mandate, when their spending increased by 14.7%. The whole time they were in office, their spending went up at astronomical rates. Meanwhile, in my riding, for example, they couldn't find any money to expand the hospital in one of the fastest-growing areas of Ontario—no money. We found that money at a time when funds were decreasing. The 5% reduction they are talking about, the balancing of the budget they are talking about—they don't give any ideas of how they're going to do it. A 5% reduction in my hospital is going to lay off 100 nurses. I'd like them to say how they're going to supply and keep people working when they're laying off that number of people from my hospital in my riding and in my schools and all over the province.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): I hope to have an opportunity later today, if there's time, depending on how long the critic for the third party goes, to speak on this bill. But I want to congratulate the member for Oriole who, as usual, brings a rather descriptive analysis of the government's legislation.

Fundamentally, what the member is saying is that there is an obvious loss of any confidence in the business community to invest in Ontario. This is not just opposition rhetoric. We hear this everywhere we go. I recently completed a two-month outreach tour on workers' compensation. The minister will be, I'm sure, delighted to read the report, which will be available later this week. Hopefully, the government will look at some of the ideas, because they're not my ideas; they're ideas that were brought to me as the critic and to our outreach tour from people all over the province.

The one message we heard was very, very consistent, and it came from the supposed great supporters of the NDP. It came from the labour movement, it came from the small business community in Thunder Bay and in Ottawa and in Chatham and in Barrie and in Peterborough and right across the province. They said, "We're not getting jobs created in this province because nobody has any confidence in the future of the province."

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): Oh, come on.

Mr Mahoney: Everybody, Randy, said that, because they had no confidence in Bob Rae or Floyd Laughren.

So what do we get? Your response to try to create jobs in the province is to bring in a week-long session of tax bills. That's the NDP's response to try to get the economy going. When are you going to get it, guys? You increase taxes and you decrease the revenue you need and we all need in this province. Wake up.

Mr Cousens: Are these Liberals we're hearing from? Are these the very people who in 1989, when Robert Nixon was the Treasurer, came in and announced the employee health tax? That was Bill 89.

By the way, I saw the member for Oriole yesterday at the Armenian centre in her riding. There isn't any doubt that you are an excellent politician, because you can come together, as we did yesterday, in a non-partisan way and support a group of people within our society, as we both did fairly and nicely. You were so hospitable to me there that I have to say, when I speak to you now, I hope you won't begrudge the fact that we're now in the Legislature and can no longer have that social grace that was so nice yesterday. But I compliment the member for yesterday, as I was in her riding at the Armenian cultural centre. It was a fine event and we both shared the platform and said the same kind of thing.

But today I'm here listening, and is this the same Elinor Caplan I was with yesterday? I am thinking of you more as the person who was on the David Peterson cabinet. You could confirm for us, were you in the cabinet when the employee health tax was first thought of and discussed? Were you in the cabinet when the Treasurer came forward and said—

Mrs Caplan: OHIP premiums.

Mr Cousens: "Is the way we're going to get rid of OHIP premiums, go with an employee health tax?" Were you there for those discussions? If you were there for those discussions, how could you today, with any conscience at all, come out and make the speech you just did? I don't sense it's the same person.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. One final participant, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance.

Mr Sutherland: I'd like to respond first of all to some of the technical questions the member for Oriole raised. Let me just say that Bill 110 was introduced on October 26, 1993. The first instalment for the self-employed was not due till November 15, so therefore there isn't any retroactivity for out-of-province payments. We're not proposing any new amendments. Bill 110 replaces the old Bill 27, and the changes were made when we brought in the new Bill 110 versus Bill 27 regarding out-of-province people.

The member for Oriole, in her remarks, though, talked about changes that their new jobs thing is going to do and about reorganizing government and the services it provides. Where has the member for Oriole been? Look what that government did throughout the 1980s in health care. Rates increased by an average of 10% per year.

We've got that down to 1%, working in cooperation with our partners out there: hospitals, doctors, nurses, all the different groups out there. We are changing those services. We are, in terms of long-term care reform, going to more community-based services.

The member talks about the Workers' Compensation Board. Do you know what the unfunded liability of the Workers' Compensation Board was in 1980? It was only $400 million. Do you know what it was in 1985? It was $6 billion. By 1990 it was over $10 billion. The fact is, in my view, that the Liberals have no credibility on Workers' Compensation Board issues because they didn't deal with it. They didn't manage those issues.

This government has been dealing with the very difficult economic times. We've been out there creating hundreds of thousands of jobs in cooperation with our partners. We are making the tough decisions on Ontario Hydro and on the Workers' Compensation Board, decisions both the Liberals and Tories ignored. They didn't deal with them. They ignored them. They didn't manage them, and that's why we're having to do it now.

The Acting Speaker: This completes questions or comments. The honourable member for Oriole has two minutes in response.

Mrs Caplan: In my two minutes in response I'd like to just take issue with the member for Durham West, I believe, who suggested that in the last year of a Liberal government the spending was a 14% increase over the previous year. That is absolutely untrue. The Nixon spending plan had an increase of 6.8%, and when the government changed in September 1990, halfway through the year, Bob Rae took over a spending plan of 6.8% increases and ran it up by the end of the year, six months later, to 14% and a $3-billion deficit. Even with that $3-billion deficit, they were still in an operating surplus position, something which they then turned into a huge deficit the next year of almost $10 billion and a huge operating deficit of $6 billion.

I want to remind the members that they inherited an AAA credit rating, which has been downgraded three times because of the fiscal policy and taxation policies and economic policies of the Bob Rae government. If you want to know the test of confidence, it is frequently the test of that credit rating, which is a test of business confidence in this province.

If you don't think the test of confidence is also reflected by consumers, when they see the province's credit rating downgraded three times in four years, what they say is that something is fundamentally wrong with the economic management of the province by Treasurer Laughren, Bob Rae and his team.

Bill 110 is just another example of the misguided policies of this government. The incompetence and the ineptitude have led to unprecedented loss of confidence, justifiably, by the people of the province of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Cousens: The people in Ontario remembered the Liberals when it came to September 6, 1990, and it wasn't just one or two reasons why David Peterson and his government were removed from office; it was the arrogance of that government. They were taking advantage of the province of Ontario. It was the 33 taxes. It was the downloading to the municipalities. So the people of Ontario on September 6, 1990, saw fit to change governments.

Democracy works in strange ways and I wish I had had more influence to get the people to vote for someone other than the New Democrats, but you win some and you lose some. Our party at least survived the election and we will survive to run another.

We're dealing with Bill 110, and Bill 110 is another one of those very thick little bills that seem innocuous: An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act.

You almost get used to taxes because we've had so many levied in the last several years by the combination of the Liberals and now the New Democrats. Here they are, they're raising taxes. We had 33 tax increases in the short five years of the Liberals being in power and then we've had 32 tax increases since Bob Rae and his group were elected. It's been a lot of taxation.

What it's done is to make Ontario one of the most heavily taxed jurisdictions in North America. It has made us uncompetitive and unattractive for outside investors to come and invest their money into this environment known as Ontario. It's made Ontario a place that has stumbled economically, not unlike other jurisdictions as well. During the last few years, we have seen a very painful time for pretty well all countries; eastern Europe has gone through it. I don't think anyone in the world has survived this tough economic time. But during the 1980s, when things were booming, at that time the government could have maybe been a little bit like Joseph when he went to Egypt. He was there, and the Egyptians, during their period, and he said, "There's going to be seven years of great feasting and there will be large harvest and following this there will be seven years of famine."

We didn't have seven years of great harvest, but there were at least five, and then we had five of devastation. During the time the Liberals were in power, we saw just exactly how rich we were because the spending was without much thought or consideration and it was a government that just—

Mrs Caplan: That's crap.

Mr Cousens: The honourable member for Oriole, is that the kind of legislative language you would want to use in the presence of microphones? I won't repeat that.

Mr Perruzza: Go easy on her, Don.

Mr Cousens: I wouldn't want to repeat that four-letter word.

Mr Noel Duignan (Halton North): Arrogance, Don, arrogance.

Mr Cousens: No, no. This is not a day for recriminations too much, but it's time to remind the Liberals that they—

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): You're going to be gentle today.

Mr Cousens: I don't want to be totally gentle either.

I think the Liberals have a very short memory and I wanted to ask the honourable former Minister of Health, was she around the table when the employee health tax was first discussed?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): We live in the future, not the past.

Mr Cousens: You sure as heck do, a party that brought in the employee health tax and which was supporting it back in 1989, it was part of Bob Nixon's biggest budget ever, and now comes along and says, "Well, you're making some amendments and changes to it and we just can't support it."

You can't use the word "hypocritical" in the Legislature and I wouldn't want to use it, but I can't think of a better word to describe that which has been said and done today. One can't use that language here, so I have to be very circumspect in what I'm saying.

The people in Ontario did not like the employee health tax then and they don't really like it now and the—

Mr Bradley: They didn't like the OHIP premiums you brought in.

Mr Cousens: You know something, Jim, you're right. They didn't like OHIP premiums, but now we're in a position where who pays for the health care of the province of Ontario?

A person, in this new bill: Bill 110 I think is doing more the right thing. It's at least making sure that the holes are filled where the Liberals didn't fill them back in 1989. The New Democrats are not so stupid after all. If there's any money left on the table and they can find it, they're going to get their graspy little hands on it. This bill is going to make sure they close all the doors and avenues for anyone not paying employee health tax.

I don't want you to forget, members of this Legislature, that the employee health tax is one of those taxes that was brought in by the Liberals during the time of David Peterson, and we just heard the member for Oriole, Elinor Caplan, berating the government for making some modifications to it. She should be kicking herself around the block for letting that get in in the first place in 1989. How she can come in here with this sense of high and mighty attitude that they're doing the right thing by opposing it today is beyond me.

I want you to know that I was going through some of my old files and—

Mr Bradley: If you are going to talk about the future, I'll stay, if you are.

Mr Cousens: No, I'm going to deal with the past for a while, Jim. I want to remind the people of what the Liberals are all about.

Hon Ms Churley: There are no Liberals in the House.

Mr Cousens: Just for the record, I know we're not supposed to comment on people present or absent in the House, and in that case I won't be specific, but there isn't one Liberal in the House today and that's probably because they know I'm going to have a few moments talking about them, because it's all part of the record and people have a way of forgetting that record.

Having listened so intently to Elinor Caplan, the member for Oriole, I'm inclined to believe that she doesn't want to even try to remember what went on in 1989, because it was the decisions made by her and the David Peterson government that led to the downfall of that regime, and it was the kind of thing they did that raised such ire, such anger, such angst of people who were saying, "We want to lobby the government to come up with some fairer system of paying for our health care system."

I was looking at some of my old clippings, and I won't go into the file which is inches thick, but there was one, Richard Mackie of the Globe, who said it well:

"The Ontario Liberal government intends to ignore intense opposition and proceed with a controversial tax plan that would hit the province's businesses with what critics charge is a system of double taxation. The proposed new tax, the employer health levy, would be a payroll tax to replace premiums for the Ontario health insurance plan, 70% of which are already paid by employers."

Mr Perruzza: That was one of the better things they did. Don't attack that one, Don. Come on.

Mr Cousens: I'll just go on. Mr Mackie goes on to say:

"The officials in the treasury ministry say that the Liberal government has no plans to change the tax despite lobbying efforts directed at Treasurer Robert Nixon and Industry, Trade and Technology Minister Monte Kwinter."

Monte Kwinter happens to have won a few big battles in that government along the way, but this was one even he could not win. Today, to hear from the member for Oriole, it would appear that there are some members of the Liberal caucus who don't even want to remember those days.

The people of Ontario are not well served when we just continue to find more ways of taxation. As I touch on Bill 110 today, I want to go into something of the history of the bill. I'd like to review the bill itself and then I would like to deal with some of the comments of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which has done a tremendous amount of research on this particular tax and what it means. I would like to draw attention as well to the Fair Tax Commission that has a fair amount to say about employer taxes, and then I'd like to deal just with taxation in general.

First of all, we go back to what the Liberals brought in in their bill, Bill 76 I think is what the number was back then. The early days in 1990 are when you started having a new level of taxation and that was taxation of payrolls. It took effect January 1, 1990, and it was another increase at the same time as Mr Robert Nixon introduced other changes to the income tax law. It was a badly implemented bill. It was badly implemented in a number of ways.

If an employer is paying attention to our debate today, they'll remember that they paid tax twice because there are some employers—70% of OHIP payments previously had always been paid by employers. When this new tax came in, it didn't have a way of having a smooth cutoff of those who were paying their OHIP fees. There were some employers who were paying double: They were paying the new tax and then for those who had paid in advance for their OHIP fees, they had to pay a second time. As it came in, the Liberals really at that time had little consideration about the smooth implementation of this tax.

This government across the floor—we're dealing with another bill and we've got plenty of evidence of how they were so hasty in bringing in the tax on other matters. I shouldn't divert to it, but there's the tax on the home brewery, and they're coming in with amendments on Bill 138 that will rectify some of the goofs they made last year. At least they've got the courage and the time to do it in this time frame to repair some of the damage they did, but the people in the Liberal caucus at the time the payroll tax for health came in listened to no one. They made no amendments to the bill. They were in lockstep together. The Liberal caucus and David Peterson and Robert Nixon all went in lockstep together over the cliff, as they went and took the whole province into collecting another $2 billion in taxes—not another, but added to the taxes they had, and I'll go into how much more they got out of it.

The Liberals collected $2.6 billion in this tax. The other thing is, this tax is not inflation-indexed, so the government profits from inflation. What it means is, it's just a percentage, so whenever the payrolls go up, automatically, because it's a percentage, it will just continue to increase. It isn't locked at any level right now. It just continues to grow and grow and grow. The rate is graduated from 0.98% to 1.95% of an employer's payroll, and the maximum is payable on payrolls of just $400,000 or more. It goes into the whole new philosophy of a payroll tax.

I don't think the people of Ontario are well served when they don't have some way of recognizing their contribution towards health care. I don't know the perfect solution, but I know that to administer this tax requires a huge bureaucracy. You're talking about the time and preparation of another tax by all the employers who have to submit it, and then the users of the system have no real sense of who's really paying for it. It's as if health care is free. What a failure that is on our part, because there's nothing free. It comes from a combination of sources, but every one of us pays in one way or the other for every service provided by government. For those people who think that health care is free, they've got another think coming.

None the less, the employers started to carry the heaviest part of the load in this payroll tax that was brought in by Mr David Peterson and his government. A survey that was completed by the Ontario PC Party in 1990 found that 67% of the respondent employers of the private sector, universities and hospitals would hire fewer people as a result of this tax. Fewer people could get a job after this tax was brought in because of the high cost associated with it. A company or a university or an institution only has so much money that it can spend on people and services. If the overhead goes up, then how do they compensate for it? They have to pay the employer health tax, so what they end up doing is removing a certain number of people along the way.

I'm satisfied that when this tax was brought in in the first place it was one of the disincentives for hiring people. Further, it was one of the reasons why people started to lose their jobs in 1990. The cost of running a business became so much more excessive that businesses had a more and more difficult time to justify all their actions because a certain percentage of that income was going into employer health tax.

I remember very, very well one of the major employers in my community, and the employer health tax was going to take his bottom line profits for his company for that year. It ended up that his bill for the employer health tax, with the number of employees he had, was over $60,000. He made the point to me, "Don, that's the amount of money that I would have made in profit for my whole business at that time."

Now, people aren't aware that some of these companies were struggling as much as they were, but this, as another tax, cut into his personal income. It took money away that he could have invested into new opportunities, into hiring new people or into pouring it back into his business. When the money was taken away from his business and given to the province of Ontario, then it was that much less money that he had to build and prosper and to create a business that really had such great potential.

That's what we have to do: make sure that the employers of the world have a reason to continue to invest in Ontario, to invest in their business, to invest in jobs and, in so doing, to create opportunities for young people and others who can follow after them.

This is a classic case; I wish I could use the name of the company. It's a very prominent company, owned by one person. He has several hundred employees. His total take-home profit at the end of the year was taken away from him through the employer health tax. So when you come along and say, "Isn't that too bad? Maybe he's too rich as it is," no, he works hard. He's got a huge investment. He's getting the minimum out of it, and when you bring in a tax like this—and his prices are all fixed and structured; he's facing tough competition from everybody else—how then can he survive? All he can do is obey the law.

So when our survey that was taken back in 1990 found that 67% of employers in the private sector would hire fewer people as a result of this tax, that's a fact.

Another survey found that 19,500 small businesses had to lay off workers in response to the new tax. Do you realize that 19,500 small businesses had to lay off workers in response to the new tax? What happens is that if you continue to levy taxes on business and you take that money away from them that they could otherwise spend on people, jobs, development, new machinery, new equipment, new something else, you take away the chance for jobs.

I say to the Liberal Party that when they brought in the employer health tax in the first place, they did it with very poor insight into the effect that it would have on the marketplace as a whole. The Ontario Restaurant Association, back in 1989, said that the payroll tax will eliminate jobs in the hospitality industry. It's the same situation, the same as my first instance of a larger company where their total amount of profit for the year was absconded by the government in its tax. The government's own experts warned that the payroll tax would impair job creation, and this is something that came out of the then Ministry of Industry, Trade and Technology in 1989, and that's one of the reasons that the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, Monte Kwinter, was fighting hard to keep the government from introducing the employer health tax. I just wish that he'd won that battle, but he didn't.

Another survey conducted, when Manitoba introduced a similar payroll tax, found that 40% of small businesses in that province either laid off workers or reduced hiring as a result of that kind of employer health tax in that province. What it did in the case of Manitoba is it forced the government there to roll back the tax. Now we're going to see a rollback of one tax by the NDP in the province of Ontario although it's been devastating to the small breweries and wine-makers, a growing, good, small-business enterprise in the province of Ontario. Because the tax was so onerous and heavy, most of their businesses have suffered terribly because of the high tax per litre on—I was going to call it fuel—beer and on wine. So the government is now coming forward with recommendations to cut that back. It's too bad they can't be retroactive on that one, because they've already done the damage to those small merchants.

This tax, an employer health tax, is just seen as an innocent way for a government to skim the money off the top so the government's coffers are more full. At the same time, the employers who are providing an opportunity for business are the ones who are suffering.

We have a number around here in the Legislature that $50,000 of taxes is enough to remove one job. What happened on this one is that we already had OHIP. A large part of OHIP was paid for by employers, maybe 70% of it, and the remainder was picked up by the employer health tax, so the difference is what we're really talking about when we change the system.

Employers can only take so much. If we begin to look at the impact on people who run businesses, of all the taxes that we have, you begin to understand just why people are resistant to start up companies, why people are moving their businesses outside of this jurisdiction and why people just are not investing in the province of Ontario.

We saw this as well in further surveys. There was a survey that showed 81.6% of exporters in Ontario said the payroll tax would make them less competitive in export markets, because what it meant was that in order to get the money back they had to raise the cost of their products and services in order to break even. There's nothing wrong with making a profit. In fact, it should be good. It's something we in the Legislature should be encouraging. Wouldn't it be wonderful if people in the province of Ontario had some extra money in their jeans and then they could go out and they could spend it and then it would keep the economy going? The consumer confidence would be such that I think we could fuel a tremendous amount of growth and enterprise in the province of Ontario.

Likewise, for those who are investing here and doing business elsewhere, if they end up having a high cost of doing business in Ontario, then that cost has to be passed on to whomever it is they're doing business with.

There isn't any doubt that this employer health tax that was introduced by the Liberals back in 1989 had the biggest impact on small businesses. The small business coalition, led by the Ontario organization of small business, said, "Payroll tax would discourage small business from locating in Ontario." That was in the Financial Post on November 16, 1989. Again, the payroll tax hit smallest businesses the hardest. Most firms with fewer than 10 employees didn't pay OHIP premiums. Now, they say, all of them are having to pay a payroll tax.

You wonder, how many of the businesses in Ontario are small business? That's really the strength of this province.

I'm the honorary chair of the York Technology Association. This is a high-tech association that is in northeast Metro and south York region. We have maybe 110 members, but on our associate list we probably have 250 companies that are part of what York Technology is all about.

We did a survey on the size of the companies that make up the association, and to my surprise, there are only about 15 of the 110 companies that are large corporations of over 50 employees. The vast majority of those companies are under 50 employees, and I'd say over 50% of them are under 10 employees.

What we have is that entrepreneurial spirit where people are out there starting a business. When you look at the people over the last few years who have lost their jobs and in order to find a fresh opportunity are starting up their own businesses, they're suddenly finding that one of the painful things about doing business in Ontario is complying with all the government regulations and all the government guidelines. It's tremendously complicated, and there they are. It's just another cost of doing business.

So the small business sector was tremendously hard hit, because until the employee health tax that was brought in by the Liberals in 1989, they didn't have to pay the cost of OHIP. It was paid for by employees, and employees realized that that's part of the cost of just life—living—so individuals would pay their health tax themselves through OHIP.

Hospitals, universities, colleges and schools: When the province came through with its great change in employee health tax in 1989, public institutions also had to pay that tax. So schools, universities and hospitals ended up paying $85 million more that year. It wasn't budgeted. Here was something that they suddenly had to pay out.

Again, people forget about the fact that everything that happens through Queen's Park and the Legislative Assembly has a rippling effect that ripples through to many different sectors, and when you're looking at municipalities, universities, schools and hospitals—we call it MUSH, because it comes together rather nicely—all of them ended up having to contribute towards the employee health tax. Therefore they had to raise more taxes locally through their local tax base, and that too became an impact, a negative impact, on the one taxpayer back at the local municipality.

Is it any wonder there is an increasing tax revolt in the province of Ontario? Is it any wonder that you're seeing more and more growth in the underground economy? Anyone who's involved in the underground economy, who is totally illegitimate, isn't paying an employee health tax. It's hard to get all those l's right. They're not paying an employee health tax, because if they're making their money illicitly, illegally, underground, they're not paying it. It's only the legitimate companies that are paying it.

I just can see the impact that it's had. Certainly, what we have seen in the last few years was the philosophy that was part of the then Treasurer of the province of Ontario. Robert Nixon made it clear that, in his mind, the municipalities had more money to spend. Some of them had large reserves, but as far as he was concerned, they had more freedom and scope to increase their taxation levels, so let them pay more. And when he said that and he thought that, it was an impact on the small people of the province of Ontario, who own their own home, who own their own condo, who are living in an apartment, but they still some way or other end up having to pay more.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): People like you.

Mr Cousens: People like me, poor little guy from Markham, who end up having to pay that extra in taxes because of the extra levy that's been laid out by the province of Ontario that municipalities had to pay.

In the magnanimity of Mr David Peterson and Bob Nixon back in 1989, there they are saying: "Health charges are all going to be free. Your employers are going to look after it for you." People forgot that the local taxpayer paying the bill was picking up the extra costs for health services, for OHIP itself, through their additional taxation levels. The burden that government under David Peterson put on local government is something we have never gotten away from.

Unfortunately, once you bring in a tax like that, once you bring in those changes, you don't reverse them. That's the hypocrisy of politics. If someone comes up and says, "Oh, I'm going to start saving you money," don't believe us when we say that. All you can really hope is that a politician will say, "I'll freeze taxes; I'll hold the line; I'll try to find ways of doing it," because if we ever can save some money, what we've really got to do is plow it back into the deficit.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Should we believe Mike Harris?

Mr Cousens: You sure should. Should we believe Mike Harris? The answer is yes. Should we believe someone else you might support? I'd say think twice. We can catch them on a few things. Mr Harris is an honourable man, and I'm pleased to be part of his party.

Mr Wiseman: We're all honourable people in this place.

Mr Cousens: We use that terminology in the Legislature. We're all honourable people, even the member for Durham West, I guess.

The Acting Speaker: Can you please address the Chair.

Mr Wiseman: Particularly the member for Durham West.

Mr Cousens: I was thinking particularly the member for Markham.

What we have to look at is deficit. When you talk about administration, a government that's in charge of things, in 1985, when the Conservatives said goodbye to Ontario—no, it was the other way around. People said: "Goodbye, Conservatives. You have had your turn, and we want someone else to run it." At that time, the total accumulated deficit for the province in 1985, in round numbers, was about $30 billion. Is that right, Mr Tilson?

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): Absolutely.

Mr Cousens: Our total deficit was $30 billion.

Mr Tilson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member for Markham is now getting into the real facts of why this province has collapsed, and more people should hear what he's about to say. I don't believe there's a quorum.

The Acting Speaker: Are you asking for a quorum?

Mr Tilson: I am indeed, sir.

The Acting Speaker: Do we have a quorum?

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Markham may resume his participation in the debate.

Mr Cousens: I wish more Liberals would come in. I'm stuck with only the honourable member for Oriole.

Mrs Caplan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member for Markham erroneously suggests that it's the responsibility of the Liberal caucus to maintain a quorum. It is not. The standing orders say it is the government's responsibility to maintain a quorum.

The Acting Speaker: That's a point of information, not a point of order. The member for Markham.

Mr Cousens: The member for Oriole is right, the government has a responsibility to keep its numbers here. But for my benefit and my enjoyment I wish there were more Liberals to suffer what I have to say. That's all I'm trying to say.

Mr Wiseman: How many Liberals are there here anyway?

Mr Cousens: There is one who represents the party very well. I don't want to get into that.

I was talking briefly about the deficit. When the Tories left government, for whatever reason, in 1985, the accumulated deficit—

Hon David Christopherson (Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services): They were thrown out.

Mr Cousens: So we were thrown out. We were sent out to pasture for a while, and we have been in pasture long enough, I can tell you. We want to come back.

The total accumulated deficit at that period was $30 billion. There were a few other little expense accounts, but $30 billion was the total.

Mrs Caplan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I pointed out to the member for Markham that there was also an operating deficit when the Tories left and they had just lost the AAA credit rating.

The Acting Speaker: That's not a point of order. You can correct your own record; you cannot correct another honourable member's record.

Mr Cousens: Don't be so interruptive. I didn't say a word when you were talking, although I was listening intently because I couldn't believe this was coming from your lips.

Anyway, I want to remind the member for Oriole and any Liberal or anyone else who's talked that the total accumulated deficit of the province of Ontario in one set of books—you've got the others, unemployment insurance and Hydro and a few others, but let's just take the big pot, the trough we call the province of Ontario. In that, the total accumulated debt was $30 billion. I said it a minute ago, before the quorum call, and it is still $30 billion.

During the period of 1985 to 1990, when David Peterson and Bob Nixon and my good friend the member for Oriole were in the Peterson government, the deficit for the province of Ontario went up 25%. It went from $30 billion to $40 billion.

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): A third.

Mr Cousens: Is that a third? It went up a third. The honourable member for Nipissing, my leader, Mr Harris, has just corrected me, and I will take correction from him any day.

In five years it went from $30 billion total. More than 120 years it took Ontario, Upper Canada, to have that big a deficit, and then in five years the Liberals added a third, so it went up to $40 billion. Now here's the best part of the story.

Mr Tilson: What is it now?

Mr Cousens: What is it now? Could it be up another 10% or something? No, it's gone up by $10 billion a year since Bob Rae and the socialist NDP, the red party, came in. It's now going to be close to $80 billion accumulated deficit in the province of Ontario. I'm saving this for the last part of my speech.

The fact is that it started largely during the period 1985 to 1990, when Ontario started to be mismanaged. The mismanagement—

Mrs Caplan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would point out to the member for Markham that members of this House are supposed to always give factual information. The fact that the Liberal government had a AAA credit rating suggests that it received a Good Housekeeping seal of approval. It was definitely not mismanagement.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Markham has the floor. The member for Oriole will have the opportunity of responding, questioning, whatever, when he has finished his participation.

Mr Cousens: When you scratch someone like this, they start to squeal and squeak.

Just one other aspect: We're talking about the impact of the employer health tax, a tax that has hit others. Ontario universities—and this is part of our research that we did back in 1989—could provide free tuition to full-time students with the money they lose in the payroll tax, some $23.6 million. "The University of Toronto said the payroll tax will lead to cuts in services, research and possibly staff." That was in the Sudbury Star on May 27, 1989. McMaster University said it would freeze hiring new faculty and turn away students, on June 2, 1989.

When you talk about the employer health tax, as it was brought in by the Liberals in 1989, there isn't any doubt they failed to test the whole issue correctly and well. It was all part of the mismanagement of that government. When the member for Oriole gets upset when I call it "gross mismanagement," I have to say, what else do you call it? They increased the deficit of the province, even with the huge increases in taxes, by a third of what it had been before. At the end of their term of office, they had a total accumulated deficit for the province of $40 billion.

Now, with the New Democrats in power for four years, it's going to be $80 billion. We've got to get control of it. We have to start watching it. All this deficit, all this debt, all it is is deferred taxes, taxes we're going to have to levy some day in the future on other generations, along with the interest costs, along with the administration of it all. We are not doing anyone a favour to be living beyond our means today. Future generations that are going to have to pay for it will not enjoy the luxury we have in spending beyond our means. We have to find ways of bringing it under control and do something about it.

What happened is that when the Liberals brought in their employer health tax they didn't cover everybody.

Could you bring some order in here, Mr Speaker? Are you allowing all this chatter to carry on?

The Acting Speaker: I wish all members to know that interjections are out of order, and I would like the honourable member for Markham to address the Chair.

Mr Cousens: I'd like to, but it's difficult with all this noise going on in private conversations. I would like them to be listening.

Bill 110 now extends the employer health tax to self-employed people, partners in partnership, professionals, doctors, lawyers, engineers, commission salespeople, farmers and fishermen. Doesn't that sound odd? We are coming forward now with an amendment to a bill that was brought in by the then Liberal government in 1989, which was bringing in a new form of taxation to collect money, some $2.6 billion a year to pay for our health costs. It wouldn't begin to pay for it because health care is close to $17 billion a year. But why is it that when Mr Nixon and the Liberals brought in this tax they didn't include self-employed people, partners in partnership, professional people, doctors, lawyers, engineers, commission salespeople, farmers? Why is it the government missed these people? Can you believe it?

If you're going to have a tax, is it not fair to have that tax paid by all who are income-generating people in the province? Why is it? I never got an answer to that question. I remember it being asked in the Legislature then, and we could go back to the Hansard of that day, in which we asked, why would Mr Nixon, the then Treasurer, or the Minister of Revenue, Mr Grandmaitre, not include some of the highest-earning people in our society to be paying this tax?

There's one of them sitting across from me, a doctor from Scarborough. You wouldn't have had to pay an employer health tax whereas now, if you were still in practice, you would be paying it. And you're the kind of person who would want to pay that tax because you're—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Markham, please address the Chair.

Mr Cousens: I'm trying to get their attention.

Mr Mahoney: Bob, did you keep that practice open? I hope so.

Mr Cousens: You're going to need it.

The Acting Speaker: I remind all members that interjections are out of order. You will have the opportunity, when the member has completed his debate, to participate in questions and comments.

Mr Cousens: Did you say "if" I'm finished the debate or "when," Mr Speaker? I have a feeling that some people would like to see it sooner than later.

Mr Mahoney: Probably only those watching.

Mr Cousens: Well, I have one of my greatest fans watching.

Mr Wiseman: Your mother.

Mr Cousens: That's right, my mother.

There is no answer to this question. If we ask why the Liberals, when they brought in the employer health tax, could omit such large groups of people—professionals, partnerships, commission salespeople, farmers, fishermen—why they weren't included in the tax at the time, the tragedy is that there's no answer to it.

Is it any wonder that people say government isn't fair. Well, it isn't, and taxes aren't fair, and when you have a tax that comes in like this that is wrongly based, it adds a further grief to the whole process. There's a sense of relief when you know everybody is having to pay to the same piper.

When you have large single groups omitted, for whatever reason—I don't want to attribute any kind of political motivation to Mr Nixon for not including doctors and lawyers and engineers in that tax, because there are Conservative doctors and Conservative lawyers and Conservative engineers. There might even be a few NDP who are in the professional classes.

Mr Bradley: You may want to announce this.

Mr Cousens: There is always this shock that comes in if in fact it's the case—it'll get me off the Liberals; that's what's going to happen—that the government has filed another closure motion with the Clerk's office, so that the government will force through the legislation on basement apartments as quickly as possible. This Legislature will once again lose the opportunity of debating something and having a proper and full and complete debate on it.

The fact is that when Mr Rae took power—he and his people, when they were in opposition, enjoyed the opportunity of speaking out on issues—they now, with all their power, are removing that opportunity from the opposition today. The opposition have fought vigorously and vehemently and powerfully to fight the legislation that is causing—it's not causing death, but because of the poor controls around basement apartments there have been a number of deaths that are very difficult to explain. Now the government almost legitimizes it and will force through this Legislature in another special debate the whole legislation around basement apartments.

I announce that for all who want to know. That will be coming in in the next few days and I thank the honourable member for St Catharines for sharing that with me.

As we look at the new employer health tax, what it's doing in part is addressing the holes in the legislation originally prepared by the Liberals back in 1989. It is estimated that this new tax will generate some $35 million for the provincial coffers, that it will affect some 45,000 people. When I was speaking with members of the Ministry of Finance last week in our briefing, they indicated that today approximately 35,000 people have registered for the employer health tax. They do not know in the end how many more will be coming in.

The fact of the matter is that this again tells you just how poor our system is here in the province of Ontario, that in spite of all the computers and in spite of all the staff and in spite of all the organization that makes up Queen's Park, we're still not sure of too much around here. All we know is that we can lay out a tax and they'll be able to collect it.

They've collected $35 million, and by the time it's finished there will probably be another—well, who knows for sure, if they don't know how many more have to register, how many extra millions of dollars will be brought into the economy?

It makes me ask the question, what about all the people anyone is supporting by buying either tobacco, booze, chickens, food products or other things in the underground market? No one's certain how large the underground market, which is thriving in Ontario, is, but every person who's involved in the underground economy isn't paying taxes, and the moment they're not paying taxes every one of the rest of us in the province of Ontario has to pay more taxes to pay their share.

If anyone is supporting the underground economy by buying products from people who are not paying their taxes, all it does is increase the load on honest people, and honest people are buying from the underground economy. What we all have to do is begin to understand that every one of us loses when the underground economy thrives.

When the province increased the price of cigarettes to such an extent that it became really economical for people to live dangerously and import illegal product and sell it in Ontario, finally the government wakes up and says, "Well, we'd better lower the tax." Fine, but truly it's not just on tobacco products; it's on booze, it's on food products, it's on home repairs. Having sat on the finance and economics committee, I have some small understanding of how large the underground economy is. It's huge.

Everyone who participates in that underground economy by buying product without paying these taxes is contributing to the erosion of the health of the economy of the province of Ontario. Everyone who buys an illegal product from someone who is not registered and paying their sales tax is contributing to the downfall and erosion of Ontario's health. What we have ended up doing is making it very attractive for people to set up a business that's illegal and underground rather than aboveground and part of the total economic picture.

What we really have to do is begin to understand that we all have an important role to play to make Ontario the place it should be. Every one of us should do what we can to fight illegal activity. If someone is providing a service without paying all their taxes, then they too are participating in something that's very serious to Ontario's economy.

I look at this whole bill and I realize that one of the things the government is going to do, and it does make some sense, is that—it's Big Brother, isn't it? Yet I'm willing to accept it because it does make sense.

The reason the bill says "An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act" is that it means the books in the workers' compensation section will be matched with the Ministry of Finance's books so that they'll be able to confirm whether or not there are people who are on those lists who are not on this list. They can do a match. Then those who have not been picked up by the Ministry of Finance will be isolated and singled out and they will receive a bill for their employer health tax. If we're going to have a province that's going to work, everyone has to participate in it.

I wondered how much it costs the government and so I asked this question the other day, and I thank staff for getting back to me on it. We know the costs the employer has to spend in just preparing the data and submitting it, but then there's the cost to the Ministry of Finance. They spend $1.5 million on staffing, and there are 25 to 30 people employed by the government to administer the employer health tax. Direct operating expenses are about $0.5 million, making the total cost around $2 million a year. I just see that as one of those burdens we have.

We came along and we looked at the Fair Tax Commission. This is one of the boondoggles that the government established so that it could look at the taxation policy of the province of Ontario. There is a section in this book—it's over 1,000 pages; it's 1,087 pages—and they talk about payroll taxation. What they've really faced up to is that payroll taxation is really with us.

They comment on the employer health tax as being controversial in many ways. The name of the tax is controversial. But one of the things they suggested is—to give the whole sentence:

"Although the employer health tax was introduced at the same time that the provincial government eliminated premiums in the Ontario health insurance plan and the name suggests some form of earmarking of revenue, the tax in fact has nothing to do with health care spending. In our discussion of earmarking in chapter 11, we recommended that taxes whose revenues are not earmarked for a specific purpose be given names that identify the base of the tax."

What they're saying here is that Ontario has never really taken a tax and assigned it to a particular fund or purpose. I referred to this in my speech last week where I was concerned that if we're going to have different kinds of taxes, I'd be glad to see some of them set aside for an environmental purpose, or when I buy my fishing licence, I'd like to see the cost of my fishing licence go into stocking more fish in the rivers and streams.

What they've really done in the new fair taxation report is an assessment of how this employer health tax has a lot of problems to it. It's like I said earlier: A government comes in; it doesn't get rid of a tax. The Liberals brought the tax in in 1989 and all the government is doing today is refining that tax.

This Fair Tax Commission comments that the employer health tax has an unusual graduated rate structure, with a bottom rate of 0.98% that applies to employers with total payrolls of up to $200,000, and a regular rate of 1.95% applicable to employers with payrolls over $400,000, and a graduated rate structure applicable to total payrolls between these two amounts. Is it any wonder that it's complicated for people to understand what it is they have to do to please this government?

They go on with a number of comments and criticisms of employer taxes. I notice this note: "The rate structure adopted in 1990" by the Liberals—I added "by the Liberals"—"was based on the desire to provide a preference for small business in the payroll tax, replacing existing OHIP premiums. The preference was instituted by setting the rate for the smallest businesses, those with payrolls under $200,000, at half the rate for larger businesses."

What they're really saying is, "Okay, we're going to try to do a small favour for the small people." Somehow we've lost sight of the fact that everybody has to pay for the kind of health care system we've got.

But the one recommendation that came out of the Fair Tax Commission is number 46: "Ontario should eliminate the graduated rate structure for its existing payroll tax and replace it with a uniform rate of tax based on all remuneration."

At that point, there becomes some equity to it, but that's not good for the small business because they're going to pay more. Again, how does one win in this game of taxation?

Why is it, Madam Speaker—I don't expect you to answer, and if you did, I'd be pleased to hear the answer—that the federal government does not consider the paying of employer health tax as something that can be deducted for income tax purposes? We have to provide health care. It's mandated under legislation, but there is no relief for businesses in any way, except for some of the ways in which the tax is structured, that the federal government gives recognition through making the employer health tax deductible as another cost of doing business. Because it is a cost of doing business. You're not going to survive in business today unless you're fulfilling all the obligations government has laid upon you. So you do it—you have to do it—but there isn't even any bonus that comes back to you.

One other recommendation in this is, "Ontario should establish a new method of calculating remuneration for payroll tax purposes for owner-managers of corporations and self-employed individuals." They're saying, "Let's look at it," but this government has not begun to look at that.

The final recommendation of the Fair Tax Commission is, "Ontario should seek the agreement of the federal government to make payroll taxes fully deductible for corporate income tax purposes."

I'd like to know from the parliamentary assistant whether or not any efforts have been made with the federal government on particularly that item. Have there been any discussions at all between the Premier and the Prime Minister or our Minister of Health and the federal Minister of Health to see if there's any dialogue in progress that can again give some relief to businesses?

What we're talking about as well is the impact this employer health tax is going to have on small business. To that extent, I would like to refer to some of the research that's been done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business.

What they've tried to do as an association is assess the impact of taxes as they're brought in and do their best to try to understand just what the total impact is going to be. I have some of the reports that have been put together by the CFIB, and Ted Mallett, who is their senior economist, in February 1994 did quite an extraordinary study on the growth of the payroll tax burden from 1988 to 1994. He developed an example based on a 25-employee manufacturer in Ontario. He has said, first of all:

"Payroll taxes have become a common method of source of government revenues during the past number of years. Governments wishing to avoid public anger when searching for revenues have relied on payroll taxes to put more of the burden on business operators.... The burden of payroll taxes tends to fall most heavily on labour-intensive businesses, or those operating at low or negative profit margins. Considering that small and developing companies tend to fit these descriptions, payroll taxes are acting as a brake on business development and job creation."

I think that's the point I made earlier when the Liberals brought in Bill 89 back in 19—oh, it was brought in in 1989. I forget the number, but it was a bill that, again, eroded what businesses are all about.

I have here a graph on which the CFIB has shown the percentage of increase in these taxes from 1988 to 1994. You start seeing how significant the employer health tax is as a percentage increase. It's gone from zero to an increase of some 85%. Canada pension plan premiums have gone up since 1988, unemployment insurance premiums have gone up by over 60% since then, Workers' Compensation Board premiums are up by some 40% and wages have stayed at the level of maybe a 22% increase.

When you start looking at what this is, what Mr Mallett has said is that for a typical 25-employee manufacturing firm operating in Ontario these taxes will account for more than 12% of the total payroll in 1994, up from 9% in 1988. In 1988 of your total payroll you'd be paying 9% for these benefit costs that would be subtracted from your cost of doing business; now it's up to 12%.

Mr Mahoney: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I believe there should be a quorum in the House to listen to this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): There should be. Will the clerk please determine if a quorum is present.

Acting Clerk Assistant (Mr Franco Carrozza): Speaker, a quorum is not present.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Acting Clerk Assistant: A quorum is present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Markham may resume the floor.

Mr Cousins: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

I'm referring in part to the research that's been done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, a preparation by the senior economist. The point that has been raised in their presentation is that for a typical 25-employee manufacturing firm operating in Ontario these taxes now account for 12% of the total payroll in 1994, up from 9% in 1988. In a 25-member company that amounts to three employees. The cost of three employees is what it now takes to pay for the employer health tax.

That confirms one of the points that I made very much earlier when I was talking about the impact of the employer health tax on job creation, how I pointed out that businesses would be laying off employees because they could no longer afford to pay them, and therefore because of the employer health tax there would be a decrease in the number of people working in Ontario.

In the example that CFIB has brought in, it means that at this level total payroll taxes paid to the federal and provincial governments are equivalent to the wages of three full-time employees. That's the combination of all the different taxes that are in it. I'm concentrating primarily on the employer health tax. I will be touching briefly on some of the other taxes that are all part and parcel of what it is to do business in Ontario.

"Firms with payrolls above $400,000, like the example used in this discussion, pay the maximum rate. The employer health tax replaced the premiums paid to the Ontario health insurance plan," and that then became the responsibility of the business.

The overall impact of this tax—and I want to just read this into the record as it's been prepared by CFIB:

"Overall, payroll taxes for our hypothetical Ontario small business jumped about 60% since 1988, about two and a half times the rate of increase in total wages paid. During this time period, taxes went from just over 9% of payroll to more than 12%. For a 25-employee business, the $39,000 increase in annual payroll taxes was sufficient to pay the wages for an additional employee at well above the average wage."

Just that alone—we've had a lot of other increases, and I think I made a mistake earlier when I said that was the net impact of all the increases. But for the employer health tax, because of the increase it brought since 1988, for this 25-employee company it amounts to a $39,000 increase in payroll a year.

"Combined with other profit-insensitive taxes such as municipal commercial property taxes, business fees and licence costs, revenue measures that governments are placing increasing reliance upon, Canadian businesses have lost a great deal of their ability to ride out hard economic times.

"As a direct implication, Canadian ventures face added business risk from the Canadian governments' own domestic policies."

I have to say that Mr Mallett makes excellent points in his paper.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Who is he, your broker?

Mr Cousens: No, he isn't my broker. It's the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They've been doing a study on this ever since the Liberals brought in the tax in 1989 and I'm referring to their studies. They have a number of studies on taxation matters. The one I'm now looking at is January 31, 1994.

They're hitting business hard in so many ways. I have so many data on impact of employee taxes. I could go into it. I have to believe the Legislature has no desire to hear all these points, but what it amounts to, the issue I'm trying to make, is that there are so many different taxes. If you're in business today, it's hard enough to survive, with the competitive world we're in.

Free trade has opened up to make it far tougher. It opens up opportunity for people if they want to go outside our borders. Hopefully, the Canadian spirit will prevail and we will become world marketers, taking the intelligence and brains we've got to do business elsewhere. Who knows? Many businesses may decide to move to places other than Ontario where they don't have the high level of taxation we have here. I hope many will stay. I hope that when this government goes, we can begin to create the climate again for business to prosper and do well.

But all you have to look at is the number of different payroll taxes that small businesses have to pay. We have young people and others in the visitors' gallery today.

Understand it. When you go to work, your employer has a large additional cost that you don't even see, that goes into the cost of every employee they have in their business.

Unemployment insurance costs $4.30 per $100 of payroll, maximum of $1,743.56 per employee. That's a federal tax. Another tax on payroll is the Canada pension plan. This works out to be $2.60 per every $100 of payroll, with a ceiling of $806 per employee. For those two federal taxes alone, the cost they're going to have is close to $2,500 a year per employee just for federal employee taxes.

Then you have the employer health tax in the province of Ontario, and it ranges from 0.08% up to 1.95%, with no ceiling. Regardless of how large you are, how many employees you've got, there's always going to be a heavy, heavy cost there for employee health costs.

Workers' Compensation Board costs: Any company in business also has to pay workers' compensation. It's an insurance plan that helps the unemployed. What does that cost? Some 0.22% as a minimal levy you have to pay, but up to over 20%, depending on the kind of business you've got, with a maximum per employee of $53,900.

All companies are paying unemployment insurance, Canada pension plan, employer health tax, workers' compensation tax, plus they all have to pay provincial sales tax on benefits, on their insurance programs. That's an additional 1%, and that's compliments of Bob Rae and his government. That was one of the onerous taxes they laid on business last year.

It was a $2-billion increase in the budget that the government brought in last year, $2 billion, double the worst thing the Liberals did. These people brought in a $2-billion increase in taxes.

It ends up now that cumulatively the payroll taxes add on average 11% to 12% to the cost of each Ontario employer's payroll. Then on top of that, just pity the employers for all the other taxes they've got. It must be terrible to be putting a payroll together. First of all, you've got to have an accountant to handle all the accounting processes we were just talking about, and then you've got to collect the provincial sales tax, report it through to Oshawa for the province, and then you've got to collect the GST for the federal government.

At least one of the recommendations from the Fair Tax Commission is that you try to amalgamate or bring together all the different levels of taxation so there's some kind of rationalization of the way you gather the taxes in. As it is now, anyone who's running a business has all kinds of little boxes: bank accounts or funds or their poor general ledger—it's primarily geared to deal with government accounting. It doesn't do a thing to build business or add employees or make a stronger company. All it's doing is feeding the trough of the politicians at Queen's Park. What we're seeing is this heavy load of taxation on running a business.

People came to this country years ago as pioneers to open it up, to get away from government, to have the freedom to plant their crops, to fish the land, to trap and hunt and to make this country grow. And what happened? Suddenly government came. You need government for law and order and you need government for education and you need government for health, but we don't need government for all the other trashy things we have around here. If we could begin to cut it back, hold it under control, live within our means, make it so it's not necessary to lay such heavy taxes on people.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Name the trashy things. You will have all the lobbyists in your office tomorrow.

Mr Cousens: In response to the honourable member, my dear, good friend the Minister of Transportation, I bet there isn't a company in Ontario that is complying fully with all the stupid laws we've got. I venture to say you could do a lottery and go and pick the company. Will it be in compliance with all the regulations, rules, licences it has to have: employment equity, pay equity, health and safety legislation? The labour legislation brought in by the Liberals and the socialists is enough to cramp anyone's style.

Hon Elaine Ziemba (Minister of Citizenship and Minister Responsible for Human Rights, Disability Issues, Seniors' Issues and Race Relations): And the Tories.

Mr Cousens: Well, we brought in ours too, but we didn't bring in as many as you guys have in the last 10 years.

I'm saying a business person is handcuffed. You've got is all the different licences they have to have. I got the KWIC Index, and I was wondering, how many licences are there? That is one of the government monopolies, all the different licences you have. The list just goes on.

Mr Perruzza: Why shouldn't people snowmobile without a licence? Why shouldn't people ride a motorcycle without a licence?

The Acting Speaker: The member for Downsview, come to order.

Mr Cousens: I won't read them in, because you wouldn't understand, but there are just loads and loads.

Mr Perruzza: It's one of his colleagues that wants bicycle helmets legislated in this province.

The Acting Speaker: I ask the member for Downsview to come to order.

Mr Cousens: Well, I will read it. There's a licence for ambulance services; apple packers; apple processors; application for companies to cut timber; archaeological licences; boxers, kickboxers, boxing officials; bus-for-hire services; cartage, goods transport; application—I haven't read 10 of the different licences and there are pages of headings of what the licences are in the province of Ontario. Every licence is just another word for a tax. It's a way of gathering money.

As a province we have just gone to the rule of the absurd, and what we have is that the lunatics are now running the asylum. We have failed to understand what it is that can make government work effectively to serve people.

Mr Perruzza: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I'm listening closely to what the member was saying.

It's my understanding that he's called every Ontarian a lunatic. I think that's absolutely unconscionable and he should stand up and apologize to every man, woman and child in the province of Ontario—

The Acting Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr Perruzza: —for calling them a lunatic because that's what he said, Madam Speaker. He should withdraw and apologize to everyone.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. That is not a point of order. The member can continue his remarks.

Mr Cousens: If I said that everyone in Ontario was a lunatic—I would never, ever want to imply or state that. What I did say was that the lunatics are—

Mr Perruzza: You did say that. Apologize.

Mr Cousens: I would never say that. I didn't say that. You wanted to hear me say something stupid like that, but I am not that way inclined. What I'm saying is that the lunatics are running the asylum. You guys are the lunatics, and I'm saying the Ontario government has become the asylum. If the people have elected you, they elected lunatics. Make a point of order on that one, or can you prove that you're not?

My issue is that this place has gone crazy: crazy with taxes, crazy with government control, crazy with red tape, crazy with the government trying to run everything. Get government out of business and bring business into government. Have you ever heard of that? A very simple philosophy. Try to run government like a business rather than run business into the ground. That's what it's all about.

Mr Perruzza: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I'm so glad that he gave a clarification. Is he now saying that all 950,000 government employees across the province of Ontario are lunatics?

The Acting Speaker: That is not a point of order. The member has the right to express his opinion.

Mr Perruzza: Is that what he's saying? Because if that's what he's saying, then he should apologize to every man, woman and child involved in the public sector—

The Acting Speaker: Would the member take his seat. The member for Markham may continue his remarks.

Mr Cousens: If people were listening carefully, they'll realize the member for Downsview is just trying to get on the record for Hansard today—

The Acting Speaker: Would the member address his remarks—

Mr Cousens: —to prove that he is here in the House, and I am glad you're here.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Markham, please address your remarks to the Chair.

Mr Cousens: Madam Speaker, I shall.

Interjections.

Mr Wiseman: He's been really good lately.

Mr Cousens: Who? He has been better. He's fine even at the worst of times.

If we were dealing with an issue where there was a sense that the money was being well spent, I think we'd have a better feeling about what the government is doing. Has anyone stopped to consider how happy people are with the health care system in Ontario? I'm satisfied and I have a number of situations in which I've been involved with the health care system. I have to say that to a large extent I've been impressed by the care and the efforts made by the people who are on the front line: the surgeons, the nurses, the people who are delivering the service on behalf of the people of Ontario to those of our families, our relatives and ourselves who are sick. I think we know that health care is something that we really take for granted until something happens that we need professional assistance.

I'm intensely proud of the fact that in my own community I have two hospitals serving the people of Markham: York Central Hospital in Richmond Hill serves that segment in Thornhill, and Markham-Stouffville Hospital, which is a new hospital recently opened. I had the great pleasure when I was in cabinet back in 1985 in helping with the motion that Bette Stephenson helped me sponsor that got the Markham-Stouffville Hospital approved, and the Liberal government brought it through in spite of my earlier criticisms.

Mr Perruzza: Listen, don't brag. You supported a lot of things—

Mr Cousens: And I will continue to support good things. What I want to do is fight for the right things and have a sense of balance and a sense of fairness in all these things.

Is the health care system in jeopardy? Do people have a sense of concern that the health care system is failing them? I feel that if the money we're collecting from this tax were being well spent, then I wouldn't receive the kind of letter I received from the Canadian Association of Medical Radiation Technologists.

This is a letter from one of my constituents:

"As I come from Britain where this course"—what they're talking about is that there was a course that was given to radiation therapists, and the government has decided that this course is now no longer going to be given the degree status that it was until now.

"In March 1992 the Ontario Ministry of Health announced its decision to discontinue the current radiation therapy education programs and replace them with a single centralized program under the direct control of the Ministry of Health. Some of these operate in collaboration with the University of Waterloo....

"The ministry's decision was made without prior consultation with either the professional bodies governing professional certification and practice...or the provincial cancer care agencies.... The decision also disregards recommendations contained in the reports of the cancer manpower committee and the radiation therapy technologists' education committee, both of which were established by the government to make recommendations on issues regarding the future of radiation therapy education programs in Ontario.

"On June 20, 1993, the chairmen of the boards of the OCTRF"—the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation"—and the OCI"—the Ontario Cancer Institute—"jointly wrote to the Ministry of Health indicating that in the opinion of both organizations education at the university level is required to prepare radiation therapists to care for patients who require radiation therapy. A fully documented proposal for a joint school of radiation therapy was forwarded to the ministry" in October 1993.

They've gone on to point out that this government is undermining educational standards for this particular professional level in cancer care and reducing it to something less than it is in other jurisdictions, in Britain and other places.

She's gone on in this report that was prepared by the technologists:

"The Ministry of Health has disregarded the recommendations of the CAMRT"—and that's the association, and the cancer research foundations—"that a university level of education is necessary....

"If the Ministry of Health transfers programs into a college environment it will not keep pace with international trends in the developed world. Education programs for radiation therapists are already" at the university level "in Australia, Great Britain and South Africa. Education of therapists at a lower level than that consistent with the needs of the profession may lead to suboptimum standards of treatment for cancer patients in Ontario.

"The ongoing forecasts of critical shortages of radiation oncologists and medical physicists will place increasing demands and responsibilities on future radiation therapists.

"The decision of the Ministry of Health to take control of and change the education program for radiation therapists in Ontario was taken without prior consultation with the profession, and does not follow recommendations made by stakeholder committees....

"Organizations responsible for the delivery of radiation therapy have received no details of the proposed new program content, cost or standards.

"Delivery of radiation therapy within Ontario is limited to facilities directly funded by the Ministry of Health.... Surely it is a conflict of interest for all radiation therapy education programs to also be controlled through a Ministry of Health education institution.

"Implementation of this proposal could lead to the loss of Ontario's best-qualified radiation therapy educators to positions elsewhere in Canada and the United States and there will be difficulties in the recruitment of replacements."

It's one of many proposals that I have on one particular component of the health care system. What I have is a constituent who says, "Any change to downgrade the qualification" of radiation therapists "will result in the reduction of radiation therapists in the future and will probably lead to yet another cancer crisis due to insufficient properly trained staff."

She says as well, "I feel that this government does not look ahead. I know that successive governments have helped to cause the last two crises" in cancer care "but why deliberately go ahead with an action that will cause another crisis?"

When we look at what's happening within the medical field, we have seen a reduction in the number of students going into the universities for medicine. What this means is that the government is saying, "We'll reduce the number of people going in to become doctors because we have too many doctors in Ontario." What happens then to all the hospitals that rely so much on those interns who are trained by the large hospitals, who carry such a heavy load in caring for the sick in the province of Ontario? To make one decision, that you're reducing the number of people going into medicine to reduce the number of doctors, at the same time what you're also doing is affecting a whole other area of service within the delivery of health care through the province of Ontario.

What we have to look at is that for every action there's an equal and opposite reaction. If the government feels, "We're going to change radiation therapists, then we're going to change the number of doctors, and then we're going to make another change," it's as if they don't have an understanding of the total, full picture of health care.

The other day in our caucus when we were discussing health care, I was impressed by the kinds of things said by the member for Simcoe West, Jim Wilson, our critic for Health. When we were talking about the costs of health care I was extremely impressed by what he had to say because I learned something.

The level of inflation for health care services, for medicine, for all the things that surround health care, is at one of the highest levels. Inflation for health care products and health care services is over 6%. You talk about inflation across the province at being now under 1% and a percentage of 1%. Health care continues to be a high-cost item that we in this province have taken for granted.

But we have to continue to protect and build so that we understand that if we're going to bring in the latest of technology, the latest in medicine, the latest in equipment, there's going to be a continuing investment to maintain that kind of quality. Therefore, what this government has to do is not treat health care in the same way it treats everything else. Make sure that we continue to have the highest quality of health care possible. I think there are many things that can come out of that. I'm not sure how we solve it all. There's no quick solution to it.

But we're dealing with a bill that is going to generate more cash for the government, at least $35 million, and it might be up to $60 million or $70 million because of the changes to the employer health tax, but what we're seeing is the government getting more money in and it's just going to go in to the general treasury. It raises yet other questions.

When I start talking about the delivery of a service to Ontario residents, I want to break out the logic of this. On the one hand we collect taxes from the employers that are honest and have employees and that are legitimate Ontario enterprises. They pay for health care. On the other hand, in Ontario you don't have to be part of any health plan, you don't have to be part of any organization, you don't have to have a job, you can qualify for health care because you're a resident of Ontario, you're a citizen in Ontario.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Isn't that great?

Mr Cousens: The only danger of that is that if someone's getting something totally for nothing—the honourable Minister of Transportation asked the question, "Isn't it great?" I'm concerned about the people who are skipping all their taxes, who are working in the underground economy, who have no obligation beyond their survival to pay for employer health tax. They are not paying employer health tax. If a person's coming in and receiving health care, is there any check on whether or not they're working or in a position to be paying for the employer health tax?

Mr Perruzza: I say to you, the companies that make a whole lot of money that pay no tax, all right—

The Acting Speaker: Interjections are out of order. The member for Markham has the floor.

Mr Perruzza: Go after the real cheaters.

Mr Cousens: That's your philosophy. I just don't want any cheaters. If there are cheaters, let's make sure we make sure they pay the cost of what it is to do business in Ontario. We have not begun to correct the anomalies in the health care system.

The member for Downsview has been part of a government. You've known for three or four years—and the Liberals knew before that. You changed the health card to try to clean up the system and there are still one million more health cards in the province of Ontario than there are residents. Why is that? You explain that one to me.

The Provincial Auditor, when he looks at the cost of health care, is saying, "What can we do to prevent the number of people who are coming into Ontario collecting health care services free of charge and not paying anything for it?"

I question that whole process, and you as a government are to be found guilty of wasting the $750 million that has gone into the abuse of the health care system by people who are ineligible taking advantage of the system; they are ineligible for it and yet they are collecting those services. We know of people who are coming across the border, they come into Canada and while they're here they are able to take advantage of our health care system. I have to say that it's a concern.

Mr Perruzza: What are their names? Give us one name.

Mr Cousens: There are examples, and we've had those examples.

Mr Perruzza: Give us one name. Give us one example.

Mr Cousens: The example of the person in Peterborough who had a hysterectomy and then a week later the same card was used for someone to have a baby in Richmond Hill. How does that happen? Cards are circulating. What we're saying is that there has to be a way where you prevent the circulation of cards; so if you had some kind of photo ID—and this is another suggestion from our Health critic—some standard way of identifying people in the province of Ontario. I'm not sure what the best system is going to be, but we already have the cameras at the licensing offices. Can't that whole thing be used to begin to develop a photo ID card for health care so that when someone goes in and they happen to have someone else's card, they can look at the card and identify them?

I want to continue to provide health care. I'd like to find ways of making it responsible. I'd like to find ways of getting rid of some of the abuses. I think that if you're saying you're only going after one level of abuse, I'm saying let's understand that if there is someone abusing something this wonderful in the province of Ontario, let's go after it, let's identify it, let's deal with it, let's correct it. Let's not just say, "Just get the rich people." Let's make sure everybody participates in making our system right. Anyone that is working within the underground economy, buying underground economy items from people, is contributing to the undermining of the province of Ontario. I believe that we all have a share to contribute and pay towards making Ontario strong.

Our taxes go into one big pot. The employer health tax is coming in with under $3 billion of a $17-billion bill for health care. A major cost of life in the province of Ontario, the biggest item, some 37% or 39% of the total cost of government, is health care. It's the single biggest item, and yet what we have is, all the funnel flows into one central coffer. What we have to do is from that consolidated revenue fund pay out this huge amount for health care. I want to see us get the best value we possibly can for our dollar.

As we look at again yet another tax, the government is finding a way of filling the holes that the Liberals left after 1989 when they brought in the employer health tax. This is another way in which the government is closing the loopholes. We've got to do it differently. I don't know when we'll come down to a better understanding of how to tax. We know we're going to tax. But if we could deal with more simple, straightforward ways to get the kind of money we need so that the people who run a business don't have to have full-time accountants, so that the people who are making money are paying for it, so that there is a sense in which there is some fair share, that everyone is participating in the cost of government, then we will have come a long way.

What the government has done with Bill 110 is purely filling a few cracks in the dike. They've made sure they've made some more revenue. It's part of the $2-billion tax grab of taxes that were levied by the government in its budget of last year. We know that Bob Rae has taken more money in taxes out of the province of Ontario than any other government. We know that they have run the province's deficit up by some $40 billion in the four years they've been in office. What we really have to do is make sure that there's full accountability for all dollars that are coming into the provincial coffers. We're satisfied that this is not happening.

So on behalf of the Ontario PC caucus, I want you to know, Madam Speaker, that we have major concerns over this bill. We have major concerns over the approach that it all started with, with the employer health tax itself. It was a wrong approach to pay for health care. The system has not been corrected by this bill. It is good to the extent that it is making professional people—lawyers, doctors, engineers, salesmen, farmers, fishermen and others who were exempt previously from paying tax on health will now be paying it. I support that intent. However, to try to say you're paying for the health care system through an employer health tax which has had so many negative results in our province is something that was a concern to us back when it was introduced by Mr Nixon in 1989 and it is a concern to us even yet today.

The Acting Speaker: Now we have time for comments from all members of the House.

Mr Perruzza: To pick up very quickly on something the member said, he said something that was really interesting, that we have too much government. In fact, he raised two examples of where government really has no business.

He talked about pay equity and said government shouldn't involve itself in that kind of thing. If someone is out there working at a job and making less money for the same value of work as someone else—traditionally, if you're a woman and you're out there doing the same work as a man and you're making less money, what the member suggests is: "Let the status quo prevail. If there is an inequity there, don't involve yourself as a government in correcting that inequity." I say to you, Madam Speaker, and I trust you will agree with me, that is wrong, absolutely, irrevocably wrong.

The other example he raised was around employment, that if you happen to be different and you're traditionally excluded from being able to gain a job, that status quo should prevail. That was the other example the honourable member used. I say to you, Madam Speaker, and I trust you will agree with me, that is wrong.

I'm not even going to get into the other half. I hope I have another opportunity in another two-minute response to talk about free trade and the connotation that implies, where they want our marketplace to go and the two classes of people they want to create. I'm going to do that in a subsequent response.

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I'm delighted to rise again to thank and congratulate the member for Markham. The member for Markham has, over the past week or so, spoken on a couple of financial bills. He has the message that's appropriate for the province of Ontario at this point in time.

He gets a little exercised at times because he realizes that members such as the member for Downsview don't understand the message. In Ontario today, we have too many people who are unemployed, we have too many businesses that are going bankrupt, and we have an economy that isn't working to its maximum efficiency. To address these problems, we certainly don't want to put taxes up. We need to cut taxes, we need to cut red tape. This is what's needed for Ontario at this point in time. The member for Markham has been pointing this out to the government in a number of debates over several bills.

This bill imposes an employer health tax on self-employed individuals. It's interesting that it also puts in measures to try to get more taxes from people by address-sing tax avoidance. It also increases filing requirements for annual tax returns by self-employed individuals. More taxes, more red tape.

The member for Markham knows this will not work. This will not put people back to work, this will not create more jobs. I was just so pleased today to see a little glimmer of hope in that this government finally recognized, for example, that in the you-brew industry the taxes it imposed, which I spoke to last week and which the member for Markham spoke to last week—we were correct. The government now recognizes that taxes killed that industry. Here's another tax on those who are self-employed. It will have the same impact. I hope the members in the House listen to the member for Markham.

Mr Robert Frankford (Scarborough East): I would, for a start, like to be clear that the third party acknowledges that the tax-based health system is actually a competitive advantage to this province. In Canada we spend 9.5% of our GDP on health, which is a significant benefit, and because it's universal and tax-based this is considerably less than the 14% it costs in the US, which in fact is the major cause of employer strife and strikes.

One other point I would like to comment on is the question of availability to residents. I have been getting calls about the fact that temporary residents are no longer covered. While I very much support the fact that we have a tax-based system, and I commend the previous Liberal government for at least moving to that, in the process we left out the possibility of paying a premium directly.

I have been getting calls and I've had conversations with people in the educational sector, in faculty associations—and I'm thinking of the Canadian Union of Educational Workers, who are asking for the possibility of a direct premium. This, unfortunately, was the downside. I have not heard this point mentioned by the previous speaker, who doesn't realize that this is a possibility of raising significant non-tax revenue. I was told by Mikael Swayze of the CUEW, if I recall correctly, that something like $8 million could be raised in direct premiums, which would not be a tax. I think this is something we should be considering as well as a tax-based system. Any other non-tax revenue would benefit us all.

Mr Mahoney: I was actually on the docket to be the next speaker, but since we're running out of time this evening I'll just—

Mr Mahoney: And there's no one here who cares other than the member for—where are you from anyway?

The member for Markham made a number of comments somewhat derogatory about the former Liberal government and very derogatory about the current government. Of course I would agree with many of his comments about the current government.

I remember being on city council when the member's party was the government of the day. I remember many budgets coming down in which they would laud and tell everybody how wonderful they were at not giving a tax increase. Then, at the same time they would announce a 0% tax increase, they would also announce a 5%, 6%, 7%, 8% reduction in transfer payments—the member will remember that, I'm sure—to the municipalities.

This member is heading off, we understand, in the not-too-distant future, to take up a new post in life as the mayor of Markham. There is a rumour to that effect. When we all refer to him fondly as your worship, I can just hear the member, regardless of who the government is, complaining about the transfer payment cuts. In essence, when you cut transfer payments from this level of government to the municipalities and the school boards, they have very little option but to increase taxes.

We shouldn't create some kind of a façade that suggests that only one particular party or government has increased taxes. The fact is, the Tories were the mother of all taxing governments in this province for years and years and years, and that member knows it only too well.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Markham now has two minutes to respond.

Mr Cousens: It was so painful to listen to at least three of those speakers. I wish you'd given the member for Don Mills the time for all of them combined, because he spoke with such wisdom—

Mr Mahoney: A former mayor. He might get his job back after the next election.

Mr Cousens: —something I'm not used to from the member for Mississauga West.

Anyway, I thank the member for Don Mills for his kind remarks and for reinforcing the key points that we need to do what we can to cut red tape and that indeed this employer health tax does not create jobs.

That's something the Liberals still don't understand. You didn't raise that at all in your points, creating new jobs, except maybe if someone changes jobs. You're trying to suggest that I change jobs myself, but that's a decision I have yet to make and will announce in due time should I decide to do that.

I always appreciate listening to the member for Scarborough East who brings his own professional background as a doctor to this subject, and where there is the Canadian system versus the US system, I don't want to go to the US system at all and I would very much worry about that. Somehow or other we've got to keep things in balance. I think it's the hardest, most delicate thing to do.

We saw some very good decisions by Frances Lankin when she was Minister of Health in trying to bring costs under control, but we've got to make sure that the service is also there, and to make sure that we remember that in everything we do as politicians, we're there to serve the people and we're there to provide the kind of health care and whatever service it is. The Minister of Transportation has his job; we all have a job to do.

My job as an MPP is to highlight major concerns about the different bills that we have before us. Indeed, I think the member for Downsview fails to understand that opposition has an important job, to compliment the government if it does something right, but also to chastise and criticize if it's wrong. The fact is that there are still serious problems with what you're doing and you have to get control of that. There may still be time.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, and I thank all the members for their contribution to this debate. Further debate?

Mr Mahoney: I believe we have an understanding that since there are only approximately three minutes left until 6 of the clock, I will move adjournment of the debate and then the members opposite will get the benefit of hearing my entire 30-minute speech, unabridged and uninterrupted, when next we visit this issue. I would so move, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Agreed? Agreed. The acting government House leader.

Hon Mr Pouliot: I move adjournment of the House.

The Acting Speaker: Is it agreed? Agreed. This House therefore stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30.

The House adjourned at 1757.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I was pleased to read in the April 13 edition of the Dryden Local Express that the Minister of Natural Resources has assured the residents of Dryden that they "should be optimistic about provincial funding for the local hospital project and the extended care home." The minister went on even further by saying, "The Minister of Health should be about to make an announcement soon."

The Dryden District General Hospital board and I have been pressing the Minister of Health to move ahead with the approval process for the next stage of planning in order to upgrade the hospital facilities and for the new long-term care building the residents of the Dryden area have been waiting for for so long. We are naturally very pleased and excited about the Minister of Natural Resources' comments and we await the government's funding announcement soon after the budget.

I would also like to take this opportunity to compliment the residents of Dryden and the Dryden area, the Dryden hospital board, the Dryden Extended Care Organization and the administration of both the hospital and Patricia Gardens Minimal Care Home, along with my municipal colleagues, for the work that has gone into these two projects. Many hours have been spent by all concerned in preparing for the projects, and I look forward to a very positive announcement that will be made by this Minister of Health in the upcoming weeks.

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): My statement is directed to the Minister of Finance, and it concerns a threatened reduction to municipal road grants and base road funding. This 20% cut will mean a reduction of about $145 million from last year's road grants of $724 million. This represents a $73-million reduction in construction dollars and will result in at least 1,100 fewer jobs.

Municipalities normally match the $73-million provincial funds with local funds. If hard-pressed municipalities decide not to spend those matching funds, the negative employment impact will most certainly double. Road grants have traditionally been announced in January, but this year's allocation will not be disclosed until late April or early May.

For the second time in as many years, this government will announce major transfer cuts to municipalities after they have already set their budgets and their taxation levels. You are requiring municipalities to commit new money for projects under the Canada-Ontario infrastructure program. I suspect you are merely transferring funds from road grants to meet your commitment under that program.

Minister, on March 23, you affirmed your government's transfer payment commitments and you said you wanted to avoid "downloading our fiscal problems on to our transfer partners, as the federal government has so unfairly done to us. That carries too high a price in lost jobs and cuts to services."

Can the situation have changed that much in three weeks?

ORGAN DONORS

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): In many communities across Ontario, there are people whose lives depend on the kindness and understanding of strangers. These are the people who are waiting for a desperately needed organ or tissue transplant. Their only hope for a new life is agreement by a family to organ donation.

This is Organ Donor Awareness Week. In Ontario alone, there are close to 1,000 people waiting for an organ transplant and some will die because there is a critical shortage of donated organs. There are many reasons for this shortage, ranging from a decrease in brain deaths in Ontario to misunderstanding about the organ donation process.

In Ontario, about 100 out of every million people need a transplant but only about 20 out of every million people will ever be a potential donor. Last year in Ontario, there were 568 transplants, an increase over 1992, but there is still a critical shortage of donated organs in Ontario and people will die because of this.

Transplants not only save lives but can reduce health care costs. People waiting for a kidney can be treated by dialysis at a cost of anywhere from $40,000 to $75,000 for every year that patient is on dialysis. A kidney transplant costs about $40,000 and the costs for the years after that for anti-rejection drugs average $3,000 a year. A study has estimated that if organ donation could increase by only 10%, the health care system would save more than $12 million.

Ontario residents can show their support of organ donation by discussing it with family members and signing a donor card. When you sign a donor card, you sign for life.

RACE RELATIONS

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I want to add my thoughts to the debate that's raging as a result of what's now called the Just Desserts incident. It has touched a nerve and, in our anger, all of us have to respond. We do run the risk of making things worse rather than better. My plea for all of us is to be sensitive.

Some thoughts: This isn't a crime committed by "the black community." The black community is no different than any other community. They are law-abiding, caring, compassionate, hardworking. It was a crime that was committed by four young criminals, apparently black, but to brand the entire black community obviously is clearly wrong.

My second thought is, this is really a time more than ever before when we need to reach out to our young people, not reject them. It is a fact, and I think an indisputable fact, that in the last few weeks our young black community has probably never felt as rejected as it has in the past few days. This is a time for us all to reach out to our young people, particularly, I must say, to our young black community, and ensure that they don't in any way feel neglected. I think all of us can do that in our own way every single day.

My last point is to urge caution in publicly reporting crime by race. The question is, what do we plan to do with that? If we are simply going to use it as a tool to somehow or other paint an entire community because of the actions of perhaps one out of 1,000 of that community, that's counterproductive.

So if we all want to do something, I'm just urging that we cautiously move forward as we try and deal with this very sensitive issue.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT COMMISSION

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): I stood before you a week ago to discuss the inflexibility and anti-development practices of the Niagara Escarpment Commission in my riding. It is certainly no secret how I feel about the commission and its uselessness. In keeping with this, I would like to relate yet another example of why this undemocratic body should be disbanded.

In November 1990 John Deboer, a resident of Sydenham township, applied for a development permit to establish the use of a stair manufacturing operation in an existing building on Niagara Escarpment land. The permit was issued.

Over the next few years business more than tripled, warranting a move to a larger location. In October 1992 Mr Deboer moved his business into a building located only 350 feet from its original location. Since it was the exact same commercial operation taking place in the same rural area of the escarpment, Mr Deboer reasoned that it should continue to be regarded as an existing use as previously determined by the Niagara Escarpment Commission.

Mr Deboer was mistaken. A second development permit was rejected by the NEC despite its former approval. Even after receiving development approval from the Ministry of Transportation, the Bruce-Grey health unit and the township, the commission continued to deny Deboer's application and appeal on the ground that the proposed use did not comply with the permitted uses in the Niagara Escarpment plan.

I can only share in Deboer's extreme dissatisfaction with the treatment he received from the commission. How can a body of supposedly educated and logical individuals issue a permit for a specific use and then turn around and deny a permit for the exact same development less than 350 feet away? It is unanswerable questions such as this one that plague Grey county and will continue to do so until this undemocratic body is abolished.

WINE INDUSTRY

Ms Christel Haeck (St Catharines-Brock): It is with a great deal of pride I'm pleased to report that Ontario wines are once again making headlines around the world. This time it's their gold medal showing in the international wine competition in Verona, Italy, last week, where Niagara's Cave Spring Cellars 1991 Chardonnay Reserve and Stonechurch's 1991 Icewine took grand gold, the highest honour possible.

Gold medals also went to Inniskillin winery of Niagara-on-the-Lake for its 1992 Icewine. Chateau des Charmes, also of Niagara-on-the-Lake, was awarded a silver medal for its 1992 Paul Bosc Estate Chardonnay. Meanwhile, St Catharines' own Henry of Pelham winery won a bronze for its 1991 Chardonnay Barrel Fermented, as did Pelee Island's 1991 Pinot Noir.

Competing against 900 wines from 16 different countries, Ontario wines took three of the top four spots in the Chardonnay category, winning grand gold, silver and bronze medals. Our icewines took two of the top four spots, grand gold and gold in the sweet wine category.

In addition to six medals, Ontario wines received 10 honourable mentions. Ontario placed second in overall medal totals, with Italy placing first.

Our vintners have once again shown the world that we make some of the finest quality wines anywhere in the world. As someone who supports wine—and I hope everyone in this House does—coming from Ontario, I hope we will all lift a glass to congratulate each and every vintner in Ontario for their good work.

FERRY SERVICE FEES

Mr Hans Daigeler (Nepean): I have just become aware of yet another blatant example of Tory double-speak that I would like to share with this House.

On December 16 Mike Harris wrote to the organizers of the anti-ferry-fee coalition in eastern Ontario. Here's what he said:

"Thank you for faxing me a copy of your November 26th letter to Premier Rae expressing your outrage with the NDP government's plans to impose tolls on transportation.

"My caucus and I have continually urged the Premier and the Treasurer to neither increase existing nor introduce any new taxes, which is exactly what such a toll would be."

Yet, Mr Speaker, guess what I read in a recent edition of the Kingston Whig Standard. Again I quote:

"A two- or three-tiered system for ferry fees at Wolfe Island and Glenora is a possibility under a Tory government, says Mike Harris."

That's a quote. These comments were made at a Conservative fund-raiser at the Ambassador Hotel in Kingston. I find it amazing that the Conservative leader can change his tune so dramatically within a short few months.

This issue is of great importance to the people in Kingston, Picton and surrounding areas. For sure, they will remember at election time the obvious Tory inconsistency and they won't be much impressed with a party leader who changes his position every month.

COLLINGWOOD GENERAL AND MARINE HOSPITAL

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I rise again in this Legislature to urge the government to give final approval for the redevelopment of the Collingwood General and Marine Hospital.

In the last month approximately 8,250 Collingwood area residents have signed petitions that support my call for a redeveloped hospital in Collingwood. These citizens are both frustrated and concerned that the promised redevelopment has been studied to death and stalled for the past seven years. These citizens have had their faith in their hospital shaken because government funding cutbacks have forced the General and Marine Hospital to close beds and reduce staff.

They have also had their trust in government damaged by unkept promises made by successive Liberal and NDP governments. Since 1987 five Liberal and NDP Health ministers have announced and reannounced their intentions to approve the redevelopment of Collingwood hospital. To date, no sod has been turned and over $4 million in donations and pledges made by residents to help finance the redevelopment project sit idle in a local bank.

It is vital that the redevelopment of the Collingwood hospital be approved immediately. This green light will create construction jobs that are badly needed in the area. It may also restore the trust that has been lost between governments that have made promises and not kept them, promises that were made to the people of Ontario. They're sick and tired of politicians saying one thing and not taking action on what they've said.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION

Mr George Mammoliti (Yorkview): I rise today to introduce a victim, a victim who is also a constituent and a victim of the workers' compensation system.

Mr Claudio Aiello, who is a constituent of mine, got hurt a number of years ago at General Electric. He hurt his hand, his shoulder and his back. He was productive, he was working a few years ago, he was ready to get married, he had a fiancée, the plans for the marriage were almost there ready to go, and then he got hurt. That's when his nightmare started.

It started when he made his initial phone calls to the adjudicator of the Workers' Compensation Board. That same adjudicator, a few years later, still giving him runarounds, still doesn't necessarily understand what he's going through as a human being.

The decision review board hasn't helped either in terms of responding to his letters dealing with his concerns, and of course trying to understand Mr Aiello's concerns. It's very difficult for me as a member to stand up here and not be compassionate when he talks about the decision review board and the lack of understanding they have shown as well over the last few years. The office of the worker adviser hasn't helped him at all.

I would ask this House, and of course the Premier, when the reforms come about, to look at these particular problems and help people, the future Aiellos.

VISITEURS

Morin) : J'aimerais inviter tous les députés de l'Assemblée législative à souhaiter la bienvenue dans la Chambre à nos invités des parlements de la république du Bénin, du Québec, de la Suisse, de la France, du val d'Aoste, du Canada et de la Belgique qui sont assis dans la tribune du Président.

BUDGET

Hon Floyd Laughtren (Minister of Finance): I would like to advise the House that I intend to present the 1994 budget for Ontario to the Legislature and to my colleagues on Thursday, May 5, at 4 pm.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I'm looking forward to the budget on May 5. I guess I'd start by saying that last year when the minister and the Premier presented their budget, you may recall that jobs were the number one priority in that budget—

Interjection: Still are.

Mr Phillips: The fact is, you haven't delivered. The member across said, "Still are."

What we now see—this is now heading into the fifth year of the Rae government—

Hon Mr Laughtren: Talk about your numbers.

Mr Phillips: —is a record number of people out of work in the province. The Premier promised that things on the job front were going to get better. As this budget ended, the final three months of this budget, we saw 4,000 fewer people working in the province of Ontario than the year before. The Minister of Finance may shake his head, but those are the facts.

As we look in the rest of Canada, what's happening in the rest of Canada: 150,000 more people are working in the rest of Canada and 4,000 fewer people are working in the province of Ontario. That was the number one priority in the budget, and it's not working.

Among our young people there is a tragic level of unemployment. The reported number is approximately 20%, one out of five. The real number, when you look at the number that have simply dropped out—they're not enrolled in colleges or universities—is one out of three. So last year, as we looked at this budget, the number one priority was jobs and it has not worked.

I will say that on Friday my leader issued a report called Getting Ontario Working Again. I would hope that we would see, as this budget is prepared and presented, many of the ideas that are presented in this report that will get people working again.

The second thing that the budget promised was to get their fiscal house in order. I went back over the last three budgets. In the first Rae budget, taxes went up $1 billion. In the second budget, taxes went up $1 billion. Last year's budget, taxes went up $2 billion. Taxes have gone up dramatically.

Hon Mr Laughren: Are you talking about the Liberals?

Mr Phillips: What's actually happened is tax revenues have actually dropped, and so getting your fiscal house in order, Mr Premier, has not worked. You have taken taxes up dramatically and tax revenues have dropped. Something is fundamentally wrong in our economy.

The Premier's second key objective in last year's budget—first was to get jobs created in the province; it's not working—was to get our fiscal house in order. The more you've taken taxes up, the more tax revenues have dropped. If you go back three years, tax revenues have actually, as the Premier knows, dropped by $2 billion while you've taken taxes up by $4 billion. That is not working.

The third thing I wanted to say—

Mr Donald Abel (Wentworth North): Explain that.

Mr Phillips: "Explain that," you said? Yes, you should understand this. What you're doing is, you're taking the tax rates up and you're driving people out of the economy. If you don't understand that, you aren't listening to us.

The third thing I would say is that as we look at the budget, and I realize that for many this may not be a central issue, we will be looking at things like, is it your plan—this year, the year that just ended, the government theoretically sold $400 million worth of GO trains. I gather that in the budget that's coming up they may very well "sell" our ferries, "sell" our planes, "sell" our heavy equipment and then lease them back.

They are taking a holiday from making payments against our pension funds. The unfunded liability in our pension funds is roughly $10 billion. It is growing at the rate of approximately $800 million a year, but we're making no payments against that.

I will say to the Minister of Finance, we will look at the budget on the basis of: When are we going to start seeing jobs created, and how will this budget help that? When are we going to get our fiscal house in order? The third thing we will want to look at is the numbers. Have we listened to our Provincial Auditor, and will the budget that is presented in fact, as he wants, reflect in an accurate way the finances of this province?

Mr Gary Carr (Oakville South): I think everyone is anxious to see how this government is going to create jobs. In our pre-budget finance report we gave you about 19 recommendations, Minister of Finance, everything from taxation to what to do with the employer health payroll tax to what to do with workers' compensation to what to do with social assistance to what to do with regulations. We have given this government almost two and a half pages of recommendations of what needs to be done in this budget.

It starts very clearly that there cannot be any taxation increases in the province of Ontario. The difference between us and the Liberals is that we've been arguing that since the late 1980s, when we told you, "You can't continue to tax, spend and borrow like there was no tomorrow." Now tomorrow is here.

The last budget gave us the biggest tax grab in the history of this province, even bigger than the taxing of the Peterson government, which was at record levels. We had another $10-billion deficit in the last budget. We had another credit rating; it's been our third downgrading of credit ratings in three years. Over this year, we had the refusal of the Provincial Auditor to endorse the books, and we've had the start of a tax revolt with the underground economy, because people are saying that you don't spend their money wisely and they will do anything to avoid it.

The annual forecasts were off again. We were supposed to be getting the deficit down. We have not. We call it the deficit du jour. Each week that goes by there have to be other cuts. There is no long-term game plan.

In order to be credible, we laid out very clearly in our pre-budget report what we would like to see done in the province of Ontario. Two years ago, I sat on those hearings and we again gave recommendations to the Minister of Finance. He didn't listen on the issues of taxation, and had he listened, we would not have had to go through some of the measures we had, such as the social contract this year, because we warned you three years ago that you had to control government spending and that the only way we're going to create jobs is to allow the private sector to be successful. Instead, you did nothing but tax the living daylights out of every person and every business in the province of Ontario.

We gave our recommendations to this Minister of Finance. We hope on May 5 of this year you're finally going to start to listen to some of the ideas we've put forward for literally three and a half years.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Clearly, the Treasurer has gone about teasing the bears with this controversial statement here today, two pages to tell us the budget is on Thursday, May 5, 1994. It will be the fourth budget offered up by this socialist government in the province of Ontario. On May 6, the people in the province of Ontario will be breathing a collective sigh of relief, because more than likely, thank God, it will be the last budget offered up by the socialists in the province of Ontario.

I will also add, it is very true, the Liberal critic for Finance does mention the fact that by raising taxes they're generating less revenue. We know on this side of the House you could never accuse that Liberal government of that. When they raised taxes, they got a lot more money every time they increased those taxes. So if they want to give lessons, there's a crew over there who will listen very intently, because they got the raise in taxes part right; they just didn't get the getting more money part right, and that was the difference.

I will look forward to this next budget, because the Treasurer has promised, for the first time in a budget he has brought down, no tax increases. To the beleaguered taxpayers in this province, that is the first and most important thing that any Treasurer in this province representing any party could offer up to those taxpayers.

Never was it made more clear than yesterday, when this Treasurer went out and reduced the taxes on the brew-your-own breweries. That was reduced, and we know why it was reduced: because the speculation was that it would generate some $5 million in extra taxes and in fact it's come in pathetically below the $5 million, thereby proving the point we've been trying to explain to the socialists since September 6, 1990.

They're at the tax wall. Just because you raise the taxes just means you drive more businesses and more honest citizens underground, and that's not where they want to be in this province. They want to be paying their fair share, but you've pushed them to the wall, Mr Treasurer, and you've pushed them directly to the wall with your previous three budgets.

Lastly, in this upcoming budget, I would like the Treasurer to know that job creation is an important cog within this caucus and within this party and this province, but you must be cognizant of government spending, and this budget will be very interesting in how you delicately balance what you've claimed you are going to do for the people.

ORAL QUESTIONS TAXATION

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My first question is for the Minister of Finance. As our treasury critic has indicated, on Friday we released a report called Getting Ontario Working Again, and it is the report of our task force on jobs. In this report we set out a comprehensive framework for getting people back to work again.

The minister has challenged our Finance critic to talk about our numbers, and I do so with pride, because the goal we set out in this report is to get unemployment in this province down to 6% because this government's projections of 9% unemployment are completely unacceptable.

It is quite clear that last year's budget is going to fail to reach its job targets, and one of the reasons it's going to fail to reach the job creation targets is because of the $2 billion in job-killing taxes that were in that budget. It was made very clear to our task force that it would be necessary to reduce taxes in order to get people working again, and I realize the minister has finally begun to acknowledge that and we too were pleased to see that he had decided to reduce the taxes on the you-brews. That had been a vibrant and growing industry until this government put a tax on it in last year's budget, and we've since seen some 500 people laid off and some 40 businesses close.

I ask the minister: Given the fact that you have finally acknowledged that the you-brew tax was forcing people to lay off employees and to close their doors, can we now expect, as we look towards the next budget, that you are examining the whole host of job-killing taxes you introduced last year and that you will be taking steps to determine what other ones should now be cut?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): I appreciate the reference to the official opposition's task force on jobs. When I was reading it, I could not help but notice the numbers and even do a little bit of analysis of the numbers contained therein. I don't want to be mean to the leader of the official opposition or to tease the bears on the benches opposite, but I did want to tell her directly that she's wrong on the numbers in her task force on unemployment, she's wrong on the numbers on job creation and she's wrong on the level of deficit that would be achieved by the actions that you recommend in your task force report. Your task force report is full of holes, and I hope you will not ask me to use it as a benchmark for any future actions we'll take on this side of the House.

Mrs McLeod: I was very pleased about the fact that what we have set out in our jobs task force report has received independent confirmation from economic specialists that it is indeed balanced and realistic and would work. I say to this Finance minister that the clear evidence that his approach has not worked is seen in the fact that there are 4,000 fewer people working in this province at the end of March this year than there were at the end of last year. That is clear evidence of what does not work.

I take the Treasurer back to my question of whether or not they are prepared to look at job-killing taxes and remove them as he approaches his budget. I want to give him an example of one tax that I believe he should cut.

Treasurer, last spring you announced that you were going to put a new tax on ferries in eastern Ontario. The communities that were affected have argued long and hard that those new fees, a tax by any other name, will hurt tourism and that they will kill jobs. The Premier said the government would do a study on it, and the study was done, but it didn't look at the impact of the fees and it didn't look at the impact of those fees on the local economies.

In absolute frustration, the people in one of those affected communities, the people in Glenora, did their own study, and they found that the fees on the Glenora ferry alone will cause job losses and that the province will actually lose $48,000 in revenue as a result of those job losses.

So, Minister, I ask you: Given this kind of evidence of not only lost jobs but also revenues lost to your own budget, why would you proceed with these fees? If the fees are only going to lower revenues, why don't you cancel them and save the jobs that would be lost?

Hon Mr Laughren: I'm glad that the leader of the official opposition at least now is calling them fees and not taxes. If you use the service and pay a fee for using the service, I don't think that's unreasonable at all. I see nothing unreasonable about that whatsoever.

When the leader of the official opposition talks to us about job-killing taxes, and in her report makes special references to the employer health tax as a job-killing tax, I want simply to remind her who it was that brought in the employer health tax in this province. It was the Liberal Party when it was in office. And if the leader of the official opposition doesn't like using herself as a benchmark, perhaps she could look to her cousins in Ottawa, who raised UI premiums by as much as 7% in January of this year. There needs to be at least a modicum of consistency when the leader of the official opposition puts her questions.

Mrs McLeod: We are at least prepared to deal with today's realities, and that's what our task force report does. I would suggest that people who are prepared to deal with today's realities stand here and look at what is happening in Ontario today. The leader of the third party would not be voting for the Frank Miller budget and the increase in personal income tax that was in that particular budget. Today's realities are different, and I take the Treasurer back to this very specific example of a tax by any other name that is going to cost jobs and cost him revenue in his next budget.

Minister, let me focus on what you're doing here. You hope to collect $190,000 with these new fees—a tax by another name. It's going to cost you $68,000 a year to collect the fees. The Glenora study—this is just on the Glenora ferry alone—shows that the local tourist operators will lose $375,000 in business and this will cost you $80,000 in lost revenues. The pick-your-own farmers will lose $150,000 in business and that will cost you $33,000 in lost revenues. Added to all of that, 45 jobs will be taxed out of existence.

Minister, do you not realize that this is another case just like the you-brews where you are taxing away jobs and strangling the economic recovery? I ask how you can justify that kind of tax increase that is both going to kill jobs and cost you revenues.

Hon Mr Laughren: I suppose we could have a debate on the numbers contained in the question by the leader of the official opposition, but I would simply say to her that I do not think it's unreasonable for people to pay a fee for the services they receive on something like a ferry. I just don't think that's unreasonable. Whether it's riding on the TTC or whether it's riding on a ferry, I don't think that's unreasonable.

I know the leader of the official opposition wants everything to be free, to have no taxes, to have the deficit going down, to have job creation but no cost to anyone. Get real. It is not possible to do all that you want to do, given the promises that you try to extract from us for not increasing taxes.

You've just taken me to task for raising taxes in the last budget. At the same time, your critic is on his feet castigating us for the level of the deficit week after week, which is his job and he does it well, but at the same time, you cannot have it both ways. Where do you stand on the deficit? Where you do stand on the level of taxation? I can just say to you as the leader of the official opposition that I think it's time you put your positions in front of the people of this province.

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My effort today, once again, is to try and find out where the government stands and what the government is planning to do, so I will again go to the Minister of Finance, on another issue.

Minister, in late March you announced that you will be keeping funding to schools, hospitals, colleges and universities and municipalities at last year's level in order to preserve essential services and to save jobs.

Municipalities greeted that announcement with pleasure, but they recognized that this particular program, the commitment on unconditional grants, is only 16% of the transfers they receive from the province. They're still waiting for the other shoe to drop. They're waiting to hear from you about your commitment specifically to road funding transfers, which are tied to billions of dollars' worth of local road capital projects.

I have in my hand a copy of a government letter which was sent out to all municipalities last week warning them that the province's road funding budget will not be finalized until May and that there will be "significant reductions" in road funding.

The Association of Municipalities of Ontario is concerned that you may be prepared to cut road grants by as much as 20%, which would mean a $73-million cut in maintenance funding and a $73-million cut in new construction funding. Perhaps even more significantly, according to the association of municipalities, that would mean 1,100 fewer jobs this year.

Minister, can you explain why you have decided to break your promise to match last year's transfers to the municipalities and why road transfers would be cut and 1,100 jobs would then be threatened?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): Mr Speaker, I wonder if I could refer that question to my good friend and very competent Minister of Transportation.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): The dilemma: the impasse of having municipalities that are anxiously awaiting each and every year the base capital transfer payment, the money that flows from the province to more than 850 client groups.

Last year we were talking in terms of $714 million. That's money that left Queen's Park and went to 882 clients. Part of the money was used for maintenance—Harry Smith, the grader operator during a snow storm; and part of the money was used for capital, fixing the potholes in a small and remote community: $714 million.

The announcement hasn't been made, but I know and I remain confident that the commitment of the province will make each and every recipient and partner proud of the money they shall receive. It is not our intention, never was, never will be, to unload, to make a transition in the negative from the province to the municipality. There's no shell game here. Let's wait and see, and you can look to the future with confidence when it comes to transfer payments.

Mrs McLeod: Do we assume, then, that the minister's response to that question is the Treasurer's response to the concerned letter from the association of municipalities that has been sent to the Treasurer today?

I would remind you that the construction season for road projects is beginning, that municipalities have to know now what they'll be receiving in road funding so they can firm their tenders, so they can sign contracts, that you're now making them wait until May to even start making those decisions.

I would remind you that last year, even with the social contract and the expenditure cuts, you were still able to tell municipalities what they would receive for road funding early in the year, because you recognized then that it was important. In fact, at that time you said you were protecting capital funding to help support jobs and economic growth. Why has the agenda changed this year, when you promised to maintain transfers?

While the Premier is going on boasting about his record on capital spending, you're playing hide-and-seek with the municipalities of this province. I ask you directly, why are you continuing to delay the announcements on road funding? Tell us exactly how many projects you expect to be cancelled and how many jobs will be lost.

Hon Mr Pouliot: I can appreciate the anxiety, but when we're talking about jobs, there's nothing phenomenal here. There's no hidden agenda. This isn't a shell game.

We're moving full steam ahead on four subway lines for public transit. The largest project in North America, Highway 407, is going full steam ahead. Let's talk about jobs: You're talking about more than 20,000 jobs. No work has been done on public transit vis-à-vis the subway in the past 10 years. We're moving not on one, not on two, not on three, but on all four lines.

We've formed a corporation. We're spending more money on highways than ever before. We're full partners in the provincial-federal-municipal infrastructure program: more money, more jobs, more women and more men going to work.

We've very much aware of the need at the municipal level to be able to set your budget. It wasn't too long ago that most municipalities took full advantage of their allocations under the "interim tax levy," 50% based on last year's figures. I too, coming from a small and remote community in northern Ontario, can relate directly: I have been there; I am still there. There will be more jobs than ever before, more money from capital transportation going back to the taxpayers via the municipalities.

Mrs McLeod: How can we believe what the minister has just said when there is a letter that has gone out saying there will be a significant reduction? What does "significant reduction" mean? This minister is playing games with municipalities in this province and he is playing games with 1,100 jobs that could be jeopardized by this delay and by this significant cut in funding. There is an absurdity to this, because the letter to the municipalities asks for supplementary grant proposals to be made. It says, "We recognize it will be more difficult for you to assess your supplementary funding needs without knowing your base allocation."

While this government is playing games with municipalities, it is quite clear that it is moving full steam ahead with its own capital project announcements.

Over the past few weeks we have watched the Premier conducting a kind of trial election campaign, handing out provincial capital grants while the municipalities are being left to sit on hundreds of millions of dollars in capital projects that could be starting right now. In fact, at the same time in one day last week that the Premier was handing out about $30 million in capital grants, the municipalities were being told their road funding would be cut.

Why is the funding for the Premier's pre-election campaign announcements ready to go while the road grants are being delayed? Are 1,100 road construction jobs being jeopardized because you can't put a Jobs Ontario logo on them?

Hon Mr Pouliot: With the highest of respect, I know, given the high office, that the Leader of the Opposition has better things to do with her time allocation, which is limited, and I appreciate and respect that, than scrutinizing and reading between the lines of messages that appear in a brown envelope from an anonymous source.

Let me reiterate what I have said before in a nutshell, in one-liners: People will be pleased when they see the cheque in the mail. You have the capacity to be positive.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Pouliot: The Leader of the Opposition keeps interrupting. I don't know if it's a matter of having had a difficult childhood or refusing to understand what I'm saying, plain and simple.

The work will be done. There will be more jobs than ever before, capital, rolling stock, highways. People will be working more than they ever have before. It's a success story. Why don't we share in it and resist the temptation of parochial and partisan politics? People are going to work. They're bringing a paycheque back home. It's good news for all Ontarians.

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): I appreciate the answers from the minister, who demonstrates on a daily basis that he's still in childhood, from what we hear.

I was intrigued with the suggestions of the leader of the Liberal Party, the party that in a very short, five-year period hiked more taxes and had a bigger bureaucracy and higher spending than in the history of the province of Ontario. To stand and have the gall to suggest that taxes are too high suggests to me a significant case of amnesia.

TAXATION

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My question is to the Minister of Finance. Last year, Minister, you announced a 26-cent-a-litre tax on brew-your-own businesses. In eight months that tax killed 150 jobs and 30 businesses, and despite this devastating impact on the industry, you only collected one fifth of the tax revenue that you had projected.

Yesterday you said—quite frankly, I congratulate you for recognizing and acknowledging it and I hope I'm quoting correctly from what I read in the press reports, because you didn't say it in the House—that lowering the you-brew tax will actually increase your revenues to $3 million annually.

This is exactly what we have been trying to tell a succession of treasurers for 10 years in the province of Ontario. It is exactly what we have been telling you in your tenure as Treasurer for the last three years.

Now that you have recognized that we have hit the tax wall—it's a wall beyond which, when you hike taxes you actually get less money, and if you will cut taxes you will get more money—would you acknowledge and have you examined, two weeks before you present your budget, other tax rates that are at or in excess of the tax wall where you could actually get more money by cutting rates? Could you give us that analysis?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): If I might respond first to some of the comments in the leader of the third party's preamble in which he, I thought, was a bit unfair to the official opposition—

Hon Mr Laughren: Wait for it, wait for it—a bit unfair to the official opposition in making references to their tax increases. Does he forget that it was the Liberal Party of this province that promised to reduce the sales tax by 1% in the middle of the last election campaign? Give them credit for something. I think you're being too unfair to the official opposition.

I would say to the leader of the third party not to read too much or to generalize from the particular on the reduction in taxes on the you-brew establishments. I think a better example would be what happened when we lowered cigarette taxes in the province.

We know that with a dramatic decrease in taxes, revenues to the province will drop, even given the increased sales, particularly to young people, by about $500 million this fiscal year. I wouldn't want the leader of the third party to generalize and come to the same conclusion that Ronald Reagan did, that if you lower taxes your revenues automatically go up.

Mr Harris: No, I have not forgotten the 1% on the road to Damascus in the final weeks of the campaign. They seem to be hung up on this 1% solution; that we'll forget the massive billions of bureaucracy and spending and tax increases.

However, let me by way of supplementary deal with the issue at hand. The you-brew tax I assume you cut because you understood you were beyond the wall on that tax instrument, and that cutting the tax in half would actually increase the revenue and produce jobs and economic activity, get more people working, more people spending, more people investing in that area.

There are dozens of taxes, Treasurer, that we believe you can cut. You and the Liberals have hiked taxes 65 times since 1985 alone, and the result of those tax hikes is a $10-billion deficit and half a million people who are unemployed. Of those 65 tax increases, 11 were personal income tax hikes.

Given that you and the Liberals hiked personal income taxes 11 times, given that the personal income tax rate in Ontario now is among the highest of all the jurisdictions we must compete with, will you in two weeks' time in your budget cut personal income taxes on hardworking Ontario families so we can let them spend some of the dollars and create some of the economic activity and the jobs? Will you cut income taxes?

Hon Mr Laughren: I would not want to pre-empt the event on May 5, which is the budget. I wouldn't want to write it by some kind of quirky committee system here on the floor of the Legislature.

But the leader of the third party has made references in both his question and his supplementary to the you-brew tax. I believe revenues will go up as a result of the tax decrease on you-brews, because that was a struggling, infant industry going through a real struggle as it tries to find a niche in the marketplace, so I do think that was the right decision.

But I also know that all of our revenues are hard-found revenues. The taxpayers obviously are making their contribution to the continuing provision of essential services in this province, and I would not want to mislead anyone into thinking that massive tax reductions can happen at the same time we preserve the essential services in this province, which everyone tells me they want to preserve.

Mr Harris: The Treasurer refers to an industry that was threatened and struggling. I want to tell the Treasurer that the middle class of this province, families, individuals, hardworking Ontarians, feel threatened, they're struggling, they're concerned about jobs.

One of the greatest barriers to job creation and why they feel threatened is the high rate of personal income tax. I want the Treasurer to know that. In addition to that, 85% of all jobs in Ontario are created by small business. In every community where our task force on small business visited we were told that payroll taxes were among the most punitive taxes on jobs—the most punitive taxes for them and the most punitive taxes on jobs.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business told you earlier this year that “without question, payroll taxes are a deterrent to new job creation.”

The Liberals introduced a whopper payroll tax for health care in 1989. Three years later, you increased that tax to include self-employed business people. For the sake of jobs and for the sake of investment in Ontario, will you eliminate the payroll tax on all small businesses in your upcoming budget two weeks from now?

Hon Mr Laughren: The leader of the third party is correct when he indicates that the official opposition, when it was in government, did introduce the employer health tax. But to be fair, the health care premiums were abolished at that time. The leader of the third party knows that the total employer health tax means over $2 billion in revenues to the province, so in total that's a lot of money.

The leader of the third party, to be fair, I believe was referring only to the small-business aspect of it, which is already at a 50% rate of what large business pays as an employer health tax. I think the leader of the third party was asking if the small-business component could be eliminated. I appreciate all suggestions when it comes to dealing with the tax system, and I will certainly allow that suggestion to roll around in my head for the next couple of weeks.

TENDERING PROCESS

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I'd like to read briefly from Hansard from the Minister of Transportation's statement yesterday with respect to the Highway 407 tendering process. He said: "I don't know if it was the lowest bidder. I understand that negotiations are still going on."

Minister, I'm rather alarmed by yesterday's answer, as you might suspect. If you don't know that the winning consortium for the 407 project was the lowest bidder, why have you chosen a winning bidder, and how can you justify leaving such important decisions in the hands of non-elected officials?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): I appreciate the follow-through on the question. First, you will allow me to help my friend the member opposite by saying emphatically—not that it matters at all, but just a mise au point—that I was not at the fund-raising dinner. I don't think it matters, but you had assumed, with respect, that I was there, but I wasn't.

Regarding the question, my understanding of the process is that the criterion was value for money. Which of the two consortia was to meet that crucial, that vital criterion in terms of getting the best shake for the dollars of the taxpayers? Not necessarily the lowest bidder.

At the very beginning of the process, and it's important, cabinet chose to distance itself, because of the size of the contract and because of the innovation of the capital corporation, from the process, so the vacuum had to be filled. What they did, and I think in their wisdom, sir, was to appoint four deputy ministers to guide the process through and actually make the decision.

Today we have a winning consortium, a successful consortium. There are still three to four weeks of negotiations vis-à-vis the contingencies to tidy up the final package, for instance. We're not involved in the process. We have the jurisdictional capacity, the mandate, to appoint people—that's what we did—and to monitor the process to make sure that everything was aboveboard. We hired the reputable firm of Price Waterhouse and they're the people who can certify as to the integrity and the good flow of the process.

Mr Turnbull: Minister, I'm reminded of Harry Truman who had a sign on his desk which said, "The buck stops here." There's no chance that any of your ministers, particularly you, sir, are ever going to have a sign like that on your desk.

You've just talked about value for money and the best shake for the taxpayer. The financial capacity of the winning consortium, CHIC, has been called into question. Matthews Group, which was one of the original members of the consortium, went bankrupt during the proposal process. Armbrö Holdings Inc, the Brampton-based road builder, filed for restructuring under the companies' creditors act during the proposal call. What assurance can you give to the taxpayers of the financial capacity of this group to complete the project?

Hon Mr Pouliot: I'll go back again to the monitoring done by Price Waterhouse. If you mention one, two, let's say, individual companies, you have to keep in mind that this is not a catalyst but those are components. They're part of a larger body which is the corporation, the consortium, and the consortium can have, with subcontractors, as many as 80 to 140.

Suffice it that in most instances, they are reputable, they are solvent and they have a track record which will lead, individually and in the collective, to the ability to deliver the project on time, because it will be a contractual arrangement, within budget. You have the assurance that their shoulders are broad enough to bring in this well over $1-billion project. They will help us create more than 20,000 jobs.

I appreciate the interest. What is at stake here is simply the largest highway project in North America in 1994: 3,000 jobs this year, and by the time of its completion, gradually well above 20,000 jobs with a multiplier of two and half dollars for every dollar that is put in the project.

Mr Turnbull: Minister, every day that you stand up here, you demonstrate over and over again that you don't understand what you're doing. Let me assure you, and you can check with your ministry officials, that when you're in a consortium, you are not obliged to bail out other members of that consortium. Okay? Get that clear before you answer me this time.

As you correctly pointed out, this is a $1-billion project. It's a $1-billion project that is being funded by the public sector, not the private sector, as the Premier said when he announced it. Your lack of knowledge in this whole field indicates incompetence. We need full disclosure of all these details. You owe it to the taxpayer, sir: full disclosure of this very, very odious deal.

I want you to commit today to reveal the contents of the winning bid in all the details so that all the members here can examine how you are spending public funds.

Hon Mr Pouliot: There is no Pearson spectacle when we refer to the 407. There is no facsimile of the questionable deals at SkyDome. There is nothing cartel-like or monopolistic. When the member above says that on a daily basis, whenever given the opportunity, I display a lack of knowledge which is obvious to all—

Mr Turnbull: And incompetence.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Well, I have been reading stock pages for well above 30 years, not always unsuccessfully. Maybe that's one reason why the member opposite is sitting there and I'm sitting here.

The member mentions that the public, the taxpayers of Ontario, will pay for the 407. We have established a corporation. The corporation will go to the marketplace. The corporation will borrow money. But borrowings have to be paid back, so when people give a loonie for their county, when they take a token out of their pocket and they put it in the slot before they drive on the highway, or electronically while they're using the highway, the money will be gathered in a pool. You'll go back to the banks and the financiers and pay your debt. The users will finance the building of the 407 over a period of 25, 30 or 35 years.

It is innovative. The cost of the project is reflected over the life of the project. It's a win-win-win situation to alleviate the oversubscribed traffic on the 401. We now have the 407. You have a choice. More than 20,000 people who are directly involved with the project sure appreciate the financing aspect of this project.

VISITOR

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Would you please stop the clock for a minute.

I would like to inform the members of the assembly that we have in the Speaker's Gallery today the consul general of Poland, Mr André Brzozowski. Please join me in welcoming our guest.

TOURISM INDUSTRY

Mr Hugh O'Neil (Quinte): My question today is to the Treasurer. You have called upon the opposition parties to make suggestions to assist you on improving your deficit position. My suggestion relates to the tourism industry, which as you know has been devastated over the last few years: large job losses, bankruptcies, a huge drop in the number of tourists visiting our province and a large drop in the tourism tax revenue to your ministry; in all, a Canadian travel deficit of $7.7 billion last year.

Over the last few years, our tourism marketing budget has been reduced from $25.5 million in 1987-88 to approximately $13.6 million in 1993-94. Of this $13.6 million, only $5.8 million is spent on marketing in the US and only $2.3 million in the overseas markets.

In Quebec, where they see the importance of tourism, they have retained their foreign offices to advertise and promote their tourism, and in their recent budget they have allocated an additional $10 million a year for each of three years to promote tourism. On the US market alone, they will be spending between $9 million and $10 million this year, versus our $5.8 million.

In your upcoming provincial budget, will you consider transferring from within your budget additional funds to the tourism marketing budget, a move I believe will greatly increase our tourism numbers and improve our tourism tax revenues, provide jobs and revive our tourism industry in the province of Ontario?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): I would be the last person to undervalue the worth of tourism to the Ontario economy and to specific regions within the province, but I await the member's supplementary, because I'm sure he's going to tell me from which ministry or which service he'd take the money that he would put into tourism.

Mr O'Neil: Of course, Treasurer, this really points out one of the real problems with you and with your government, and that is that if you're going to bring in tax revenues, you have to know where to spend the money and you have to know where to save.

What I'm suggesting to you is that, with the multiplier effect of spending additional funds in the Ontario marketing budget, you will attract millions—maybe not millions, but hundreds of thousands—of new tourists to the province of Ontario, giving you additional tax revenues, not only from what they spend but also from the jobs you will create. When we look today at the value of the American market and their economy improving, and when you're looking at the value of their money, there are millions of dollars in revenue for you and your government, yet you don't seem to be able to see that.

What I'm asking is, will you look at spending additional moneys in the marketing budgets which will give you a very large return? The tourism industry really needs it.

Hon Mr Laughren: As I said, I'm not quarrelling for a moment with the member's assertion about the importance of tourism and the revenues that flow to the province from it. But there is almost an unlimited list of projects on which we could spend more money and the argument could be made that more money would come back to us. At the end of the day, some more money will come back to us, but our expenditures will be going through the roof as well.

These are not the 1980s. I appreciate the fact that in the 1980s, when your party was in power, you were able to spend, spend and spend. That is no longer the case. We have put a lid on expenditure growth in this province and we're going to continue to keep to that commitment. It's up to the Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation, of course, to allocate the dollars within her ministry.

LANDFILL

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs, as a person who sits around the cabinet table. I read with interest last week a notice that you have sent to the people of Hastings-Peterborough. I'd like to quote from that notice, which is dated April 13 and is addressed to the people of Hastings-Peterborough. It talks about the selection of dump sites as being a municipal process. You say that "selecting dump sites is a municipal process driven by county government working within certain guidelines that were set up by the Liberals in the 1980s." Is this the policy of the NDP government?

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): The member is quoting from a press release which was quoted in local papers in my riding. Yes, I was explaining to the constituents in my riding that the responsibility for the selection of dump sites was given to a committee which hired a consultant and it was through a process that was set up back in the 1980s in order to select the best site for a landfill site in Peterborough county.

Mr Tilson: Having said what you've just said, would you be prepared to tell the municipalities of Caledon, York and Durham why they don't have a similar process?

Hon Mr Buchanan: I'm not responsible for Caledon and those other areas in terms of what goes on in terms of the GTA and finding landfill sites. I can speak with some assurance about what goes on in Peterborough county in terms of landfill sites on agricultural land. I'm sure the member knows that our ministry will be commenting on landfill sites in terms of whether or not, through agricultural land, we will have some input into that process.

I can't really comment on the IWA process. That's up to the Ministry of Environment and Energy.

FOOD LABELLING

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. Recently I attended the annual Oxford federation of agriculture conference held with municipal, provincial and federal elected officials. The theme of this year's meeting was Oxford 2000 and how the local agricultural community is preparing for the next century. One of the issues raised that day was the question of food labelling. The cattle producers, who have lost a lot of market share to imported beef, are very concerned about this matter.

Minister, can you tell the Legislature what you are doing to ensure that when consumers purchase fresh meat in the grocery store, they can make an informed choice by having the meat labelled by its country or province of origin?

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): The member raises a good point, because certainly all products that we normally buy in other stores are labelled with country of origin. In the province of Ontario we have responsibility for labelling of grades. One of the things we are looking very seriously at doing soon is to be able to grade fresh meat so that it will be labelled with the grade so we'll know whether it's grade A or whatever the grade labelling is, and we can bring that regulation into play hopefully very soon.

We are consulting with the industry, though, to make sure that we're doing something in terms of the retailers and the producers so that we're bringing in the right kinds of regulations that will not be an impediment to doing business in the province either.

Mr Sutherland: This initiative will not only have significant benefits to beef producers in Ontario but will also have significant benefits to consumers. It will allow them to make informed choices about purchasing fresh meat, particularly if the meat is from countries that do not have the same high standards of inspection as does Canada. When can both beef producers and Ontario consumers expect to see labelling of fresh meat by country of origin in Ontario grocery stores?

Hon Mr Buchanan: Unfortunately, perhaps, when it comes to having regulations to label country of origin, we have the federal government and the provincial governments with joint responsibility. That will require us talking to my federal counterpart, which I've already done by correspondence, asking that we do that, because it would be very important for the meat producers, not only the cattlemen but certainly the pork, chicken and other producers, to have country of origin labelling on all fresh products.

I have talked to my counterpart in Ottawa. We very much hope that we can get such regulations in place by this fall at the latest. I look forward to the cooperation of the federal minister on this issue.

ARTS AND CULTURAL FUNDING

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): I have a question for my friend the Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation. It's a matter that I raised with the Minister of Citizenship some days ago when the Tourism minister wasn't here. It concerns the public government funding of that writers' conference that the Writers' Union of Canada is convening that white authors need not, and indeed may not, attend.

Frankly, I don't care what organization organizes what meeting and I don't even mind if the organization chooses to say, "I'm sorry, no white people may attend this." What I get concerned about is when the state, the provincial government, indeed the minister's ministry, says: "We want to sponsor this. We're going to provide $15,000 worth of funding for this conference."

I just want to put it to the minister and ask her not to hide behind the notion that this is an arts council grant and it's independent and it has to make its own choices. I want the minister to tell me whether she thinks that it is a good idea, that it is good public policy that this kind of conference receive the sanction of the provincial government and funds from the taxpayers of Ontario in the form of financial sponsorship.

Hon Anne Swarbrick (Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation): First of all, as the member knows full well in his reference, the $15,000 was not actually a grant from my ministry; it was from the Ontario Arts Council. None the less, it is my position that it is not the position of this government to tell the writers' union just what they can hold a conference on and what they can't hold a conference on.

I understand the controversy and I understand the feelings around it, but what this reminds me of is my own days in the women's movement as we as women tried to grapple with, should we sit down and have conferences trying to explore our feelings around issues and how to empower ourselves and deal with issues that included men right within those groups, or did we need to have some time to be able to sit down and meet with ourselves and talk together? We often decided we needed to have some time to be able to sit down and meet and share concerns together.

It seems to me that's what the writers' union has decided to allow to happen in this situation. It doesn't seem to me that it's my position to tell them that's not for them to do.

Mr Sorbara: My problem is that the minister says this is good public policy, and I find that very strange. I remember, when I was very young, my mother telling me about public beaches in Toronto which said, "No Jews Allowed," and the politicians of the day said that this was a good thing, because it's important that people bathe separately. It's the same sort of thing.

I want to suggest to my friend the minister that she pick up a little volume called The Disuniting of America, written by none less than a very pre-eminent American author named Arthur Schlesinger, who says that the ethnicity rage currently going through America—I'm paraphrasing there—"not only diverts attention from the real needs but exacerbates the problem, creating a society fragmented into ethnic communities. The culture of ethnicity exacerbates differences, intensifies resentments, antagonisms and drives ever deeper the awful wedges between races and nationalities."

I'm saying it's not a matter of one writers' conference. It's a question of whether or not, as the Culture minister, this separation, this statement that white authors cannot attend, is something that you publicly support and is the position of your government that it is deserving of support. Yes or no?

Hon Ms Swarbrick: I don't accept at all the analogy of the writers' union's conference for writers, particular writers, as being equivalent to the days in Toronto when we had signs on the beaches saying "No Dogs or Jews Allowed." I was raised by my family to understand the horrendous discrimination that meant to powerless people in the society who needed to be able to have defence and to be able to be restored to power in this society.

It seems to me that there is a time for us, as groups, to come together and work together, and there are some times for groups that have been traditionally disempowered and are not enjoying the power that some of us do in society to be able to come together and to share perspectives themselves.

I don't think that the member for York Centre would be advocating that this government cease the funding to Italian associations that I know he very much supports. It seems to me that if this government should be helping to continue to further the funding to Italian associations, where groups for instance will speak together in Italian, which in itself can be somewhat exclusive, I support that funding. I would hope he would have some understanding of the value of these writers' conferences the writers' union is sponsoring and of their right to make their own decisions about what workshops they sponsor.

BUDGET

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. For the last year and a half, you've been standing in the House and indicating that you're now keeping comprehensive statistics on social assistance in this province. Perhaps part of that is because of the 1992 Provincial Auditor's report, which identified these weaknesses, and in particular in the "Maintenance and Child Support" section.

I'll remind the minister, in that report the auditor noted that the ministry procedures are not followed in maintenance cases. The ministry's policies requiring that child support cases are reviewed periodically to assess the status of support payments, waivers on support, should be reviewed if a parent is available and able to contribute, but this was not the case being followed by your ministry.

My question to you is: How many support-paying fathers are defaulting and now seeking social assistance in this province? And the corollary, of course: How many new applications for social assistance are we receiving from mothers because their ex-spouses are no longer making their child support, court-ordered payments?

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): I don't have those figures available with me, but I'd be quite happy to provide those to the member and to anyone else who would be interested. I can tell him in a general way that my understanding is that the situation has significantly improved as a result of the processes that have been put into place. But as I say, I don't have the exact figures to share with the member at this moment.

Mr Jackson: That is not what I am led to believe when I talk to various people around the province who are dealing with this matter. In fact, it certainly isn't the undertaking you took before the public accounts committee and the Provincial Auditor that you would pursue this case more vigorously.

I'm concerned about a case which I'd like to bring to your attention that I believe is more common than not. It involves a Mr Johnston from Hamilton who, before a unified family court judge, made application for a variance and had $20,000 of his accumulated arrears written off and his ongoing payments suspended. He too, like his ex-wife and their daughter, is now on welfare in the province of Ontario.

Minister, why are you not monitoring the cost implications of this growing trend, especially considering the fact that the Attorney General administers the family support plan? The Attorney General's office is involved through the decision, yet the Ministry of Community and Social Services is in fact the party in court seeking these funds on behalf of the Treasurer.

We're seeing this level of write-off occurring far too frequently. Will you please return to this House and give a fuller report as to the amount of these write-offs, which are increasing the cost of social assistance, in our view most unnecessarily?

Hon Mr Silipo: I'd be very happy to come back and provide both the member and other members of the House with more detailed responses I have undertaken to do. I will just again reiterate for the member that it's important that we keep in mind in this situation that I think the information I'll be able to share with the member will show that the situation has significantly improved since we instituted the family support plan. I'll be happy to share that information.

There are some things that continue to concern us, but I think all of this has to be done in the knowledge that if people aren't out there and aren't working, they obviously have to be given some leeway in their ability to be able to comply. But I think the efforts that we've undertaken in this area have vastly improved the situation, and it has meant that fewer people, particularly fewer women, have had to rely on social assistance in order to get what is legitimately theirs through support.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY

Mr Bob Huget (Sarnia): My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Minister, you are aware that in November of last year the Lambton county council passed a motion to allow the warden of the county to view the names and addresses of all welfare recipients in the county. That includes people in my riding of Sarnia.

Council's motion outraged many of my constituents, both those who receive benefits and those who don't. In spite of that, Lambton council had the opportunity to rescind the motion in March, but chose not to.

I am very concerned about this motion for two reasons: First, this is a blatant abuse of the Municipal Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and, second, this motion further stigmatizes and humiliates those people in Lambton county who find that they are in genuine need of assistance.

Minister, I know through writing to you and discussions with you that you share my concerns, but, frankly, concern is not enough. Something needs to be done. Everyone in Lambton county has a right to dignity and a right to privacy. This motion takes those rights away from people who are receiving welfare in my community. What will you do today to have this motion rescinded by Lambton council?

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): I want to thank the member for raising this question in the House, because I know that this is an issue that concerns him and, quite frankly, concerns me and the ministry as well very seriously.

We have been quite clear since—I guess it was about December when the council passed the resolution that it did—that we consider the actions they have taken to be contrary to the municipal freedom of information act and contrary to our directions under the General Welfare Assistance Act. We don't believe that the warden or any other councillor has the right to receive the names of people who are on social assistance and we've been very clear in that.

I can tell the member that, given the fact that this resolution is still on the books of the council, we are in the process of communicating again with the warden and indicating that if they do not take steps to rescind the resolution, we will take steps to discontinue electronic funds transfers to that municipality. We want to be very clear that we expect compliance with the legislation and we will take all steps necessary to ensure compliance is adhered to.

Mr Huget: Thank you very much, Minister, and thank you for your commitment on a very important matter. I only hope that Lambton county council will heed your advice, rescind the motion and this will finally be over. But I have one concern about discontinuing the electronic funds transfer. If council does not rescind the motion and the ministry takes this action, is there any chance at all that there could be delays in recipients obtaining their cheques?

Hon Mr Silipo: I think again that's also a useful point. Obviously, as we proceed in this situation we want to monitor very closely and we will monitor very closely what happens. We hope that the message we are giving to this municipality will be quite clear in terms of their understanding how seriously we take the issue of confidentiality of clients' records and that it is something that has to be respected in everything that all of us do to continue to manage the system.

We will obviously continue to monitor the situation to ensure that there are no delays in the payment to individual recipients who are eligible for general welfare assistance and we will take further steps, as necessary, to ensure that.

AGRICULTURE PROGRAMS

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. Minister, last week you said that in measuring the effectiveness of your ministry and your programs, we should not just use money as the only criterion. You mentioned also bankruptcies. Maybe we should just set that record straight.

The Tories over here left their government with 356 farm bankruptcies in 1985. After five years the Liberal government bankruptcies were down to 18 in 1990. Now, after four years of NDP rule, you're telling us they're back up to 58. But then, you and the Tories are much the same when it comes to farmers.

But let's look at one of those non-cost initiatives the minister and the government say they support. Bob Rae and the NDP government have promised the AgriCorp legislation since they took office. The legislation is supposed to streamline and improve the delivery of crop insurance and stabilization. Bills 63, 64 and 65 were introduced in June 1992 and are still awaiting second reading.

Minister, you said on June 11:

"The idea for an agency to deliver safety net programs has been around a long time. The creation of the AgriCorp is another example of how this government is committed to working with the producers and others to ensure the long-term economic health of the farming community."

When can we expect to see this legislation? When will we have these three bills in for second and third reading, or, once again, are these not on the NDP's A and B list?

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): First of all, I would like to make sure the member understands when she's talking about the number of bankruptcies that have occurred in the province of Ontario farm enterprises that if we give the fact that in 1990 there were 18 bankruptcies, which is the figure I have, over the five years, if you include 1990 as part of the Liberal administration, there were 359 bankruptcies. In 1991, 1992 and 1993 in total there were 58 in three years, whereas in five years there were 359, which is more than double, more like triple. We have to be careful when we're talking about the number of bankruptcies.

There were some bad numbers also back in the early 1980s, which I'm sure the member is alluding to, back in the recession in 1981, 1982 and 1983 and the fallout from that recession. I think everyone would agree there were a number of bankruptcies due to that particular recession. But even though we've had hard times in terms of the 1990s, the bankruptcies are down to a reasonable level. They are up from 18, but there were only 22 in 1993.

On the other point, the member's question about legislation, obviously the formation of AgriCorp is important to the government. We could go ahead and introduce and finish this legislation. However, I want to point one thing out to the member and to the farm community. We now have a government in Ottawa that's talking about a whole farm safety net program, which means that there is a chance that in a year or so the gross revenue insurance plan programs are not going to be necessary in this province. We may have to look at new programs and new administration.

At this point in time, I'm kind of weighing the options of whether to proceed with the AgriCorp legislation or to wait and see the whole farm proposals that come forward and put something in place that would satisfy the needs of whole farm policy as well.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): I'd just like to remind the members, once again, that the questions are too long and the answers are too long. Try to make it more to the point. Brevity is really the answer.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I move that notwithstanding standing order 96(h), the requirement for notice be waived with respect to ballot item number 53, and that Mr O'Connor and Mrs Akande, Mr Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt) and Mr Ruprecht, and Mr Beer and Mrs McLeod exchange places in the order of precedence for private members' public business.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Shall the motion carry? Carried.

PETITIONS

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): To Ontario Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken courses and/or hunted for years; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and require only future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety courses or examination."

I have also signed that petition.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): My petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it's signed by a significant number of constituents of mine as well as of the greater Toronto area. My petition goes something like this:

"Whereas the British North America Act of 1867 supports the right of Catholic students to a Catholic education, and the province of Ontario supports two educational systems from kindergarten to grade 12/OAC;

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board educates more than 103,000 students across Metropolitan Toronto,"—and that is astounding, that number—"and whereas this is equivalent to 30% of all the students in the area;

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board is expected to provide the same programs and services as its public school counterpart and must do so by receiving $1,822 less for each elementary school student and $2,542 less per secondary school student (based on 1993 estimates, MET published statistics);

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to act now to ensure that Ontario's two principal education systems are funded fully and equally."

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mr Peter North (Elgin): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"The Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury, Ontario, provides 24-hour emergency services to an area that covers the four neighbouring corners of Middlesex, Elgin, Kent and Lambton counties. Approximately 16,000 people live in small towns, villages and rural sections of this area.

"Due to a shortage of doctors in the area, the hospital has had difficulty in providing medical coverage for its emergency room on a 24-hour, seven-days-a-week basis. If the hospital cannot get enough doctors to cover, it will have to close its emergency department for part of the 24-hour period. The nearest emergency departments are 40 to 60 minutes' driving distance away.

"We, the residents of the hospital service area, need 24-hour emergency coverage and want the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the critical issue of medical coverage of rural emergency departments immediately.

"We have attached our names and signatures to this petition."

There are literally hundreds of names on this petition. I thank you very much and I'll attach my own.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): Mr Speaker, just so you know how important this is, I have yet another petition from Twin Elms folks in the riding of Middlesex who petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible with third reading of Bill 21."

I have most certainly signed my name to this petition.

JUDGE'S COMMENTS

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): I have a petition signed by 570 names from the people of Northumberland:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We request that the Attorney General, the Honourable Marion Boyd, reprimand Mr Justice Jack Jenkins for his misuse of judicial power in making discriminatory and abusive comments towards a victim and her mother in a recent child sexual abuse trial. These comments occurred while instructing the jury in an Ontario Court (General Division) at Cobourg, Ontario, dated February 23 through February 25, 1994. In so doing, we feel a public apology to the victim and the victim's mother is both appropriate and necessary."

I realize this really should be directed to the federal Attorney General because Judge Jenkins is a federal appointee, but I have spoken to our Attorney General, Marion Boyd, and she has assured me that this will get redirected to the federal House.

HAEMODIALYSIS

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas several patients from the Collingwood area are forced to travel great distances under treacherous road conditions to receive necessary haemodialysis treatments;

"Whereas the government has done nothing to discourage a patchwork dialysis system whereby some patients receive haemodialysis in-home and others travel long distances for treatment;

"Whereas the current dialysis system is discriminatory because some patients have dialysis machines and are treated in-home, while others have to travel long distances to receive care, and one local patient is forced to pay for her own nurse;

"Whereas the government continues to insist they are studying the problem even though they've known about it for two years; and

"Whereas the Legislature passed Simcoe West MPP Jim Wilson's private member's resolution which called for the establishment of dialysis satellites in Alliston and Collingwood,

"We demand the government establish a dialysis satellite immediately in the town of Collingwood."

I've signed this petition, along with several people from the Collingwood area.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I have a petition from the area of Fort Frances, Burriss, Barwick and Devlin, and it reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I have attached my name to that petition as well.

CHILD CARE

Mr Chris Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): I have dozens of petitions from people in my riding, which read as follows:

"I have just received notice that the NDP government in Ontario intends to kill child care reform. Families in Victoria and Haliburton counties will be affected dramatically by this decision. I urge you to act now to reform child care. Child care keeps taxpaying parents working and helps other parents return to work and training. Ontario's children and families deserve fair treatment from your government."

This is signed by dozens of parents in our community.

TRANSPORTATION FOR THE DISABLED

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Metropolitan Toronto council has passed bylaw 95-93, prohibiting cross-boundary accessible taxi services; and

"Whereas the Ministry of Municipal Affairs has been requested by Mr Ron Cowan to amend the Municipal Act to reflect open borders for accessible taxis throughout all of Ontario; and

"Whereas the Municipal Act states that a municipality may exempt taxis from outside municipalities engaged in transporting of the disabled,

"We, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to protect the rights of the disabled in Ontario through the recognition of various disability programs, such as accessibility to public buildings and the accessibility to taxi program, and that the government of Ontario amend the Municipal Act to reflect the exemption of all restrictions involving the transportation of the disabled in Ontario."

I affix my name thereto.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I have a petition signed by several of my constituents living in such places as Micksburg and Round Lake and Pembroke and Killaloe, which petition reads—

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): All holiday destinations.

Mr Conway: My friend the speaker knows these places very well.

The petition reads:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own,

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae and Solicitor General Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I'm pleased to endorse and sign this petition and present it on behalf of these constituents.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring local school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards while not providing boards with the required funding to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating costs of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

I support this petition entirely and have signed it.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mr Peter North (Elgin): I have yet hundreds more names from the great riding of Elgin with regard to Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury, Ontario. They're asking that it provide 24-hour emergency services to an area that covers the four neighbouring corners of Middlesex, Elgin, Kent and Lambton counties. Approximately 16,000 people live in these small towns and villages and rural sections of this area.

"Due to the shortage of doctors in the area, the hospital has had difficulty in providing medical coverage for its emergency room on a 24-hour, seven-days-a-week basis. If the hospital cannot get enough doctors to cover, it will have to close its emergency department for part of the 24-hour period. The nearest emergency departments are 40 to 60 minutes' driving distance away.

"We, the residents of the hospital service area, need 24-hour emergency coverage and want the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the critical issue of medical coverage of rural emergency departments immediately.

"We have attached our names and signatures to this petition."

I have attached mine as well.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I have a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. This is about Bill 21, which is an important bill for many people in my riding who live in the Subway trailer park.

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible to final and third reading of Bill 21" in the interests of those constituents.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition, from a number of people in my constituency and other constituencies, that I've been asked to read by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. It reads as follows:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own,

"I/We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

ORDERS OF THE DAY TIME ALLOCATION

Ms Gigantes, on behalf of Mr Charlton, moved government notice of motion number 25:

That, pursuant to standing order 46 and notwithstanding any other standing order in relation to Bill 120, An Act to amend certain statutes concerning residential property, the standing committee on general government shall not proceed further with consideration of the bill and shall report the bill to the House on the first available day that reports from committees may be received following passage of this motion. In the event that the committee fails to report the bill on the date provided, the bill shall be deemed to be reported to and received by the House.

That upon receiving the report of the standing committee on general government, the Speaker shall put the question for adoption of the report forthwith, which question shall be decided without debate or amendment.

That one further sessional day be allotted to consideration of the bill in committee of the whole House. All amendments proposed to be moved to the bill shall be filed with the Clerk of the assembly by 4 pm on that day. Any divisions required during clause-by-clause consideration of the bill in committee of the whole House shall be deferred until 5:45 pm on that day. At 5:45 pm those amendments which have not yet been moved shall be deemed to have been moved and the Chair of the committee of the whole House shall interrupt the proceedings and shall, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary to dispose of all remaining sections of the bill and any amendments thereto and report the bill to the House. Any divisions required shall be deferred until all remaining questions have been put, the members called in once and all deferred divisions taken in succession.

That upon receiving the report of the committee of the whole House, the Speaker shall put the question for adoption of the report forthwith, which question shall be decided without debate or amendment.

That one hour be allotted to the third reading stage of the bill. At the end of that time, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment.

That in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes and no deferral of any division pursuant to standing order 28(g) shall be permitted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? No.

All those in favour, please say "aye."

Debate. The honourable Minister of Housing.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Perhaps you could help me on this. Is this what you refer to as a closure motion, preventing further debate? I just wanted to get that clarification. Is the motion a closure motion?

The Acting Speaker: I'm sure it's up to the member to draw his own conclusion.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): It's my understanding that there is agreement among the House leaders that there will be a division of time in the debate on this motion. I am therefore proposing to speak first for 20 minutes and to reserve for the member for Kingston and The Islands the further 10 minutes of our time in the debate.

This motion is what is known politely as a time allocation motion, as our friend the member for St Catharines knows very well, and he knows the reason why the motion is necessary.

Bill 120 is a bill which represents an improvement in residents' rights in Ontario. It is a bill which has stood before this Legislature in debate and in committee for many months now. It warrants urgent attention because it provides rights for residents who have not had rights before in the province of Ontario.

The way in which it has been treated by members opposite in our attempt to move it forward has been one really of, to put it kindly, reluctance; certainly deferral. For example, in the clause-by-clause portion of the committee work which has been done on this bill so far in the standing committee on general government, we have had over 22 hours of discussion, but in the clause-by-clause work we haven't got beyond discussion of clause 2, nor have we completed discussion of clause 2. It indicates to you, Mr Speaker, the kind of delay that has been provided by members of the opposition as we tried to move this bill forward.

It's a bill which has wide support among members of the public in Ontario, for very good reasons. It's a bill which provides rights to people who have not had them before, and they are people who very much need those rights. Unlike other tenants in the province of Ontario, those tenants who live in apartments which did not have appropriate zoning, and those apartments were in houses, did not have coverage and protection under the legislation which is designed to provide protection and coverage to tenants in all other rental units in Ontario.

Further, the bill addresses the rights of people who live in care homes in Ontario, those residences which, though permanent, provide elements of care service, which may be living supports, which may be food, which may be help supports of various kinds. These people too have not had rights that other tenants in Ontario have been able to use for many years, rights contained in the Landlord and Tenant Act, for example, rights contained in the Rent Control Act of Ontario and, for those residents of care homes, rights that are provided in the Rental Housing Protection Act of Ontario.

To speak first to the care homes situation, when our government was first elected, we asked Dr Ernie Lightman to follow up on some of the very tragic circumstances that had befallen people who live in care home settings in Ontario and to do a report for the government. He found that there are almost 50,000 people who live in what have been called unregistered care homes in Ontario. Many of those are living in retirement homes which provide a very comfortable, secure and generally excellent living style for people who have retired. But in other cases, the places where people are living are places where they have been subject to great difficulty with their living situation, where they have been frequently evicted without due cause, where they have been living in unsafe conditions, where there has been inadequate care, where there has certainly been a lack of privacy. They've been denied the right to have visitors. There have even been instances of sexual abuse and real health and safety problems.

These problems Dr Lightman dealt with in very poignant detail in the report he provided to the government. He recommended most strongly that the government should take action to provide protections for people, many of whom are frail elderly people who may not feel in a position to exercise rights easily, people who have physical disabilities, people who may have developmental disabilities, people who have had experience in psychiatric treatment, people who generally are quite vulnerable to a living situation in which their rights are not protected and have not been in the past.

In the past, there have been exemptions for care homes under the Landlord and Tenant Act and the Rent Control Act. We intend to change that as a result of Dr Lightman's recommendations. Residents in care homes will have full security of tenure and privacy rights under the Landlord and Tenant Act. The Rent Control Act will apply to that portion of the monthly charge they pay which covers their living space, their accommodation.

The amount they pay for care services, for food, will not be covered by rent control, but we will insist that those charges, first of all, be known and well spelled out to people who are entering care homes; that they cannot be changed, except once a year; that they must be registered, once this bill is proclaimed, in the rent registry system of the Rent Control Act; and that they will be monitored over time by the government so that we can ensure that there is a situation in which people are not being charged outrageous rent increases.

Care home operators will be required to register with the rent registry, as I indicated, and this will enable municipalities and inspectors, both provincial and municipal, to ensure that maintenance standards are being kept up and to improve living conditions in many of the care homes.

As I indicated, most care home operations in Ontario provide a very excellent service, but the instances in which people have suffered abuse and indeed died in care home situations in Ontario have brought us to a situation where we feel it is urgent to take action.

The Rent Control Act will mean that operators of care homes will provide a full package of information to those living in care homes, outlining what services are provided at what prices, when increases will be allowed, and also describing staff qualifications.

Before there are any increases in care service charges—I had previously indicated that could happen only once a year—there will have to be 90 days' notice. It will also be the case that in order to change the use of a care home, an operator will have to abide by the elements of the Rental Housing Protection Act.

The second group of people to whom I referred are people who live in apartments in houses. We estimate that in Ontario currently there are somewhere near 100,000, maybe 110,000, units of apartments in houses which are illegal because of their zoning. They may also be quite unhealthy and unsafe. We have seen instances recently where there have been tragic deaths in two cases of mothers and young children in basement apartments which did not provide adequate egress in an emergency situation. They couldn't get out when the place caught fire.

We're very concerned about the safety and the health of these tenants. We're also concerned that there should be access in Ontario to the kind of affordable housing that is provided by apartments in housing. There is a market there, clearly, which is being met illegally as far as zoning goes. What we want to do is to remove that element of the situation in which apartments in houses exist, bring those apartments in houses out of the underground economy into the light of day and have them meet health and safety standards, which will mean there will be an end to the kinds of conditions which created hazards for tenants in the past.

We're very anxious to see this happen now. We feel that the amendments to the building code which were undertaken last year, in July, particularly designed to deal with standards associated with apartments in houses, and also the draft regulations to the fire code of Ontario, which again have been developed and consulted upon widely among experts in the field to ensure that standards are being created within apartments in houses which will address fire separation standards, emergency exits, the need for properly working fire alarm systems—all these things now need to be brought to bear so that people who live in apartments in houses will be safe.

We know that the passage of this legislation is not going to mean that overnight, as if with a magic wand, every apartment in every house in Ontario which had previously been illegal because of zoning will suddenly become safe, but we do know that if we bring them out into the open economy, those property owners and tenants who have in the past been absolutely unwilling to get in touch with the appropriate officials to discover, for example, what the fire safety measures should be in that apartment in the house will now come forward. Tenants will be able to do that feeling assured that they won't be evicted simply because the apartment is in a zone which is inappropriate.

There's been a lot of discussion around this legislation and there's been some misunderstanding about the legislation. We've certainly made every effort to clarify as far as we could, particularly with municipalities, what this bill will actually do. The bill says that a property owner who wishes to install an apartment in the house has a right to do so. The property owner must go to the municipality, get a building permit and build an apartment which meets both the building code and the fire code requirements, and it will be inspected.

The municipalities have been reluctant to give up their zoning power and in some cases I think have misunderstood the degree to which this is a change in their zoning authority. The only element which is changed by Bill 120 is that municipalities will no longer be able to designate zones in which it is illegal to build an apartment in a house. In all other matters of zoning that affect a particular property, including the setbacks, the yard plans, the site plans and all the normal kinds of zoning and planning requirements, municipal authority will remain, including reasonable standards for parking requirements.

So we're not proposing a total removal of municipal responsibility and interest in this area. We are simply saying that in order to bring these apartments out from the underground economy into the light of day, where we can hope to begin to institute a situation in which health and safety matters are being attended to properly, we have to remove that power of a municipality, which has been widely used in Ontario, to say that "In these zones there shall be no apartments in the houses."

We have also provided in the legislation increased powers for municipalities to enforce standards within apartments in houses. Previously, if a municipal inspector were to enter a property, that inspector would have to indicate to a justice of the peace what evidence he or she intended to seize in an inspection. That requirement has been removed. It will now be much simpler for municipal inspectors to enter. In fact, we expect that the really critical element that will improve the situation for entry of municipal and fire officials in the future, after passage of Bill 120, will be the fact that they will be welcomed by tenants. And there will be many property owners who will also welcome them and who are very anxious to make sure that the apartments which currently exist within their houses are brought up to standard.

The bill also provides power for municipalities to enter into extended agreements with property owners for the placement of what we call a garden suite, commonly known as a granny flat, on a property. That must be a building which is dependent for its services on the main building on the property and which can be removed. We've given municipalities the discretion. They can choose to do it or not to do it as they please, to enter into 10-year agreements with property owners where previously they could only enter into three-year agreements. That will provide, both for municipal purposes and for the property owners, a much more stable situation in which granny flats can be developed in Ontario.

The act also provides that for zoning purposes, it will be the case that unrelated people who share living accommodations in a single housekeeping unit will be treated the same as the traditional family. This goes back to ancient arguments, and we seek to clarify it in Bill 120.

What we have done here is to provide for two groups of tenants in Ontario, those in care homes and those in apartments in houses, rights and access to rights under the Landlord and Tenant Act providing security of tenure and also, under the Rent Control Act, providing some discipline of cost increases and access to mechanisms for making sure that maintenance is kept up to decent standards. This will be the first time these two large groups of people who rent their homes will have access to those rights.

Both these bills have been through extensive consultations, and there have been some changes in the bill that was originally introduced as Bill 90 in June 1992, which affected only those tenants who live in apartments in houses. We, as ministers, Ed Philip, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and I met with numerous representatives from municipalities, and the ministries received large numbers of briefs and met with groups, and we did make changes to the draft legislation.

Rural municipalities had been concerned about the fact that apartments in houses would be developed where there were septic tanks and that might place a strain and an environmental problem might arise. We have adapted the bill to say that apartments in houses will not be as of right where a house is dependent on a single septic tank.

We also heard from building and fire officials that it would be reasonable to have changes done under the Fire Marshals Act and the Ontario Building Code rather than through the Planning Act, and we've acceded to those recommendations.

The office of the fire marshal, as I mentioned, did set up a task force to develop new standards for fire code provisions within apartments in houses, and, as I mentioned also, the Ontario Building Code was amended last summer to provide for standards for apartments in houses. Public support for these two pieces of legislation, which we've brought together under the familiar title of residents' rights, has been very strong.

The Ministry of Housing undertook a survey back in the fall of 1991 which indicated that when you asked people in Ontario, and this was throughout Ontario, whether they objected to having a neighbour develop an apartment in the house, 70% of people said no. That finding was borne out time and again by surveys which were undertaken by municipalities themselves in the context of their work to update their official plans, to bring them in line with our housing policy statement in Ontario.

We found that even in suburban areas, such as one you're familiar with, Mr Speaker, the Kanata area of Ottawa-Carleton, when people were asked, "Do you object if your neighbour develops an apartment in the house?" roughly 70% of people said, "No, we don't mind."

It makes sense, from all kinds of points of view, that that would be the case. People understand that there is a market for apartments in houses. They feel very strongly that they should be made safe for the people who live in them. They also understand that for older people, or for younger people just purchasing a home, the development of an apartment in a house can provide both a source of income, which may be very welcome indeed in the household, and also a sense of security of knowing that there's somebody else in the home.

It makes sense from all those points of view and also from the point of view that once we have a requirement for a building permit for the establishment of apartments in houses as of right there will be increased use of contractors and builders, and we will see increased economic activity as a result of the passage of this legislation.

On the care home side, not only Dr Lightman but hundreds of people around this province have been in touch with us over the measures that are proposed within this legislation. Among the most vulnerable people in our province are the people who live in care homes in Ontario.

There has been a very sad history of lack of standards and lack of rights for people who live in care homes. Dr Lightman made it very clear when he did his report that the key to providing a better future situation for people in care homes was to provide them with rights that they could use. He said it was critical that we address the fact that there was no protection under the Landlord and Tenant Act and no protection under the Rent Control Act for people in care homes.

There has been some misunderstanding of this legislation. We've had numerous letters from care home operators who operate what are commonly known as retirement homes, where people can afford a fairly good price to find a comfortable place to retire and have good social surroundings and a good level of services and feel very content. Some operators have determined that they don't care to have this kind of legislation developed and have encouraged some senior citizens to feel anxious about the passage of Bill 120.

I would like to take this occasion to assure you and to assure any senior citizens who may be watching this debate that their lives will continue in the comfort and in the manner to which they have become accustomed. What Bill 120 will be doing is ensuring that they, like other tenants, have access to rights that exist for almost all tenants in this province under the Landlord and Tenant Act and the Rent Control Act.

The Acting Speaker: The government party will have approximately six minutes to sum up. We now go to the official opposition.

Mr Joseph Cordiano (Lawrence): I am very unhappy that I should rise on this occasion to have to deal with what amounts to an effort to do away with democratic procedure in this House.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Twenty-two hours for two clauses.

Mr Cordiano: The minister is sitting in the House. It's unfortunate because just as we were beginning to see the light and just as we were beginning to make some headway—in fact, the minister gave me every indication that she was beginning to understand the position that our party had put forward and that we had discussed at great length in committee, but certainly did not do justice, nowhere near the kind of time that was required to even begin to examine this very detailed omnibus legislation.

I would remind everyone who is observing today that this, after all, was an omnibus piece of legislation, two distinct pieces of legislation, one dealing with accessory apartments and one dealing with residents' rights in care homes, brought together in a very convenient fashion in order to expedite the government's legislative agenda.

After all, there is really no reason why we should be dealing with this matter in a closure motion by the government. All members of the committee were quite involved in the proceedings and were actually very informed and very cooperative and had become quite knowledgeable about the very difficult and complex issues that we were beginning to deal with on that committee with regard to this piece of legislation.

I see that the parliamentary assistant is here in the minister's place, sitting in the Legislature. I would remind him, and he was a member of the committee, that at the end of the day even the members on his side of the committee had every reason to question the details in the bill that was before us. In fact, they did question various aspects of the bill. Mind you, we only got to the second clause of the bill and we had not completed that.

I think it speaks to the very importance of this legislation and the degree of complexity with which this legislation deals that you need ample opportunity to examine to the fullest the details around the legislation. After all, we're talking about legislation which affects many thousands of people, hundreds of thousands of people actually. I say to you that when that many people are involved, I honestly believe the Legislature must complete its process of examining legislation in its fullest and give voice to democratic expression, give an opportunity to people to come before the institutions that govern them and to have the input that's necessary so that, at the end of the day, no one can stand up and say that this government blocked their voice, that this government did not want to listen to the very real concerns people had expressed before the committee.

In fact, that's what ends up happening, and I say to my friend the parliamentary assistant that at the end of the day there will be people who will come forward and suggest that they did not have an opportunity to come before the committee. I tell you that because we even restricted the number of people who did come before us, who did appear before the committee, so as to expedite the legislation. I believe that at the end of the day, out of a list of 230 requests to appear before the committee, in fact only 150 actually were invited to appear before the committee.

Dealing with this legislation, I point out again that this was omnibus legislation, two disparate pieces of legislation which had very distinct and very detailed matters before each of them, dealing with sectors that are really unrelated, the home care sector and people living in rooming houses, people living in homes for the aged and rest homes, trying to deal with their concerns around residents' rights, and throwing them or lumping them into a bill which deals also with accessory apartments and includes a variety of acts, the Planning Act and various other acts, changes to the building code, amendments to the fire code.

We're talking about a series of complex matters that had come before this committee to be dealt with in a fashion that I thought was very appropriate, and that was to deal with each clause in a meaningful way, to have debate in a meaningful way.

I would say to the minister that at the end of the day Bill 120, the legislation making accessory apartments legal as of right, leaves a lot to be desired for our party. We have repeatedly suggested to the minister—in this House and in committee I have tried to suggest to her—that this legislation is indeed flawed, that at the end of the day, because you legalize accessory apartments and make them possible as of legal right, that does not make them safe places in which to live.

We've said this repeatedly and our leader has on many occasions, in this very Legislature, asked that the minister seriously consider our amendments to rectify the situation that currently exists in Bill 120 and is now going to be dealt with in a guillotine fashion before this House.

We are deeply concerned, and this is a serious matter, that accessory apartments, in particular basement apartments that are below grade, underground, that have inadequate fire safety provisions, have inadequacies that do not make them live up to safety standards, and there are thousands of those. Over 100,000, by the minister's estimate, basement apartments currently exist in an illegal state. Of those, it is estimated that perhaps half do not meet the necessary requirements for safety, do not meet building code requirements, do not meet fire code requirements, current codes.

I say to the minister that to simply suggest that by passing legislation, as she has, making these units legal as of right, permitted use, and removing the exclusions as a result of zoning that currently exist do not make those units safe.

We have had repeated examples come before us, and I don't want to bring this up in a negative light, but I am concerned that because the minister cannot ensure that all these units will be brought up to the safety requirements, will be made safe, that these units will meet safety code, fire code and building code requirements, then in fact these places will not be safe places to live. I am concerned that the way in which the minister explained this will not result in the further completion of those units to be brought up to safety standards. It simply will not happen.

I think it's a fallacy, it's a myth the minister puts forward that because these units will now be able to exist as of right, tenants will no longer feel that they're living surreptitiously or have to hide behind some fear that they're living in a unit that is illegal, they'll come forward now, after Bill 120, to demand that their particular unit be brought up to those safety requirements, and that they will meet the building code, that landlords will now go out as a result of Bill 120—this is where the argument really breaks down and this is why I cannot accept the minister's proposition that after Bill 120 these units will in fact be made safe.

Landlords will now be expected to go out and renovate their units to bring them up to standard, in some cases costing anywhere between—some estimates were $5,000 to $7,000 per unit to bring those basement apartments up to standard; that landlords now will have some incentive to go out and spend this kind of money to bring their units up to those code requirements; that there's a willingness on the part of landlords to do this—that's the first assumption—secondly, that if landlords aren't willing, tenants will somehow be made aware of the fact that they may be living in an unsafe condition in a basement apartment which requires a number of renovations to be made to be brought up to standard.

I ask the minister: How is it that a tenant will become knowledgeable in fire code requirements, knowledgeable in the fire code, knowledgeable in the building code, that he or she will be able to make a determination that they're living in an unsafe unit and then go out and report this, call the fire marshal's office and ask that the fire departments around the province come and make an inspection of the unit so as to make this determination about whether a unit is safe or not? That's quite a leap, I've got to say.

I would submit that most members in this fine Legislature of ours, being as knowledgeable as they are about a number of matters, would not be aware of what's in those codes, and that the average person could not be expected to be knowledgeable enough to make a determination about what is safe and what is not. Of course, there are some elementary factors, such as smoke detectors; everyone would be able to make that determination. But there are other things, such as the size of a second opening, in a window. To expect the tenants are going to be knowledgeable enough to even question whether their unit is safe or not is a giant leap that I believe is impossible to make.

I say to the minister, and I've said this over and over again, that to leave this circumstance to the chance that a tenant will recognize that he or she is living in an unsafe unit, even though that unit may be cosmetically pleasing—the unit has been nicely renovated, there's excellent carpet on the floor, brand-new carpet, all the walls have been renovated etc, but at the end of the day that unit could still be an unsafe place to live and could be a firetrap.

Simply, for example, the height of the unit, from the floor to the ceiling, may not be sufficient to meet the code. I've already suggested that the opening in windows has to be of a certain size to meet those code requirements. Failing that, that unit is still unsafe.

Just as I was preparing my notes for the committee meeting on Thursday of this week, we were still dealing with the clause around registration which we have put forward.

Interjection.

Mr Cordiano: Yes. My good friend and colleague the member for Don Mills will be standing up to speak on this matter; he was on the committee as well.

Just as I was getting ready to do that this week, to make further elaborations and to try and extend an opportunity to better the legislation that was before us, down comes that cold, cold—I could almost feel it on my neck—action by the government which cannot be described other than as a guillotine dropping on the very thing that we so much cherish around here, and that is democracy.

I believe this government has lost every democratic principle that it ever had, and the ironic thing is that this party that now governs uses that word in its own name, the New Democratic Party. I think that's an oxymoron. I would describe it in that way because the way this party has been governing bears no relation to that word "democratic," and I think it's getting further and further away from that.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Twenty-two hours for two clauses.

Mr Cordiano: Absolutely not. I might say that at no time did the minister indicate that she was perturbed by the debate that was ensuing. In fact, she engaged me in debate over these very substantive matters. Her responses were quite lengthy and I was prepared to sit there and listen. At no time did she say, "I should remove myself from this debate." No, she encouraged it, and I thought we were reaching some mutual understanding about this section when it was cut off, to my immediate surprise.

I was shocked to learn this morning that we were dealing with a time allocation motion because I thought, just as we were beginning to quite frankly see eye to eye on the matter before us—we didn't agree on everything, of course; that could never happen—there was this automatic motion by the government to deny any further debate.

I find that is a shame, particularly, and I say this in all seriousness now, because we did not reach that part of the bill which dealt with Dr Lightman's recommendations in the main, and that most of those parts of the bill have simply been brushed aside and we will have to deal with them as we deal with everything else around here, after it's passed by this government pushing it through with its majority. We'll have to deal with them on the hustings, to talk to the people of the province who are interested in this legislation.

I might add that many, many people were interested in that part of the legislation. I, myself, had suggested to the minister that many of the recommendations put forward by Dr Lightman were very much appreciated and well received by our caucus. In fact, we felt that many of those recommendations should be proceeded with. There was some general understanding of that and some general agreement on the part of all members of the committee. Unfortunately, that was not given the kind of fulsome debate that was necessary—

Hon Ms Gigantes: Ah.

Mr Cordiano: I say, we only dealt with two clauses. The minister was very much a part of those debates and it certainly could not fall on us to disengage her from the debate, certainly not. I would not ask her to leave the room so that we could expedite the process. Surely to God, she did not expect us to do that. I say to my friend the member for Don Mills, certainly she could not have expected that—

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): Absolutely not.

Mr Cordiano: —that we should just simply not make commentary on this legislation and allow the bill to proceed without any kind of debate.

Mr David Johnson: With all the opposition to it.

Hon Ms Gigantes: A little value added for your pay.

Mr Cordiano: Minister, that's stretching it a little far. I think we have made constructive amendments to the legislation thus far and we only got through two clauses—we didn't even get through two clauses.

Hon Ms Gigantes: You didn't tell that to your constituents: 22 hours for two clauses.

Mr Cordiano: What's 22 hours in the life of a Legislature, for a bill that is as significant and of such tremendous interest that was expressed by the residents of Ontario? I will repeat that: 230 requests for appearances before the committee and the committee could only accommodate 150 of those submissions for public appearance. So that already cut down on the number of people who made presentations.

This was not unusual or abnormal; it was not. I think that giving people their due, giving people their democratic opportunity to express their views on legislation, as I say, that is of such importance and significance to all the people of the province, and was demonstrated as much by this government having put forward this legislation in what amounted to an expedited fashion, given the way that it combined the legislation and made it an omnibus piece of legislation.

At the end of the day, they can't have it both ways. They can't say: "This is important legislation but we don't want to discuss it. We want to just get it through the House, ram it through, so that we can say we pass legislation." I say that's not good enough. There are certain matters in this legislation that need to be looked at with great detail. We started to do just that and I think that great progress was made. We, I think, had several areas—

Hon Ms Gigantes: We didn't finish clause 2.

Mr Cordiano: We didn't have a chance to finish it.

Hon Ms Gigantes: We didn't finish clause 2.

Mr Cordiano: Minister, I say to you, you didn't even get a chance to read the rest of my amendments, which I'm sure you would have found delightful and acceptable.

Mr David Johnson: Almost as good as ours.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The member has the floor.

Mr Cordiano: Well, Mr Speaker, I was just trying to tell the minister that there were certainly a number of other things she would have found interesting and it's unfortunate that we couldn't discuss them in committee.

Hon Ms Gigantes: So funny.

Mr Cordiano: A little humour isn't going to kill anyone, Minister. I say to you that what we're talking about is serious, but at the end of the day, you're telling us that it wasn't serious enough to be dealt with by elected members of this House, and I take that with great offence, because what input was given by members of the opposition was done with a great deal of thought, was done with a view in mind to be constructive, and I say to the minister, I think we did that and I think she would want to admit that. I think at no time did we try to obstruct and at no time was there any element or intent to attempt to foul up the process. This is why I found this—

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): Say that with a straight face.

Mr Cordiano: Well, I am saying it with a straight face, because I absolutely believe that. I spent a lot of time and effort, and so did all those hundreds of people who came before the committee, and if the minister wants to tell me today that this is unacceptable that we have our say, that it was unacceptable that we make constructive, value added, as she liked to put it earlier, positive amendments—and in fact she accepted one of our amendments.

This is why I find this situation so startling, in fact so shocking. I think we made some very positive contributions to the legislation. We dealt with it in the spirit that it deserved. A great deal of seriousness and a great deal of thoughtfulness went into the suggestions we made, and I think for her to try and deny that would be less than truthful.

I say to you, Mr Speaker, I will turn to my colleague in just a moment, but I would like to say to the minister and for those who are listening that we have serious concerns with the matter of safety. We always have made this the issue around basement apartments, and in fact we have made constructive suggestions for amendments.

We have repeatedly called for the registration of these units so that they be properly inspected, because failing to inspect these units would mean—and I think this is what we find so disturbing, failing to ensure that all of these units are inspected. After all, they currently exist.

But, firstly, we don't know where they exist, and that is why we've called for registration under the act, that all of these units be registered so that we can identify where they are, and that all of these units then be inspected so that we can ensure that they meet the codes, the code requirements, to ensure that they are safe places in which to live.

After all, it's unacceptable to have even one unit that is unsafe that exists out there because there was a failure on the part—and I would say this—of the government to ensure that these units have gone through a proper process for proper inspections to be made, because then, and only then, can we guarantee that these units are safe.

Failing that, I would say to the government that it is negligent, that it is acting in a negligent fashion, leaving to the mere whim and happenstance, on a chance, that at the end of the day, as I have described earlier, these units will be reported by either a tenant, a neighbour or someone else to the fire department because this tenant was aware of what was in the code and made a determination that his or her unit was unsafe. And that's preposterous, to expect that a tenant would have that kind of knowledge about a building code or fire code and be able to make an assessment that his or her unit was unsafe, and therefore put the burden on the tenant to be that knowledgeable.

Now, the minister has said in committee that they're going to introduce an educational program to educate the public about what is in the building code and the fire code. I think that's absurd. They couldn't spend enough money, and this could not be done in an appropriate and timely fashion to ensure that these units are safe. Years will go by. Those units will still exist out there in an unsafe fashion; legal, as of right, according to zoning bylaws, but certainly not safe. That I find to be unacceptable.

At the end of the day, our amendment dealt with that. Our amendment was a constructive, positive suggestion to the minister designed to deal with safety first, because we put the lives of people and their concerns around safety as a priority in all of this. As we heard from fire chiefs across the province, the kinds of fires that occur in basements are much more difficult to fight than fires that are above ground. Fires below grade are much, much more difficult to get to and much, much more difficult to put out. For those people living below grade, we must ensure that their units are safe.

That's why I cannot understand why this government has refused to look at a simple registration process which would allow for cost recoveries on the part of municipalities. After all, AMO, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, suggested that there be registration of these units so that they can then go about the business of inspecting these units, so they can make these safe places in which people could live in their own municipalities. This is what we heard from AMO, representing over 800 municipalities across the province. To suggest that these ideas came out of thin air is incorrect. To suggest that they weren't based on some thoughtful process is incorrect, is untrue.

At the end of the day, I say with a great deal of concern that Bill 120 will pass and that some time down the road there will continue to be the existence of—legal now, as I said before—accessory apartments continuing to exist in an unsafe condition.

That is our biggest concern and that is why at the end of the day I cannot accept this time allocation motion, this guillotine action by the government to cut off debate around a matter which is of great importance to not only those people who live in basement apartments and the people who live in rest homes, retirement homes, homes for the aged and rooming houses. It is important for all of us, particularly around Dr Lightman's recommendations, because after all, these were vulnerable adults. To suggest that this was to be dealt with in an expeditious fashion without real thought being given to this—

I'd like to get into discussion around the recommendations made by Dr Lightman and some of the concerns we have. We've put forward amendments and I'm hoping that the government will still accept some of these amendments when we get into committee of the whole, because they're necessary. They speak to a variety of issues, a variety of concerns which have been expressed throughout our hearings. I suggested earlier that one of our amendments was accepted. It was an exemption dealing with an 18-month provision, having extended it from six months, during which homes that provided care would be exempted from provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act.

I don't have enough time to get into the details of that, so I will turn to my colleague who awaits his turn to speak next.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I welcome the opportunity to say a few words today with regard to the time allocation motion that's before us. Once again, this government is using the undemocratic process of invoking closure on any form of reasonable, logical or decent debate that's taking place. We wanted to discuss more of Bill 120, An Act to amend certain statutes concerning residential property, but this government tends to fall back on closure far too often to deal with its own legislation rather than taking the time to listen to the very real concerns and the very real problems facing the people of Ontario.

I remember standing in this House on different occasions speaking on closure motions. I remember when the government was in opposition. The Treasurer at the time, Mr Nixon, wanted to present his budget and the members of the NDP put up a real fight and caused chaos within this Legislature. Mr Nixon ended up presenting his budget outside the doors. These are the very people you would never think would want to bring in closure motions. Could you imagine what they would do if there was another party in power bringing in closure motions?

Once again we have a case here in which many members of my party wanted to participate in the Bill 120 debate, wanted to bring the concerns and views of their constituents to the attention of the government, but they are being denied the opportunity to work effectively on behalf of the people who elected them to represent them here at Queen's Park.

This government has used closure to cut off debate on important legislation like Bill 120 today, and photo-radar; they used it last year on that. They choose to put a lid on free speech, so to speak, and set about to overregulate the people of this province. This overregulation takes the form of Bill 40, the job-killing bill which amended the Labour Relations Act. It's another example of a government that has no regard for the social and economic consequences, and it is symbolic of the anti-business, anti-job, anti-worker, anti-prosperity agenda that has prevailed with this government.

This is the same government that just doesn't care that thousands of jobs will disappear because of the negative impact of Ontario's labour laws on CN rail's plans to abandon a number of short lines in Ontario. I'm certain the closure of these lines will have an adverse impact on millions of dollars worth of investment and thousands of jobs throughout the county of Simcoe.

Hon Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I wonder if you could remind the speaker what the motion is that we're debating.

The Acting Speaker: I want to remind all members that we are dealing with government notice of motion number 25.

Mr McLean: I'm glad the minister is listening. She didn't talk totally about the motion either. She talked about Bill 120 and some other aspects of planning in Ontario. For her to get up and say that I'm not dealing with what's before the House today—I certainly am. If she wants to talk about jobs with regard to the closure motion, I want to discuss it. I want to talk about the 80 jobs at Stepan Canada that are being lost because of their anti-business agenda. I want to talk about the potential that the provincial government can cause an impasse with the stroke of a pen by amending labour legislation. Instead, the government chooses to run roughshod over the opposition parties by invoking closure on a piece of legislation that many people are clearly opposed to.

Frank Johnson of Brechin is clearly opposed to Bill 120. He wanted me to bring the following information to the attention of a government that wants to ram through a piece of seriously flawed legislation. His concern is: How will a basement apartment be made legal and be fire-protected? Will all homes on water and sewage be able to have a new apartment?

I hate to do this again, but I want you to think back to the news release issued by Bob Rae on August 19, 1990. This news release was about a document titled An Agenda for People, and the second paragraph reads: "This is a great province. But how much greater it would be if it truly belonged to the people. Instead, we have a government today driven by a narrow and self-interested agenda, ignoring what needs to be done."

He should have at that time said, "If I want to get legislation through, I'm going to invoke closure." But no, he didn't say that. He didn't talk about that. Bob Rae wanted to talk about the former Liberal government, but he didn't talk about the current NDP government. It's really getting difficult to tell them apart. I must be thinking back to the old Liberal-NDP accord days.

The government is trying its hardest to stifle the voices of people like Frank Johnson, the townships of Oro-Medonte and Severn and Tay and the town of Penetanguishene and the city of Orillia by cutting off debate. But I was elected to present the concerns of my constituents to this government, and I'm going to try to be right up front with regard to the views that have been presented to me.

"In late November, the Ontario government introduced Bill 120, legislation of concern to you because it proposes to make retirement homes subject to housing legislation, specifically, rent control and the Landlord and Tenant Act....

"For the last few years, we've been trying to warn the government that putting retirement homes under housing legislation would cause serious problems in the day-to-day running of retirement homes and for the residents living in them....

"The government, however, has ignored our warnings and Bill 120 will become law this spring. The following is a brief summary of the major problems created by the legislation:

"The legislation will not allow us to move a resident out of the home if that person does not want to move, even when a speedy move is necessary to protect that person or other residents. The legislation would cause problems if a resident requires more care than we can provide or becomes a threat to other residents.

"The legislation does not allow for temporary stays, for example, while a resident is recuperating after time in the hospital, while receiving outpatient treatment, or while the family is away or unable to provide regular care.

"There are a range of other problems that would affect how we operate our home and how we provide the services and setting to which you are accustomed."

"Retirement Homes Calls For Amendments To 'Misguided' Bill 120," January 18, 1994. "Bill 120 is a misguided approach to regulating the residential care sector and will create problems for residents because the bill's housing legislation does not recognize situations unique to care-based retirement homes, the Ontario residential care association today warned a government committee reviewing the bill."

The township of Severn is so opposed to Bill 120 that it approved the following resolution:

"Whereas Bill 120, as introduced by government of Ontario, is in blatant disregard for the rights of citizens in Ontario who have purchased homes relying on the protection of municipal official plans and zoning bylaws; and

"Whereas it is the opinion of this council that such disregard will bring about a reduction in property and assessment values with such 'R1' zones; and

"Whereas it is the belief of the council that the rights of individuals owning properties within such 'R1' zones should be preserved and protected and continue to be subject to the due process of zoning amendment procedures; and

"Whereas this municipality has recently experienced near fatalities due to fires in basement apartments, it would be detrimental to public safety to follow through with Bill 120;

"Be it resolved that this council register its strong protest to Bill 120 to the Premier, the Minister of Housing, AMO, all urban centres in Ontario and...MPPs...and that all interested citizens be encouraged to take similar action."

The township of Oro-Medonte also wants you to know there's opposition to Bill 120 in that municipality, and that council passed the following resolution:

The council, at its regular meeting of February 16, 1994, said:

"Be it resolved that the correspondence from the town of Tillsonburg requesting endorsement of resolution expressing opposition to Bill 120 which permits two residential units within a dwelling be received and the council of the township of Oro-Medonte support the said resolution and, further, a copy of the same be sent to the Premier, the Minister of Housing," myself, "and the town of Tillsonburg."

I wonder if the minister ever got those. From what I gather within the committee, there certainly wasn't a lot of debate with regard to the opposition to the bill.

On March 9, the township of Tay passed the following resolution because that municipality too has serious reservations about Bill 120. The council of Tay "at its March 9, 1994," just a little over a month ago, "regular meeting passed the following resolution with respect to the above-noted matter:

"That the township of Tay supports the resolution from the town of Tillsonburg in opposition to proposed Bill 120 and support for same be forwarded to the Premier, Minister of Housing," and the same as the ones before.

"Tay council trusts you will consider these comments when Bill 120 is considered in the House."

I have some other comments here with regard to the government. They want to cut off debate. After election officials informed the staff of the town of Penetanguishene, and they reviewed Bill 120 very carefully, they reached the following conclusions:

"Since the enactment of Penetanguishene's 'accessory apartment' policy, things have worked quite well and no problems have arisen. Therefore the phrase 'If it ain't broke, don't fix it' seems appropriate, because Bill 120 proposes to expand the 'two residential units per house' principle to semi-detached dwellings and row housing.

"As the Association of Municipalities of Ontario (AMO) has indicated in its policy response to Bill 120, the inclusion of row houses will only arouse public anxiety, raise expectations for would-be converters and force municipalities to go through excessive administration to ultimately exclude them.

"The AMO policy response also points out that despite the government's position that the two parts to Bill 120 (ie, care homes and apartments in houses) are related issues, they are significantly different and it is inappropriate to combine the two of them."

Many, many municipalities have raised issues with regard to Bill 120. Yes, this government wants to stifle free speech and informed debate on a piece of legislation that elected officials and staff at the city of Orillia, the Sunshine City, found sadly lacking. A committee of council for the city of Orillia reached the following conclusions about Bill 120:

"That council endorse the expression of concern by the town of Tillsonburg and, further, that the Minister of Housing be advised of the following concerns of the city....

"(1) The proposed legislation represents a significant encroachment by the province on the traditional planning responsibilities of municipal government. The changes to the Planning Act proposed in Bill 120 represent a major, unilateral revision of local policies and how they are applied. Such revisions are being made without regard to local conditions and without recourse to an independent body which the planning process has traditionally provided for in this province.

"(2) While recognizing the need for the provision of adequate, affordable housing, municipalities must be able to have some control over all types of land use, including accessory dwellings. Otherwise they will be unable to mitigate the impacts on adjacent uses and on services and facilities, including the provisions of water and sanitary sewers and treatment, parking, schools, parks and recreation facilities....

"(5) The nature of the 'municipal approvals' required for the demolition, conversion, repair or renovation for a care home should be clarified, as the application of the process under the Rental Housing Protection Act, if similar to the process for the conversion of a rental building to condominium ownership, would be onerous, particularly where a small number of events (even just one) is involved."

We have small villages like Coldwater and Elmvale. Coldwater has a sewage system that needs to be upgraded. They cannot proceed with further subdivisions within that municipality. Yet what this government is saying through Bill 120 is, "Yes, you can have an apartment in each one of your residences within that village."

Is that what the ministry is saying? Is that what the ministry is going to allow to happen? If it does, what's going to happen to the sewage system? Who is going to have control over the planning of that village? Is it going to be the municipality or is it going to be the province?

Elmvale village put in a new water and sewage system for expansion. If every one of those homes in that village adds to or approves every illegal apartment, but adds to mainly, is their water system then going to be up to standards? There are a lot of concerns here with regard to making them legal, but also allowing them to add an apartment in every home.

There is some background with regard to the report with regard to the Joseph Kendall inquiry. He was a resident in an Orillia rest home at the time of his death. I attended that coroner's inquest with regard to the causes of those deaths in homes that were unregulated, where nobody was really monitoring what was happening there, so I see some aspects of some regulations to effect that those homes are regularly inspected, regularly under some control of a ministry. But to have that part of this legislation with Bill 120 I don't believe was an appropriate thing to do. I think it should have been some separate legislation under the health act that would have allowed inspections of those facilities, whereby some of the deaths that have taken place, because of unsanitary conditions or because of some of the problems within those homes, would have been looked after.

I want to thank you for giving me the opportunity to comment on this motion for closure and on Bill 120 that this government want to ram through the Legislature. My constituents want me to tell you that they are opposed to Bill 120 because it concentrates more on security of tenure over the security of care. This government won't let the people in Simcoe East speak any longer so they've asked me to be their voice at Queen's Park. It is an honour and privilege to speak on their behalf, but I hate to have to speak on their behalf when we're facing closure motions in this Legislature.

I remember when one of the NDP members one time spoke for 17 hours. I don't think anybody needs to speak that long. I think speeches can be short, but I do think that all members should the opportunity to speak on behalf of their constituents, and I was pleased to have that.

Mr Gary Wilson (Kingston and The Islands): I'm very pleased to join in this discussion on the time allocation motion. I follow upon a speaker who questions the amount of time that is needed here. I want to point out that we spent 22 hours on getting to the second clause in this bill, Bill 120, and I just wonder where the member for Simcoe East was when we were going through this exercise, which was getting us nowhere.

Certainly there are residents in his constituency, because there are residents across the whole province, who are benefiting from this bill and who have told us in the vast public consultation that we carried out both before the bill was drafted and then through the public hearings—remember, on top of the 22 hours of clause-by-clause that we were working on in this bill, we still had four weeks of public hearings into the bill.

There has been a vast amount of public consultation on this bill and we know a vast amount of public support for it. In fact, the people of Ontario want us to get through this bill and this is why we are taking this measure now of time allocation. As I say, I'm disappointed that the member for Simcoe East wasn't there pushing the committee to get this done.

What I would like to do is to focus on two specific areas just to highlight them, following the minister's very comprehensive discussion of the bill, and I'd just briefly like to say how much I appreciate the minister's commitment to this bill, the vast amount of time she's put into it. The two areas I would like to talk about are, first of all, the public consultation that went into the development of the legislation and what this bill means to the people most directly affected by it, the residents in care homes and apartments in houses and the providers of the accommodation.

As far as the public consultation goes, as members are aware, draft legislation and regulations on apartments in houses were released for public consultation almost two years ago, in June 1992. Starting in the summer of 1992, the ministers of Municipal Affairs and Housing consulted extensively with the public. The two ministries received and studied over 1,500 briefs from individuals, municipalities, public sector organizations, ratepayers' groups, and tenant and advocacy groups across the province.

Staff from the two ministries met with more than 60 groups. The ministers also met with municipal councillors from Windsor, London, Stratford, Hamilton, Sudbury, Thunder Bay, Etobicoke, Whitby and Kingston, and the greater Toronto area mayors.

In regard to the care home provisions of this bill, it's worth noting that this government announced the establishment of the Lightman commission of inquiry in 1990, just two days after the release of the jury's report on the unfortunate death of a care home resident in Orillia—just two days after that inquest report.

The commission's work—that's the Lightman commission's work—lasted 18 months, during which Dr Lightman received more than 230 submissions from interested groups, organizations and individuals. The commission also released a discussion paper, followed by public consultations in several communities across Ontario and private meetings with stakeholders and others interested in the issue.

During the hearings of the standing committee on general government, the committee received more than 300 submissions from interested organizations, groups and individuals on various aspects of the bill. About 60 of these submissions related to the care home provisions of the bill. Of this number, about 40% supported it while another 40% expressed qualified support. Those voicing qualified support were not opposed to the principles involved, but wanted to see some specific concerns addressed.

Of the submissions to the standing committee relating to apartments in houses, 69% were in favour of the bill while 39% were opposed. It's important to note that the people most directly concerned, the landlords and the tenants in these apartments, supported the bill's objectives. Again, the people most directly concerned, landlords and tenants, supported the bill's objectives.

I should also point out that the government went a long way to accommodate the real concerns it heard and made amendments at every step in the process to address these concerns.

There is one crucial fact that I can't emphasize enough: This has been a most inclusive process, providing sufficient opportunity for public input and listening to what people told us. The Minister of Housing has already referred to some of the changes we've made to reflect this point.

The bill has come through a very stringent public scrutiny, and today we can say there is widespread support for it among the people of Ontario. The reason for that support is that, as the minister has outlined, it's an idea whose time has come.

Let's look briefly at what this bill means to the people most directly concerned, the residents in care homes and apartments in houses and the people who provide these forms of housing.

First, as the short title of this bill clearly recognizes, this bill is about residents' rights.

With regard to care homes in particular, Dr Lightman found that residents in these homes are very vulnerable to abuse: eviction without notice, with one's belongings stuffed in a garbage bag; physical and sexual abuse; unsafe living conditions; inadequate care; lack of privacy; routine denial of visitors; and other health and personal safety problems. These are things that strike at the heart of the most basic human rights: the right to personal safety and dignity and the right to choose where and how one wants to live.

This bill will put an end to these types of abuse and care home residents will be able to enjoy the same rights and protection that all other tenants take as a matter of course today. This bill gives them the choice of where they would live and guarantees their safety, security and dignity.

In his report, Dr Lightman wrote about care home operators for whom "it was a spiritual obligation to care for vulnerable adults, regardless of the personal or financial sacrifice."

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): The member's time has expired.

Mr Gary Wilson: Finally, I'd just like to say, on behalf of the government, that I join with him in expressing our admiration for their commitment.

The Acting Speaker: I thank the member for his contribution.

Mr Gary Wilson: This bill will strengthen the hand of such people by establishing some ground rules for everyone.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): I wanted to speak briefly to this yet another unfortunate time allocation motion. I have been approached on the topic of this bill by a number of organizations in my riding that have expressed concerns about aspects of the bill and wanted some amendments put forward. In the committee our critic has moved some of those amendments and was planning on moving and introducing—and may in fact have introduced; I believe he did—many more.

Unfortunately, because the government has decided that while it went out and had public hearings, it doesn't want to now take the opportunity to use those public hearings to improve the bill. They're shutting the process down. I want to get some of those concerns on the record.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Twenty-two hours and we didn't get through two clauses.

Mr Murphy: I see that we've teased the bears again. There's a caterwauling from the government benches.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. Members, come to order.

Mr Murphy: I see the government benches react unfortunately when they see the truth.

But I did want to mention Terry McCullum, the executive director of Anglican Houses, who has written quite a lengthy letter on behalf of his organization along with Julie Mancuso, the manager of adult programs, and expressed a concern specifically about two areas of the bill. One of them is the length-of-stay provisions and the other is the "principal residence" definition.

My understanding is that the committee has voted to change length of stay. I see the minister in the House and I hope she will ensure that modification stays in place. I appreciate those members of the government who did vote in support of the Liberal amendment.

Let me say there was also some concern about the "principal residence" definition and the impact on rehabilitative housing. I'm sure the minister is aware of that and I hope they will take that into account as well.

I also got a letter from a number of organizations jointly—Houselink Community Homes, the 90 Shuter Street Homes First Society, which is in the member for Fort York's riding, and Streetcity, which is a very innovative housing community in one building in my riding—which expressed some concerns about the operation of the bill. I wanted to pass those concerns on.

In particular, they outlined concerns in four areas of the bill itself, which amends the Landlord and Tenant Act so that they will now come under its operation. Particularly, they were concerned about how threats of violence were going to be dealt with, as well as time delays, which, as I mentioned, has been to a certain degree addressed; reliance on the police for the eviction process—there was a concern about how that is going to be cumbersome and not very workable in that environment—and the balancing of the rights of community residents. I think there are some fairly valid concerns. I know this letter was sent to the minister in February directly, and I hope that she will respond to them.

I also want to note, finally, Toronto Psychiatric Survivors, which is a wonderful organization in my riding. Martha Gandier is involved and I believe made a presentation to the committee as well. They do some very wonderful work in my community, a community which I'm proud to represent. I've been in and seen them. She is pleased to be included in the Landlord and Tenant Act for three reasons, related to privacy concerns and the protection the Landlord and Tenant Act provides, coercion issues and eviction, and the protection of due process. I wanted to recognize her efforts and as well the presentation she made, which I think is an excellent one.

I do think it is unfortunate, given the fabulous quality that I see, actually, taken in all these presentations which were put before the committee, that we have not had an opportunity to really work at the bill longer. I know the government says we spent 17 hours, or 22 hours, or whatever it is. Let me just say that from the public's perspective, I think they'd understand if we took a little while longer and got it right, rather than taking the hammer. I think democracy may not be a perfect process, it's sometimes messy, but I think it's better for all of us if we let it move through the process. We get a better result at the end.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I want to start out this debate on closure on Bill 120 by reading some words from Bob Rae, who is now the Premier of the province, but we'll look at what he said in opposition. This is Mr Rae to, I believe, the Speaker on December 9, 1982:

"...and because we are concerned with preserving the rights of opposition and with preserving the rights of each and every individual member to have his or her say with respect to this piece of legislation, and because we are concerned to see that each and every member of the Legislature has a right to put his or her view with respect to this legislation, we are firmly and strongly opposed to this motion being put at this time and in this way."

A further quote from Mr Rae, and this was February 15, 1983: "Can the Premier say if it is now the intention of the government to introduce closure whenever it feels it is not getting its way, or debate is not going in the direction it wants, or it is under some pressure from its own backbenchers?" We've got lots and lots of quotes from Mr Rae in opposition; that H-word that we're not allowed to use here in the Legislature comes to mind.

Mr Rae said on February 15, 1983, "It has become clear that this government has drunk deep and long the heady wine of the guillotine and simply cannot get enough of it." Am I making my point, Madam Speaker? Then on January 19, 1989, once again Mr Rae said, "...it will be open to any government, notwithstanding the standing orders, to come down in April or May and say, 'We want to have three days for this bill and two days for that bill, and if we can't get agreement from the House leaders'—the argument from the government will be—'we are going to do it by way of standing order.'" Well, we know that the government has done this.

"If you allow that to happen for more than one bill"—let me read that again; this is Mr Rae in opposition: "If you allow that to happen for more than one bill, the clear implication will then be that literally anything goes in terms of how governments allocate time. The only protection we have in this regard, Mr Speaker, in terms of the appropriateness of that notice of motion, is your ruling on what governments are entitled to do in this House."

Well, this is a government that has used closure many, many times. They used it on Bill 79, employment equity; they used it on Bill 47, photo-radar; they used it on Bill 143, the Ottawa-Carleton act; they used it on Bill 40, the labour bill; they used it on Bill 150, creating venture capital corporations, and they used it on Bill 4, the rent regulation act.

Now let me just once again refer to what Mr Rae said. "If you allow that to happen for more than one bill, the clear implication will then be that literally anything goes in terms of how governments allocate time." This is a very serious matter. It's a matter of the opposition parties, who represent the majority of people in this province because the government—

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): Why don't you let us govern?

Mr Turnbull: —and I am not denying the government the right to govern—

Mr Mills: You are just bitter that you lost.

The Acting Speaker: Order. Interjections are out of order.

Mr Turnbull: —but the fact is, it won its mandate with 37.8% of the vote, so therefore, the opposition parties represent the majority of people in this province. My point is, is it not reasonable that we be allowed to express the concerns of our constituents when they come to us and say, "We are concerned with legislation"?

In the case of my own constituents, overwhelmingly I have had comments that they are against Bill 120. I have had some of the constituents who have said they're in favour of it, and I will not present an unbalanced picture. It is a fact that there are some people in my constituency who are in favour of Bill 120. However, the majority of people who have communicated with my office and the ratepayer groups that I have communicated with in meeting after meeting after meeting have said they're against this legislation. They have asked to be heard by the legislative committee which looked into this bill after second reading; overwhelmingly they were turned down. They were not allowed to present to that committee.

Mr Gary Wilson: Come on, we heard over 200 people on that.

Mr Turnbull: Now, my friend across the way says, "Well, we had over 200 people at the committee." The fact is, this is very controversial legislation. In bringing in this legislation, the government tramples over the rights of municipalities to set zoning, and zoning is set in concert with the residents of a neighbourhood, and that zoning is there to protect the residents of the neighbourhood.

Indeed, if you move into a single-family area, you pay typically more money to buy into that area. Now what does the Minister of Housing say? She calls it "snob zoning." These were the minister's words in committee on this bill. She thinks it's snob zoning, so therefore she says: "I couldn't care less what the people in the municipalities are saying. I'm going to push this through."

In the hearings, we had AMO suggesting that it was against this legislation. We have had the fire chiefs overwhelmingly saying—not overwhelmingly, totally have said—that this is bad legislation and they're concerned. They're concerned because of the right of entry into these potential death traps.

Now, the minister argues that in fact this legislation will improve the lot of people who live in basement apartments. There may be some instances where that is true, but the problems that people who live in single-family areas have if they allow the municipalities' right to set zoning to be usurped by the province is that the people who own those homes may never be able to get the tenants out again. If you go to sell your house and you try to get somebody who's living in a basement apartment out because you want to deliver vacant possession to the new owner, who wants the total house, you may not be able to do it. So there will be an effect on property values.

Infrastructure is put into areas consistent with the zoning that is in place when you build an area. You put in schools, you put in fire service and in fact you put in things like trunk sewers in consideration of the density that will be in that area.

This government says it couldn't care less. They are going to force the municipalities to accept basement apartments wherever anybody wants.

Mr Gary Wilson: Come on, that's not true, David. You should come to some of the hearings.

Mr Mills: Isn't he ridiculous?

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): Of course it's true.

Mr Turnbull: I'm somewhat surprised by members of the government heckling that it isn't true. I don't think they have followed this legislation themselves—

Mr Mills: When he speaks, truth is abandoned.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Durham East, please come to order.

Mr Turnbull: —because, inescapably, you cannot draw any other conclusion than the fact that any area that is single-family zoning, if you don't want to have that turned into double-family housing, then quite frankly you have no protection. One developer can move into an area, can buy a single house, can divide it into two apartments with this legislation and use that to block-bust that street. You can have whoever you want. You can have the so-called tenant from hell.

Now, I want to emphasize that the vast majority of tenants are good, decent people who should be protected, but the fact is that tenants from hell can be literally hell to the owner of a house who wants to get them out, and it's very difficult, and in addition, developers can use this as a play to block-bust, to get their foot in the door and slowly take over the block. That is a very serious problem.

If we allow this legislation to go forward with only one hour of third reading debate, we are not doing our job as legislators in expressing the legitimate concern of the majority of people who came before this committee, and no matter what heckling the government may make, the fact is inescapable: The majority of the people who came before the committee said they were against this legislation. I see the Minister of Housing, as usual, nodding her head. Well, Madam, you obviously weren't listening. Of course, obviously, if you cut off the number of people who can come and make depositions, then you can control the process to some extent. My own tenants were not allowed to come before this committee.

To use Mr Rae's words in opposition, "We have a government that has drunk deep and long the heady wine of the guillotine and simply cannot get enough of it." Whenever this government runs into anything which is controversial where the government is not getting the support of the public, as evidenced by the committee hearings, then what we see is the guillotine coming down.

Where does democracy go from this point? Why bother having a Legislature if you are not allowing proper debate? I will say to the governing party, there can be no doubt about it, you will not be the governing party after the next election and you will rue the day you pushed through so many of these changes which will allow any future government to ignore any complaints you may make about limiting debate on anything.

We've read what Mr Rae said in opposition. He said if it was done more than once, it would show that the government wasn't interested in the democratic process. It hasn't been done just once, it's done so often. And we're not talking about a couple of bills at the end of the session, we're talking about a whole body of bills.

Mr Mills: You won't let us govern, that's why.

The Acting Speaker: I ask the member for Durham East to come to order.

Mr Turnbull: We came back just a few weeks ago, and this is the second time allocation we've had since we came back from the winter break. We are subverting the democratic process.

Let's look at some of the difficulties that care homes and the residents of care homes will have as a result of this. This legislation is such that if a resident of a care home became dangerous and violent or needed a higher level of care, the operators of the care home would not be able expeditiously to get the resident out. That is a very serious issue.

What happens if you have a loved one in a retirement home and one of the other residents has become very dangerous and aggressive because their condition has deteriorated quickly? Is it fair to the other residents that they should have their wellbeing put at risk because the government is saying, "No, we're going to put you under the Landlord and Tenant Act"? More appropriately, that aspect of the act should have been completely separated and should have been handled as separate legislation.

Mr Gary Wilson: On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I'd just like to ask a question of the—

Mr Turnbull: Come on, that's ridiculous. Madam Speaker, I would ask you to add some time on to the clock for that. It's very clear that he's just trying to take up our time, which is further proof that this government doesn't want the words of the opposition heard. You can gag us in terms of time allocation, but it isn't washing out there. The people I speak to detest your government. People who voted for you last time detest it because you are ignoring what the people are saying.

The minister uses some statistics of how many people are in favour of allowing basement apartments. I would suggest to the minister, put that to a referendum. Allow each municipality, even broken down by ward, to have a referendum about whether they want this incursion into the zoning within their area. Let the people decide, not a bunch of politicians.

The people who've bought their homes, who were protected by existing zoning, are now being denied that protection. I believe it's appropriate that we listen to the people. That's the reason so many people are rather put off politics today: because of governments ignoring the wishes of the people. I can tell you that the people in my area overwhelmingly are saying they don't want this legislation. They bought into a single-family zone and they want to keep it that way.

There are circumstances—I mean, there was a widow who died, unfortunately, a year ago who was a neighbour of mine; she lived on the other side of the street. She was somewhat lonely and she took in a policeman who was living there, illegally had an apartment in the house. Did anybody say anything? Of course not, because we believed it was in her best interests. It provided some companionship to a very dear lady and gave a little income, and the community turned its back on that.

But the community does not want, holus-bolus, the neighbourhood of single-family homes that people have worked very hard to be able to afford turned into an area of duplexes, and that is in essence what we do with this. We have some serious problems with the implications for zoning and for municipalities to protect the tenants in residential zones.

Also, we have some very serious concerns about how we will protect residents in these care homes if one of the residents becomes dangerous and cannot be moved expeditiously because of the protection of the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Additionally, there is a very interesting question which I believe has not been handled adequately by the committee because of the fact that the committee hearings have been cut off in clause-by-clause. If a tenant were to pay for the rent component, which is now under this legislation being separated out from the care component of what they pay to that home, but did not pay for the care component, what rights would the owner of that home have to remove them under the Landlord and Tenant Act if they continued to pay their rent? This poses some very serious problems for the operators of care homes, be they profit or non-profit, and potentially affects the financial viability of these operations. In the end, the residents can be the victims: that they will suffer because of the injustices and the financial difficulties that could potentially be caused by this.

I've touched briefly on the fire safety concerns which were expressed by fire chiefs, and it is a very serious concern. We have seen a number of people killed in basement apartments, and there has been very little this government has done to address this very serious problem. It is a problem that could be addressed by reasonable amendments to the bill because, unfortunately, I know the government's going to pass this bill as soon as they bring it in. They have a majority. They're going to pass it. But they haven't listened to the people, they haven't listened to the presentations.

I was very attentive to what was presented to this committee and very concerned about the implications for York Mills, the area I represent. I believe there are ways the bill could be improved, although I believe it is an inappropriate bill. Most of all, it should have been brought in as two separate pieces of legislation: one handling the housing aspect and the other the care homes.

With that, I have put some of the concerns of the constituents of York Mills on the record. It is something I believe the government should think long and hard about, as to how it goes forward in the future with cutting off very legitimate debate and questions from the opposition who, as I've said, in fact represent the majority of Ontarians.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Offer: In the time permitted, I want to put a few points on record. I understand that the time we've got now is evenly allocated, and this just happens—excuse me, Madam Speaker, I think we have to get an understanding as to the time which is permitted on this.

Interjection.

Mr Offer: Okay, thank you very much.

I obviously have some very strong concerns about what the Bob Rae government and the Minister of Housing have done today. I think what they have done is nothing less than slap the face of the people of the province of Ontario. It is incredible to me that on a bill as important, in terms of its opposition, the government would stop all debate on this legislation, and effectively that is what it has done.

I am looking at a motion which was introduced today by Bob Rae's Minister of Housing, Evelyn Gigantes, which states that this bill, which deals with basement apartments, notwithstanding the many concerns that have been raised from municipality to municipality, notwithstanding the many concerns that have been raised by fire chiefs across this province, notwithstanding the concerns raised by individuals in municipalities, will have on third reading all of 60 minutes to be debated.

That is 60 minutes which, I would expect, would most likely be divided between three parties. In other words, a bill which has caused great concern throughout this province is going to be allowed for debate 20 minutes per party. I believe that is a terrible disgrace to this Legislature. I believe this is an act of irresponsibility, of tyranny that this Legislature has never seen before. I do not believe that I am overstating this case. I cannot believe—

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): You are.

Mr Gary Wilson: You are.

Mr Offer: The NDP members who will, on third reading, trundle out and vote in favour of this bill, think that speaking for 20 minutes on a piece of legislation is sufficient. Well, I have received letters and telephone calls from my constituents. When I've been out speaking to them at community events, one of the issues that is brought forward to me is that around basement apartments, and they are concerned.

They care not a whit about the politics of the Minister of Housing or about Bob Rae. They care about safety in their community. They care about people who live in basement apartments. They care about the fact that the NDP government is, without doubt, ramming a piece of legislation through that does not address the issues of safety that are so important, crucially important to the people of this province.

In the hearings, the fire chief for the city of Mississauga, Fire Chief Cyril Hare, brought forward the fact of the safety issue. I am not going to recite everything that the fire chief of the city of Mississauga stated except to say that he clearly articulated the issue of the need for safety.

We clearly understand that this bill is negligent in this area, that there will be a problem, that there are safety issues which have not been addressed, that the government, notwithstanding that, is going to be ramming through the legislation with but one hour of debate for everyone in this Legislature, not individually but collectively, that probably each party as a whole is going to be allowed 20 minutes. It is nothing less than a slap in the face for the people, not only in my riding of Mississauga North but indeed throughout the province of Ontario.

I have letters from individuals in the city of Mississauga who are pleading with Bob Rae, who are pleading with the Minister of Housing to read their own legislation, saying that it doesn't meet the needs of the safety criteria we would expect everyone to have.

The bill is bad. There are maybe 10,000 basement apartment units in the city of Mississauga. We do not know because there is no way in which we can know. We have received estimations from the fire services department that it could be upwards of 7,500, to maybe 10,000, maybe beyond, and this bill will say upon its passage that those 10,000 units are legal. That's what it says. It will send out a message to those living in basement apartments, those 10,000 units, that they are now living in legal units. But what does that mean?

The minister and members of the government will trundle out that there are certain regulations or things of this nature that will attach to basement apartments, but there is no method for municipalities or fire services departments to know where those 10,000 units are. So just as a matter of common sense, of rational thinking, how is it that one can ensure that a unit is in fact safe if you don't know where that unit happens to be located?

These are the concerns that people in my riding have been calling me about. They are saying, "How can the government say that those 10,000 units are going to be safe and that the people living in those units are going to be living in safe conditions if there is no provision under the legislation which allows the government, the municipality or the fire services department to find out where they are?"

The bill is negligent. The bill is deficient. The bill is irresponsible. The actions by the Bob Rae government in ramming through a bill are, at very best, tyrannical. I cannot understand how a government can pass a bill which is going to put so many people, and I am just speaking about some numbers in the city of Mississauga, not the province of Ontario, at risk.

The Minister of Housing has a responsibility to shuck aside her political ideology and look to safety. You have an obligation. The members of the NDP government have an obligation to say to the Premier of the province, their leader Bob Rae, to the Minister of Housing, Evelyn Gigantes, that we cannot allow a bill to be passed which jeopardizes people. When a bill is passed, such as this, which does not allow a municipality to find out where these basement apartments are, which does not allow a fire services department in your own city to find out where these units happen to be, it puts those people at risk.

My letters, I have no doubt, will continue. I have no doubt that not only will they continue, they will increase, because they are absolutely certain, as I am, that the government is totally wrong in what it is doing. In my riding we have different communities, just as in all other ridings—the communities of Malton, Streetsville, Meadowvale, Meadowvale Village, East Credit—all of which have basement apartments, all of which are concerned about the safety aspect of the basement apartments in their area.

We have received and read in the newspapers the tragic consequences of what can happen, and that transcends all politics. The government should get that through their heads, that what we're talking about are lives. We're talking about safety. We're talking about a bill which doesn't address those concerns. We're talking about a government that doesn't care, that sees this as nothing more than some further political exercise that they have to use in terms of making this bill law.

This is a motion which basically shuts the door to this Legislature. It says to our constituents and to the constituents of all members, "What you have to say about this bill, as important as it is, just is not going to be listened to by the government." I believe that this is a message that this government will continue to rue the day that it has introduced a piece of legislation which limits debate for this whole Legislature to but 60 minutes.

Mr David Johnson: I'm going to talk about a number of sectors that have come before us through the Bill 120 hearings. The minister has indicated that there were certain misunderstandings by certain people about Bill 120 and that now they've had discussions and consultation and everybody has been set right and everybody has been told that it's okay after all. But I can tell you that in being involved in the discussions I know that there is a lot of opposition, a great deal of opposition to Bill 120.

For example, the Ontario Residential Care Association represents some 600 facilities, retirement homes, across this province. Over 35,000 seniors, disabled and post-psychiatric residents, average age of 83, live in their facilities. That's the Ontario Residential Care Association. Representing some 35,000 people, seniors, across the province of Ontario, what do they have to say about Bill 120?

Bear in mind that one of the onerous aspects of Bill 120 is that it imposes the Landlord and Tenant Act on these care facilities. The Landlord and Tenant Act was intended to regulate tenants but not care homes. So the point that the Ontario Residential Care Association is making is that the Landlord and Tenant Act "was never intended to regulate specialized labour-intensive service delivery." The Landlord and Tenant Act "is legislation geared towards tenants, not towards assisting elderly and post-psychiatric residents."

What is the outcome? I'm sure that the minister is not concerned about this, but the outcome, according to this organization representing 35,000 residents, senior residents, average age of 83—and I might say that some of those residents appeared before us in opposition to this bill as well; not only the operators, but the residents as well.

One consequence is that a resident who requires more care than a retirement home can provide is at risk. What happens is that a person will come into a retirement home, need a certain level of care, but as that person ages, a higher level of care will be required. Retirement homes are only able to give a certain level of care, and as that person progresses and needs more care, they really should move to another facility, a home for the aged or a nursing home or some other facility. As it stands today, without the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act, if a resident objects to moving—and some residents do not wish to move—then provisions can be made to move residents into a proper facility where they can get the proper care.

Under Bill 120, if the resident chooses not to move, then the Landlord and Tenant Act says that you cannot move that resident; that resident stays right there. Then what happens?

Hon Ms Gigantes: You have to follow a process.

Mr David Johnson: Then there's a process. The minister says there's a process. The operators that came before us said the process does not work. So not only is the resident in jeopardy, but it's interesting in terms of where the operator stands, what sort of liability the operator incurs.

What about a resident who is a threat to the other residents or themselves? They say, "An important distinguishing characteristic of retirement homes is their communal nature"—that means that people are living together, sharing dining facilities, sharing other aspects of their accommodation—"and close day-to-day interaction of all residents." Consequently, if one resident becomes aggressive—and this happens; we were told this happens—then of course it diminishes the quality of life for all the other residents in the facility.

With the provision of the Landlord and Tenant Act—

Hon Ms Gigantes: There's a process.

Mr David Johnson: There is a process. The minister says there's another wonderful process. If you've got six months to a year to go through a process, you may be able to deal with it. What happens to the people who live in that facility who are being threatened or abused or whatever in the meantime? "It's not the government's problem; there is a process."

1730

It's interesting that you may think there is only certain people who are opposed to this bill and that perhaps it's just the right-wing Tories and right-wing Liberals, if the Liberals are right-wing; I don't know where Liberals are in this day and age, but wherever they are.

Mr Offer: We're over here.

Mr David Johnson: Oh, there they are over there; okay. I have a letter from the Honourable Stanley Knowles. You may wonder, what does the Honourable Stanley Knowles think about Bill 120? Guess where the Honourable Stanley Knowles lives. He lives in a retirement residence. He lives in Rideau Place in a retirement residence. The minister undoubtedly knows what Mr Knowles thinks about Bill 120. He says:

"For the past few years, Rideau Place and other retirement homes have been trying to warn the government that putting such retirement homes under housing legislation"—this housing legislation, Bill 120—"would cause serious problems in the day-to-day running of such retirement homes and for the residents living in them."

The minister says the Honourable Stanley Knowles is wrong. He used to be right, but he's no longer—

Hon Ms Gigantes: They just don't have the full information.

Mr David Johnson: They just didn't have the full information. Everybody who disagrees with the government does not have the full information. That goes, then, for the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. They don't have the full information either, because they certainly don't agree with the government. The minister says, "We have talked with all municipalities, we have consulted, we have heard all their problems and we have made changes," sort of implying that now all the municipalities are happy.

Hon Ms Gigantes: We never said that.

Mr David Johnson: Oh, you didn't say that? Okay, there was that implication. Let me tell you what the association of municipalities thinks of Bill 120:

"Bill 120 contains virtually the same changes to the Planning Act and the Municipal Act which were contained in Bill 90," which was the previous bill. "The association is very disappointed that after all the opposition and discussions surrounding Bill 90, the sections of Bill 120 pertaining to apartments in houses are essentially intact, with minor housekeeping amendments."

They're saying you did nothing. They're saying you may have consulted and you may have allowed a few people to talk, but you didn't make any changes. You didn't hear. It didn't sink in. Their same objections that they've had all along are still there. They go on to say, "This is an unwarranted intrusion and interference with municipal zoning authority."

What I'm speaking of here—first, I'm talking about the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, representing probably about 80% of the municipalities or more in this province; and I'm speaking about a bill that would allow, as of right, an accessory apartment, most often a basement apartment, in every house in this province, in violation of all the zoning and official plans of all the municipalities of the province of Ontario, save and except where they have septic tanks.

The association of municipalities is saying it's an unwarranted intrusion into municipal zoning. "The legislation works contrary to the many active and progressive housing intensification efforts already under way." Of course, the minister says the municipalities are not toeing the line; they are not listening to her housing policies. But the association of municipalities says that's not true, and I'll give you a few more instances a bit later.

They say, "The legislation overrides local planning to ensure the provision of the necessary hard and soft services in communities." If you're really interested in what the municipalities think, they do not like the legislation and you recognize that.

Is that just the association of municipalities? What about everybody else? We hear there's broad support across the province of Ontario: 75% of Ontario, I think I've heard.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Seventy.

Mr David Johnson: Seventy? Seventy per cent of Ontario loves this bill. I can tell you, here's the village of Hastings. I have their resolution in opposition to Bill 120 from the people from Hastings.

I have the town of Ajax. What do they say about it? They're in opposition. "The province should not proceed with this legislation" until all the questions they've raised, questions which have not yet been dealt with, are answered. The town of Ajax is in opposition.

The city of Belleville: The city of Belleville objects to Bill 120. It says so right here in the resolution.

How about the town of Lindsay? In the town of Lindsay, it was a topic of debate. They're opposed to it too. You recognize that. Where is this 70%?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation and Minister Responsible for Francophone Affairs): What about Mississauga?

Mr David Johnson: The Minister of Transportation asks about Mississauga. Mississauga will support intensification, as most municipalities will, if they're allowed to do their own planning and impose their own conditions in context with their own residents and their own needs. What you're doing—you're hearing this over and over again, but I guess you don't care—is imposing, right across Ontario, one planning system to address a problem that you perceive. All municipalities are having this one planning process imposed on them and they're saying it doesn't fit all needs, municipality after municipality.

There's the town of Lindsay. The town of Lindsay expresses its "continuing opposition" to this legislation. The town of Tillsonburg says, "Bill 120 is in blatant disregard for the rights of citizens." The town of Haileybury is opposed to it. The city of Niagara Falls—

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): Have you got any in support?

Mr David Johnson: I looked for those in support. I can't find them. It's 70% of the province of Ontario, but I can't find anybody; I don't know where that 70% has gone.

The city of Niagara Falls is in opposition.

Here's the city of Cambridge. The city of Cambridge says, "The proposed Bill 120 represents a significant provincial intrusion into municipal land use regulation and represents a compromise in the local planning power." The city of Cambridge is in opposition.

The city of Sarnia objects to the provisions of Bill 120.

Minister, here's an interesting one from the city of Burlington. The city of Burlington shares the basic objective of the province regarding encouraging residential intensification. They share your objective and they're in support of housing intensification. However, they oppose the legislation you're bringing forward, "an extreme and arbitrary" way, they say, in terms of dealing with intensification.

The city of Ottawa supports intensification, but not your bill, not your way of doing it. They have their own particular problems.

Mr David Johnson: Madam Speaker, can we have a little order over here? It's very noisy.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The member for Don Mills has the floor. That means we would like to be able to hear him.

Mr David Johnson: I've got municipality after municipality after municipality.

Through you, Madam Speaker, to the minister, the city of Ottawa has a plan for intensification. I think you would agree, coming from the Ottawa area yourself, that that city, among all cities, has been very responsive in terms of the housing needs of its citizens. I hope you would agree with that; I think that's so. Yet you're imposing your own unilateral approach, overriding all municipal authority in this regard, imposing on the city of Ottawa your approach. They say it's not right for Ottawa.

The city of London is another municipality that has taken initiatives in housing, that has established areas for intensification. They've consulted with their own residents, they've planned their communities with their own residents, and now you have thrown that out the window. All the planning they've done in the city of London you've thrown out the window with this bill. You've imposed your own Queen's Park solution over local planning.

The city of Hamilton has taken another approach to intensification and it fits the needs. In the city of Hamilton there are houses with different structures. Many of the houses have cellars instead of having basements.

The city of Waterloo has a unique problem, because within the city is the Waterloo campus, and they have taken an approach with regard to student housing. The mayor of the city of Waterloo says your bill, Bill 120, which you are imposing right across Ontario, will have a dire impact on their neighbourhoods and on their student housing, because they have planned with their people their needs and you are overriding that, you're throwing that out the window. That's the city of Waterloo.

The minister says: "Okay. All the municipalities are against them. The municipalities are in favour of snob zoning."

Hon Ms Gigantes: There are four in favour.

Mr David Johnson: Oh, you've found four: four municipalities out of 800. I hope you have a better betting average than that, or else the next election you will be out.

It's interesting. When you quote the average person and what the average person thinks about this, it depends on how you ask the question. The city of Scarborough has conducted a poll. They sent out 5,400 questionnaires to the people of Scarborough and asked them about basement apartments. You say 70% of the people support. What they found was that 37% of the people support basement apartments, 33% oppose basement apartments, and another 30% are what they call the middle ground: they support basement apartments under certain conditions. That's how you get your 70%. Some people, about half, will support them under any circumstances. Other people will support them if there are certain conditions.

For example, one of the most popular conditions was that many people think that accessory apartments should be permitted if they are owner-occupied. What the city of Scarborough found in its questionnaire is that 76% of the people who are in the middle ground, who would support under certain conditions, would indeed support a basement apartment if the owner lived in the main residence, if the unit was owner-occupied. That is one of the conditions that many of the municipalities have asked. The minister says you can't do that.

We had a delegation from the city of Etobicoke. The solicitor of the city of Etobicoke was before us and she said that it was her view that you could do that. It would require a change in legislation, but indeed basement apartments could be limited to owner-occupied residences.

Because my time is running out, I would like to shift to the issue of the care homes. We know that this bill, which unfortunately is going through closure today, will impact not only on municipalities with regard to base-ment apartments and accessory apartments but will impact on care homes. I mentioned retirement homes. This bill will also impact on other kinds of care homes.

For example, I give you the case of the Ontario Federation of Community Mental Health and Addiction Programs. They run about 100 agencies with accommodation for people who need assistance.

Madam Speaker, can we have a little order? Is it possible to have order?

The Acting Speaker: Order. I would ask members to take their seats, please. The member for Don Mills has the floor. I would like to be able to hear him, thank you. Go ahead.

Mr David Johnson: I was just saying that the Ontario Federation of Community Mental Health and Addiction Programs operates over 100 accommodation residences for people who need care and who also need a place to live. The Landlord and Tenant Act, under this bill, would apply to their residences, and they say that it is their view that their rehabilitation and recovery programs of a transitional nature should not be dealt with under this act.

They go on to say that they are concerned that the amendments as written would cause fundamental changes in the nature of their programs. People will no longer be in a rehabilitation or recovery program; they would simply become tenants. In other words, the care they provide in these programs would be lost over a period of time.

They give an example. For instance, if in one of their alcohol recovery programs a resident was permitted to bring alcohol into one of their units, you can imagine what would happen. People living together, close surroundings, recovering from alcohol abuse: If one of the residents is permitted to bring alcohol into the program, it puts the other residents under severe stress.

The way it operates today is that the facility would have the right to control this situation. If a resident did not stay on the program, then that resident would simply have to leave, because they can't ruin the program for all the other people who need the program. Under Bill 120, the facility would lose the ability to remove that person. That person would be able to stay there, would be able to drink openly, and it would be a very stressful situation for the other residents who would be accommodated there. It would, in effect, cause the failure of the program.

Time is running out. I have correspondence from the Society of St Vincent de Paul. They run a transitional home for men recovering from alcohol addiction. They say exactly the same thing: You apply the Landlord and Tenant Act to their program and there will be serious consequences. The programs could well fail, programs that are required in the province of Ontario.

Anglican Houses were before us. They have serious problems, 29 rehabilitative and transitional houses in Ontario. They're dealing with people who have histories of violence, suicide, theft and disruption. They need authority to deal with the situations. Bill 120 will take away their authority.

We had the Massey Centre for unwed young mothers before us. Their main need is for safety. Young mothers who have been abused come into this program. They need security. Bill 120, by imposing the Landlord and Tenant Act, would remove that security. It will have dire consequences. The young mothers themselves have come before us to plead, "Don't do this." Not only the operators but the young mothers.

We had the Community Occupational Therapists and Associates. They have a number of projects with over 700 tenants.

Group after group have come to us, municipality after municipality, citizen after citizen, objecting to this Bill 120, and the fire chiefs—to throw it all on top in the last few seconds—have said that this bill will not solve their problem, that they cannot get in and ensure safety within the basement apartments.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. Further debate, the member for Mississauga West.

Interjection: Hazel's man.

Mr Mahoney: Well, Hazel's man, he calls me. I'm proud to say that that's probably true, one of those who supports the mayor of Mississauga who at least understands, I might say to the member opposite, the responsibilities of an elected person to represent the views of their people. I'll tell you: That's what she understands and that's what this minister doesn't understand.

Interjections.

Mr Mahoney: I think the thing that bothers me more than anything about this bill—let me admit, by the way, that there are some aspects of the bill that make sense, and indeed some of the regulations make sense, but they clearly sit like an island without the ability for the municipality to enforce those regulations.

But I think what bothers me more than anything is the arrogance of the minister and her absolute refusal to listen to the people's concerns as they were expressed at committee and have been expressed in countless numbers of letters to the offices of members of the opposition and I suspect, as I see the former mayor of Oshawa taking his leave, to people within the caucus of the minister's own party.

I cannot believe for one minute that anybody in this party who has had any municipal experience or any kind of a relationship with a municipal council or a mayor would not understand their frustration and their concern.

Mr Bradley: Most of them haven't and that's why they don't.

Mr Mahoney: Well, maybe that's the issue. The member for St Catharines says most of them have not had the opportunity to have any municipal experience. I guess that's perhaps true, that most of them came from the shop floor, or wherever, or even perhaps were unemployed, I don't know, when they secured probably the best job that they'll ever have in their life for the shortest period of time, because let me tell you, you folks are gone. You will be a footnote in history, and this arrogant minister will go with you.

We'll make the changes in the areas that are required to provide safe accommodation for people living in basement apartments—but the absolute arrogance and the refusal of the government to listen to the concerns that have been put forward, in many, many cases in a non-partisan way to say, for goodness' sake, take a look at some of these ideas.

Hon Mr Pouliot: What about the tenants?

Mr Mahoney: You can talk about the tenants. In Mississauga we experienced two tragedies: Two mothers and their babies died in basement apartment fires. Don't talk to us in Mississauga. Both of those tragedies in my riding, to the Minister of Transportation, were forewarned by the fire chief and by the mayor and by members on this side of the House, and this government did nothing.

Mr Mills: What a bunch of baloney.

Mr Mahoney: It is not a bunch of baloney. It is fact. They were forewarned in committee—

Mr Mills: Why didn't the fire marshal do something about it?

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Mahoney: There were comments made. There were absolute—

Mr Mills: If you say he was forewarned—

Mr Mahoney: You wouldn't listen to him.

Mr Mills: If he was forewarned, why didn't he go in there and do something about it? If the fire chief was forewarned—

The Acting Speaker: The member for Durham East, interjections are out of order. I would ask the member to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr Mahoney: Madam Speaker, thank you. The member opposite says if the fire chief forewarned it, why didn't he go in and do something? You just don't get it. You just don't understand. That's what is so frustrating about all this. We have tragedies occurring in our community that could equally occur just as easily in your community. Why don't you listen? We have put forward—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Mahoney: We have said that the problem is very clear. The problem is safety. The minister has introduced regulations that would require smoke detectors in basement apartments. Congratulations. The minister has introduced regulations that would require a proper exit, either through a pop-out window or a door to the outside. Congratulations. The minister has said in the regulations that if the exit access is not provided safely and easily, there can be a requirement for a sprinkler system. I again say congratulations.

They are all ideas that were put forward by Fire Chief Hare and by other fire chiefs and municipal politicians and other people in this place to tell the minister that these safety precautions in basement apartments must be put in place. They're there in regulation.

Question: How do you enforce them? The minister has admitted there are over 100,000 basement apartments existing illegally. She seems to think, and everybody falling in line like a bunch of trained seals seems to think, that by simply saying they're legal, you'll all of a sudden have them come out from under the basement apartments and say: "Here we go. I have a basement apartment." It's just not going to happen. The fact of the matter is, there is nothing to compel anyone.

You can pretend, if you want, that the tenants are all of a sudden going to feel this great surge of power and come out from the basement apartments and say, "We demand protection." I tell the minister, the members over there, the reality is that they're not going to do that. The home owners are not—

Mr Gary Wilson: So you keep them illegal?

Mr Mahoney: No, there's a solution, if you would only listen; it's a very simple solution. Instead of putting in place some kind of regulation that is impossible to enforce—if the municipalities even had the right of entry, they couldn't afford the staff to go in and do it under the current situation. The solution is—listen to this—home owners' insurance policies. Exactly.

Hon Mr Pouliot: You had five years to do it.

Mr Mahoney: Listen to this: You simply put in every renewal for a home owner's insurance policy, or in every new application for a home owner's insurance policy, two questions. One: Do you have an auxiliary apartment in your home, yes or no? Two: If yes, is it registered with the municipality? It's all they have to do, those two simple questions in every renewal application and in every new application. Now follow this; I know it's difficult. If I had a bouncing ball, I'd show you. Follow this. If they answer no to the first question but in reality they have an auxiliary apartment, they would run the risk of invalidating their home owner's insurance. Why would they want to do that?

You might be interested to know, Minister, that on Thursday the 21st I have a meeting with people from the Insurance Bureau of Canada, the mayor of Mississauga and a couple of members of council to explore their interest in doing this. They're very, very interested in doing this.

The minister knows that; the Premier knows that. I have told the Premier personally about this idea and asked him to instruct his intransigent minister to at least look at the issue to see if it makes sense. The fire chiefs have said it makes sense; the municipal officials—I don't know why you can't think about this. You just simply put it in the policy. If they lie, they invalidate their home owner's insurance. Who would risk it?

Very simply, when they fill out and they answer the question, the municipality would have an agreement with the insurance bureau that the information would be made available to them. Then the municipality could arrange for an inspection to be done at the request of the insurance company and to be paid for by the home owner.

Now you would say, "Well, why would we put the home owner in a position of having to expend money?" Let me tell you why. A basement apartment is a revenue-producing business within a residential component. It's a business. If you were allowing someone to open a business along Main Street in your town, you would require them to pay for inspections for fire safety. There's absolutely no doubt about it. A basement apartment is a business. It's not unreasonable that someone who wants to open a basement apartment and, indeed, become a landlord and earn revenue which would help them pay for the costs of running that overall home should pay a few hundred dollars to have an inspector come in. In fact, you would think they would want it.

I can tell you—and I've talked to the owners who owned the homes where the fire tragedies occurred in Mississauga—they feel awful. In one case, they were reasonably new immigrants to this country who didn't understand that there was a requirement for a smoke detector in our municipality. Nobody told them. When they bought their home the real estate broker didn't inform them of this and, in fact, the home was purchased on the basis that it had a revenue-producing basement apartment that would help them pay for the acquisition of the home. But nobody informed these people that there were safety requirements in the municipality and yet they're made to feel like criminals; they're made to feel like it was their fault, the tragedy that occurred.

The reality is that when they bought that home they would have to apply for a home owner's insurance. There's a mortgage on the property. The mortgage company would not grant the mortgage without insurance. It's basic, fundamental common sense. So the mortgage company would want to know if they had insurance. To get insurance they would have to answer the questions I've suggested to this minister. When they answered those questions, then you would know where the basement apartment was. You see, it is so simple. It is such common sense. It is absolutely beyond me why the members of the caucus, who I believe would be concerned about the safety of their constituents, don't go to this Housing minister and, if she won't listen, go to the Premier and say: "Bob, for goodness' sake, listen to what they're saying. Take a look at this."

If you can show me why it won't work, I'll listen to the reasons why, but I've heard none. All I've seen is arrogance, a refusal to look at good, sound options.

The insurance bureau has admitted their first reaction to this idea when I called them was: "No, we don't want to get involved. it's government regulation."

I said: "Just a minute. It seems to me if you're insuring a property you would want to know if there were cooking facilities in the basement, if there was proper ventilation, if there was a smoke detector, if there was an exit for the people to get out. You would want to know what it is you're insuring. It just makes sense."

He took it to a meeting and they came back and said: "You're right. It does make sense. We think it's a good idea. We want to get together and talk about it."

In the few seconds left let me tell the minister this: Regardless of her stubborn, intransigent attitude on this, we are going to pursue this idea in the city of Mississauga, and it may well be that we can implement this idea with the home owner's insurance policy, without the government and without the minister. It's unfortunate that this minister won't show some leadership and see that this idea is implemented right across the province.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): In 1993 the NDP government announced that road subsidy funds for municipalities would be significantly restrained, meaning that many local governments have had to make do with less money than is required for Ontario's aging roads.

The united counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry received notification in February 1993 that their allocation would be $5.598 million for that fiscal year. Now past the end of that fiscal year, the Ministry of Transportation has failed to meet its obligations. The government still owes the counties in excess of $810,000. Today I heard that the counties have still not received any word on when that money will be coming.

As a result of the government's mismanagement, the county has had to borrow money at the total expense of the taxpayers, in order to continue its necessary road work.

Furthermore, the clerk of the counties just advised me this morning that the 1994 allocations won't even be announced until the end of April or early May, making budget planning extremely difficult at the local level.

The government is always talking about partnerships and the importance of partnership with municipalities. What kind of partner promises you money and then fails to deliver? The approval was given last year. Where is the counties' money?

GEORGE PEDERSEN

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): This evening the 1994 Order of Ontario ceremony will take place in the front lobby of Queen's Park. Twenty distinguished individuals will receive the Order of Ontario, established in 1986 to pay tribute to those Ontarians who exemplify the highest qualities of achievement and excellence and whose contributions enrich the lives of their fellow men and women in our province, in Canada and in the world.

Dr George Pedersen is one of those special people whose contributions to his many communities is outstanding. He began his career as an elementary school teacher in British Columbia and is now president and vice-chancellor of the University of Western Ontario. He has been a teacher, vice-principal and principal in both elementary and secondary schools. Dr Pedersen has been the dean of education at the University of Victoria, later serving as vice-president, academic. He went on to the presidency of Simon Fraser in 1979 and UBC in 1983.

He came to Western as president in 1985 and was appointed to a second four-year term in 1990. Under Dr

Pedersen's presidency, Western has expanded its applied health sciences in new facilities at Althouse College and established the Siebens-Drake Research Institute. The institute will do pioneering research in microbiology, biochemistry and AIDS.

Dr Fraser Mustard, president of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research, has saluted Dr Pedersen's support for remarkable developments in the health sciences and in the arts and humanities.

As the MPP for London North and on behalf of the citizens of London, the university community, and especially the students whom he loved to work with, I extend sincere congratulations to Dr Pedersen for his many achievements at Western.

VOLUNTEERS

Ms Sharon Murdock (Sudbury): This week all across Canada communities are recognizing thousands, in fact millions, of people who give of their own time to volunteer in different agencies, programs and groups, and we are honouring all of those people this week.

In Ontario over one quarter of our population volunteer their time to different organizations and different things in which they feel they can help. But I, with great pride, am able to say that in Sudbury 45% of our population volunteer at different groups and organizations; that's almost half. So I'm very pleased.

On Saturday we had the kickoff. All the groups were there. I was very pleased to see all of the people who were there. On Saturday evening I had the pleasure of dining with the Salvation Army Cedar Youth residents and George Romas, who had done an excellent job organizing.

Certificates were presented for one year to Scott Baker and Ann Boisvenue, Darlene Dardick, Mary Donato, Jerry Lance, Norm Neveau, Dan Pelletier, Stephen Runnallt, Phil Smith and Remi Rainville. And pins to honour the fact that they are spending even more than just a simple night here, but actual years. Those years are acknowledged for Al English, Kevin Briscoe, Moira Ferguson, Celeste Gatien, Gaetan Guerin, Tony Hall, Mike Horsefall and others.

I wanted to say that without the volunteers who give of their time freely and without cost, we would not have the great services that this province does have.

NUCLEAR POWER FACILITY

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I'd like to today, I'm sure on behalf of all members of the Legislature, congratulate the Ontario Hydro employees out at Pickering, particularly those people at unit 7 of Ontario Hydro's nuclear generating station at Pickering, which last week set a world record for the continuous on-line operation of a nuclear reactor, beating an old record set by a British reactor some time ago. Unit 7 at Pickering had been continuously on line, in operation, at the time of the record-breaking day last week for some 714 days. 1340

I simply want to make this point: Much criticism has been levelled over the years at Hydro, and certainly much of it levelled at the nuclear generating capacity, but as member of the Legislature for north Renfrew, where thousands of my constituents work in the nuclear industry, and as Energy critic for the Liberal Party, I want to wholeheartedly and publicly congratulate those wonderful men and women at Ontario Hydro who have in this particular instance set a world record and who have during the recent winter months reminded all of us how very important is the nuclear power commitment to the economic health and social wellbeing of the province. To those people at unit 7, congratulations for a very, very fine job.

ALTERNATIVE FUELS

Mr Noble Villeneuve (S-D-G & East Grenville): Ontario's ethanol industry is ready to make its first major step towards a large-scale production facility right here in Ontario. Fuel ethanol mixed with gas can immediately lower harmful emissions from automobiles and is the most accessible green fuel available today.

As in the past, the ethanol industry faces one major obstacle, the Liberal Party. We know that a provincial Liberal government issued regulations which effectively prohibited the use of fuel ethanol in Ontario. Now that the Liberals have taken power in Ottawa, we face the prospect that Liberal lobbyists will suppress the industry in Ontario again.

The federal Liberal Party declared strong support for fuel ethanol in the last election. That was then. While the previous federal government lifted the excise tax on fuel ethanol, Liberals have taken no long-term commitment to keep the tax off.

If we are to have a $170-million ethanol plant in Chatham and another production facility plant in eastern Ontario, we need a 12-year commitment from the government to not reimpose the tax on the ethanol portion of that litre of gas.

To its credit, the current provincial government has given a similar assurance, but the federal Liberals have not acted. Yesterday's report in the Financial Post confirms that the Liberals are being lobbied and are lobbying against an Ontario ethanol industry. By contrast, tougher United States standards may soon require fuel ethanol use in polluted urban areas.

Let the Liberals take note: We need an ethanol industry in Ontario.

GEORGE PEDERSEN

Mr David Winninger (London South): I also rise in the House today to recognize the achievements of George Pedersen, the outgoing president of the University of Western Ontario. As the member for London North stated earlier, he will be receiving tonight the Order of Ontario in addition to the Order of Canada which he already holds.

He was first appointed as president at Western in 1985, and throughout the years he has been at the helm Western has continued to prosper, increasing its enrolment and the variety of programs for its students. Under Dr Pedersen's stewardship, the university has made considerable progress in the areas of employment equity, race relations and curbing violence against women. The university recently has had to deal with a series of fiscal constraints, and Dr Pedersen has taken a very constructive approach to provide a high standard of education in a cost-efficient manner.

As president of Western, Dr Pedersen is unusual, as he has taught formally both at the elementary and secondary school levels. He has also served capably in a variety of university appointments both in Canada and the United States.

Since the election of this government, Dr Pedersen has encouraged meetings between the local MPPs, the faculty, the staff and the administration several times a year.

I wish to thank Dr Pedersen for his years of dedication and hard work and the spirit of partnership and collegiality with which he approaches his work. I wish Dr Pedersen and his spouse many happy years of retirement as he returns to his roots in western Canada.

CONSERVATION

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): Recognizing it is Earth Day coming up later this week, I thought it interesting to show the members of the House this collection of stuff. I received this in my community office. I thought maybe we had specially wrapped versions of the Magna Carta or something important like that, but no, these are individually wrapped versions of—

Interjection: What have you got there?

Mr Murphy: You might be surprised by this, Mr Speaker—the Ontario Environmental Bill of Rights, believe it or not.

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): Who signed it?

Mr Murphy: Personally signed by the Premier and of course the Minister of Environment and Energy.

I would have thought one of the first ideas the Environmental Bill of Rights might have included was reducing excessive packaging, but I guess the minister didn't think that was a good idea.

But I also see the Treasurer in the House, and I remember back when he was an opposition critic in olden days and I think in fact he was the chair of an NDP task force on greening Ontario related to his Natural Resources critic portfolio. One of his ideas was that he thought it was important for us to have a greener province and preserve, for example, unnecessary paper, and I thought it interesting to note the copy of his statement to the Legislature from yesterday.

We have fewer than 30 words contained in this statement and he managed to use two pieces of paper to do that. Here it is, a nice little cover page. We open it up inside: 30 words. I hope the government will take the lesson and reduce some of the excess packaging.

COMMUNITY COLLEGE GOVERNANCE

of Conestoga College, announced that the association was launching an unprecedented multimedia campaign to raise public awareness of the actions of the Council of Regents with regard to the manner in which members of college boards are appointed.

The association is concerned about the council's proposed policy for appointing people to college boards, which will be based on political correctness rather than on the merits of expertise, interest in the community and dedication to the college. Despite the fact that the Council of Regents has asked for input on this proposed policy until May 1, 1994, recent actions by the council make it obvious it has already started to implement this policy.

The fact that all four nominees put forward by the Conestoga board of directors for two vacancies were rejected and that five other board members were only granted unprecedented one-year extensions to their three-year terms is clear evidence that the council has already started to make decisions based on its new dictatorial policy. This is totally unacceptable.

I support the association and its strong stand against the government's ideologically driven agenda for colleges. I believe that the boards of community colleges should continue to reflect their own communities and that merit and a demonstrated interest and commitment to the college and the community are and should remain the first considerations when choosing college board members.

MOTORCYCLES

Mr Ron Hansen (Lincoln): Ontario motorcyclists are not getting the respect they desire. In fact they are being abused by insurance companies.

I've heard that many insurance companies have decided not to insure riders this year and I've heard that insurance companies that do specialize in motorcycle insurance will only insure riders who have four or more years of riding experience. I've heard that they are now denying coverage to riders who drive so-called supersport bikes. This is an injustice.

Over the next month it is estimated that 20,000 riders will not be able to find the coverage that they need. A crisis is developing: Riders may choose to ride without proper insurance; others will park their bikes and use more expensive forms of transportation; and hundreds of jobs could be lost at dealerships and in the motorcycle industry.

Riders are being unjustly penalized by their own insurance companies and for no good reason. I've been assured that the government is now working with the insurance industry to sort this mess out, but I've always been bothered by the fact that insurance companies were allowed to do this in the first place.

That's why Mike Cooper, the MPP for Kitchener-Wilmot, and I are calling on the government to investigate the feasibility of public motorcycle insurance and public snowmobile insurance, because we've heard that snowmobile rates have increased also.

Motorcycle riders and snowmobile operators should not be held hostage by the insurance industry. Mr Cooper and I intend to circulate a petition calling on the government to establish public motorcycle and snowmobile insurance. This injustice must be corrected now.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION COMPÉTENCES FÉDÉRALES-PROVINCIALES

Hon Bob Rae (Premier and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr Speaker, I appreciate the warmth of my reception from members of the opposite side.

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): We are here to help you out.

Hon Mr Rae: I know that.

I rise today to set out Ontario's objectives in the many and diverse discussions the federal government has started on changes to the Canada assistance plan, education and training, unemployment insurance and immigration.

The issue areas I have just mentioned, as all members will appreciate, are either exclusive provincial jurisdictions or under shared federal-provincial control, yet in recent weeks we have seen federal ministers taking or threatening unilateral action in these areas without serious discussion or negotiations. Some federal ministers claim they want to change these programs, while the federal Minister of Finance has stated categorically that he wants to offload federal spending in these areas.

Ontario and its citizens recognize the need for reform in many of these areas, and we all understand—we all understand—that there is no pot of gold that will miraculously appear to solve either government's revenue problems. Because we all understand that changes must be made to many of these programs, I believe there has to be a serious public debate about how we proceed to recast Canada's social safety net and our education system, for that is what we are facing.

It is for this reason that I want to invite all members of this Legislature to join the debate on these matters, and at the same time I want to set out five principles that will guide my government in representing Ontario's interests in what must be open negotiations.

When the first ministers met in Ottawa before Christmas, we were able to agree on an infrastructure program whose costs would be fairly shared between and among Canadian governments. I took this as a good sign. In the spring of 1992, I had signalled that Ontario would match capital investment by the federal government dollar for dollar. The federal program which emerged after the recent federal election was more modest than what we had proposed, but it was a step in the right direction.

This step has not been matched by fair treatment in other areas of federal policy. Because of the decision of the Liberal government to maintain a systematic discrimination against Ontario in transfers subject to the Canada assistance plan, the federal government contributes far less for Ontarians who are in need than it does for those living in other provinces.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Rae: The opposition might not like to hear it, but it happens to be the truth.

The federal approach to training has also ensured that citizens of Canada living in Ontario get less, while Ontario workers contribute far more every year to the unemployment insurance fund than they get in return.

The Canada-Quebec immigration agreement guarantees Quebec a certain amount of money. Quebec now gets about 35% of federal funding for immigration, yet Quebec only receives 18% of the immigrants. For each new immigrant in Quebec, the federal government spends $1,900; for each new immigrant in Ontario it spends only $764.

Quand les ministres des Finances se sont réunis à Québec en janvier, le gouvernement fédéral a communiqué son intention de renouveler les ententes de paiement de péréquation pour faire en sorte que les provinces qui en reçoivent verraient leurs paiements augmenter. À ce moment-là, mon collègue le ministre des Finances a indiqué que l'appui de la province de l'Ontario pour le programme de paiement de péréquation, qui est après tout encaissé dans la Constitution, demeurerait intacte, mais que les autres programmes ne pouvaient pas continuer à discriminer de façon systématique contre l'Ontario.

The status quo cannot continue. Canadians living in Ontario have the responsibility of sharing our wealth with other Canadians. We also have the right to a fair share of federal expenditure and understanding. We have not had that, and this must change.

Let me set out some clear principles which we believe will be supported by most citizens of the province and, I would believe, by most members of this Legislative Assembly.

The first is that Ontario accepts and indeed welcomes the need for change and improvement in our social programs and in the fiscal and practical arrangements between the two levels of government. Duplication and overlap is a problem. Our programs need to do more for work and training and our programs together need to do more for children. Whatever we do must be financially sustainable.

The second is that this cannot be an exercise in offloading to the provinces. The fiscal projections in the federal budget are very troubling in this regard, as are the recent decisions by the federal Minister of Immigration.

The third is that there must be no discriminatory treatment against Canadians who live in Ontario. Ontario supports the equalization program, but beyond this, Ontario must receive its fair share and Ontarians must not be treated differently from people in other provinces. The systematic discrimination against this province has to stop.

The fourth is that any reform must reinforce, and not undermine, Canada's record as a compassionate society. In particular, we should be doing more about child poverty and more to make it possible for people to get back into the workforce.

The fifth is that any reform must be the product of genuine federal-provincial negotiation and joint decision-making. It is not a matter of the federal government simply "consulting" the provinces. Many of these programs lie in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, and the federal government must therefore change its process so that we can begin a genuine negotiation.

These are five principles which Ontario will be taking into all our discussions with the federal government. We want to be partners in this process.

Ontario will continue to invest in child care, we will maintain spending on social assistance, we will maintain spending on training and back-to-work programs and we shall continue to discuss with the federal government immediate programs that will address these issues.

But everyone must know that we can only do more in terms of deep-seated reform if we have real knowledge and certainty that the federal government accepts the principles we have put forward and the political will to bring them forward. The federal government's long-term fiscal plan seems to assume a major offload to the provinces. That's what Mr Martin confirmed on Monday. The fiscal discussion and the social policy discussion have to be brought together.

The announcement on Friday by the federal government that it is cutting off payments to certain groups of refugees is a good example of what is wrong. It is a direct offload to us, the province with the largest number of refugees and immigrants. It adds to Ontario's financial burden. It was done with no discussion, no negotiation and no joint decision-making. It adds to the discrimination, since under the Canada-Quebec agreement these appear to be costs Quebec will not have to pick up.

Negotiations are starting now on a potential agreement between Ottawa and Ontario on an immigration agreement. I regard Friday's announcement as a sign of bad faith and bad judgement, but it only has the effect of firming our resolve in these negotiations.

Next week it is my intention to place before the House a resolution on this subject.

Ontario is confident about the future of Canada and confident about our ability to resolve our difficulties. But this requires transparency and trust in the negotiations necessary to keep Canada a great place to live. Ontario and this government are eager to play a positive role in achieving this goal.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Responses?

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I want to first assure the Premier that he'll have our full support for ensuring that Ontario does get fair treatment.

The people of Ontario will look for probably four things: a level of cooperation between levels of government, fair treatment for Ontario, fiscal responsibility, and a lack of politics in this matter.

I would say as directly to the Premier as I can that in the first three instances we've seen of you dealing with this, I think you're playing politics.

It was two weeks ago that our caucus sent the government a letter saying:

"One of the key areas for financial consideration over the next year will be the issue of transfer payments from the federal government. The Liberal caucus is very concerned that Ontario receive fair treatment from the federal government.

"We believe a helpful step would be for an all-party finance and economic affairs committee to study this matter in detail and recommend a solution to the Legislature. Because all three parties are anxious to ensure fair treatment from the federal government and because an all-party legislative committee would strengthen Ontario's hand in dealing with the federal government, I am asking for your support to have the matter referred to the finance and economics committee as soon as possible."

That was sent to the government two weeks ago. We've heard nothing from the government. The Premier gets up today and makes a statement demanding cooperation from the opposition, when we volunteered it two weeks ago and have heard nothing from the government.

The second thing I'd say to the Premier is this: When the federal budget came out, the Premier's comment was, "We have been knee-capped." That was your expression. I therefore assumed that something in the federal budget dramatically cut your transfer payments. What I now find, when I phone the ministry officials, is that you received from the federal budget exactly what you had planned in your transfer payments from the federal government—exactly. There was no change.

The Finance officials who came before our committee on February 7 outlined dollar for dollar what they expected to get from the federal government. The budget came out. They got exactly what they had been expecting from the federal government. What we said at the time was, "We're not saying that's fair treatment or not fair treatment, but we are saying you got exactly what you had planned from the federal government." But what does the Premier say? He says, "We were knee-capped."

Second, if you were attempting to get political support from the people of this province, they are going to look for statesmanship activity from you, not what I would regard as cheap politics. I believe your expression "knee-capped," when you got exactly what you have been expecting from the federal government, is cheap politics.

The third thing I wanted to say is that we are in difficult financial times, there is no question about that, but you can't have a double standard. You can't on the one hand say that from the federal government we expect to get what we might have gotten five years ago and then on the other hand, for your own transfer payment partners, change your mind. You promised one thing; you delivered another thing, Premier. You cannot, as we say, talk out of both sides of your mouth.

Hon Mr Rae: That's not true.

Mr Phillips: The Premier is shaking his head and saying that's not so. That is so. You yourself said, "We have to change our transfer payments."

I want to make those three points. One is that you can be assured of our caucus's support for fair treatment for the people of Ontario. We will speak out for the people of Ontario in dealing with the federal government, there is no question about that. But I will tell the Premier, the people of Ontario will not sit still for cheap politics.

I believe in these three points: one is in refusing to respond to our letter to you asking to deal with this matter; second is to say you were knee-capped when you got from the federal government exactly what you'd been planning; and third is when you deal with your transfer payment partners in a completely different way than you want the federal government dealing with the Ontario government.

We need to begin to talk out of only one side of our mouth on these matters.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I want to add very quickly that the leader of Liberal Party of Ontario, Lyn McLeod, is in Ottawa today making representations to the government of Canada on behalf of the people of Ontario, who rightly expect their fair share.

I want also to say quite seriously that when a democratic, socialist Premier of Ontario feels the need to make this kind of statement in this Legislature, then we need not ask for whom the bell tolls. The bells tolls for the Canada in which I have grown up. This is a significant but an ominous statement, and I worry for my country.

Mr Gary Carr (Oakville South): This statement by a Premier of the province of Ontario is pathetic. This wasn't a statement, this was public whining. In Ontario we have always been the leaders in Confederation. We've now become the whiners in Confederation.

Here we have a Premier who's now setting up a strategy for the next election. What you did to municipalities, universities, school boards and hospitals was not only bad, Premier, it was worse over the last few years.

The public doesn't want partisanship or gamesmanship, they want results, and if you don't want to deliver, I suggest that the resolution we put before the people of this province next week is an election. The person they want out isn't the Prime Minister; the person they want out of office is this Premier.

Typical of the socialists, when they were in opposition, they sat on this side of the House and whined. Now, when they're in power and can control things, all they do is whine again. Don't you take responsibility for anything you do? People want cooperation, not confrontation.

On page 1 he says, "I believe there needs to be serious public debate." What have you done for the three and a half years you have been Premier? Where was the debate? This Premier has done more to dismantle social programs than any other Premier in the history of this province.

We know very clearly that if we give this Premier any more money, all he'll do is go out and blow it anyway. In the early 1980s, the percentage of the revenue we received in this province, with a federal Liberal government and a Progressive Conservative provincial government, was about 18% of the revenues. That's exactly what we have today, the same percentage of revenues. The taxpayers I hear from don't want to give you any more money, because they've seen how you blow it.

This statement is absolutely pathetic, that a Premier of this province is going to continue to whine about other levels of government. The time for partisanship is over. People want results. You're asking now for the input of the members of this House. For three and a half years, on the economy, on education, on health care, we've attempted to give you ideas. At every turn this Premier has proceeded in his own direction, not listening to the people of this province.

Mr Speaker, I say to you very clearly, the public does not believe that this Premier has the answers. The best thing this Premier can do, instead of debating the resolution, is call an election. That's the best thing he can do for the province of Ontario over the next year and a bit.

The Deputy Speaker: Before we start oral questions, I would ask the cooperation of the members to make sure you keep your questions short and to the point and your responses brief.

ORAL QUESTIONS TAXATION

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): My question is to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I believe that the Minister of Finance was being cute with the people of the province when he said there would be no tax increases. I want the Minister of Finance to tell us today if he will be increasing fees or other charges in his budget.

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): I did try and say as well yesterday that not only would there be no new taxes in the budget but that I wasn't prepared to write the budget on the floor of the assembly either.

Mr Elston: I understand why the member for Nickel Belt was being so cute with us, because he is obviously preparing to follow the same old game plan, introducing, as he did, the $50 corporate filing fee, which gives no new service to the corporations of this province. He introduced a $20 increase on elevating devices. He increased the welding test fee to $110. A welding test fee being increased to 110 bucks for a person who's in training and who has no job is a real penalty.

I want the minister to tell the province today that he is prepared to say to the people that he will freeze the fees in this budget.

Hon Mr Laughren: I've lost track of how many positions the Liberals now have on controlling the deficit, on expenditures, on taxes. It is beyond comprehension. Not only are they saying that they will cut taxes—I guess they're feeling guilty because they didn't do it when they were in office and now want us to do it. I would simply reiterate, all of this will become known when the budget is presented on May 5.

Mr Elston: We already know what this guy's going to do. He is going to introduce new fee increases. He is going to increase the fees like those on the Glenora ferry, where he plans to raise a few hundred thousand dollars but in the ultimate end, overall, lose $48,000. He is going to raise probably more money on court fees, from which he has already extracted another $76 million. He is going to probably increase the fees for roadside signs, which he's increased already by some 33%. The list goes on and on: a 30% increase in the cost of receiving a death certificate, which is of course an obligatory acquisition if you're going to be doing anything in processing estates or administration of estates. Why won't the minister announce that he is going to freeze the fees?

Hon Mr Laughren: I'll say it again and again and again: This isn't the place to write the 1994 Ontario budget. I know what the Liberal position is. They want taxes reduced, they want fees frozen, they want expenditures increased on all of their favourite programs and they want the deficit reduced. At some point the Liberal Party of this province has to come clean and tell the people of the province what it really stands for, because at the present time nobody knows.

FOREST MANAGEMENT

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): In the absence of Mr Hampton, who I think was supposed to be here but we don't know where these people are any more, to the Premier: This is Earth Week, and in light of that, there's been a very important document released. The environmental assessment on forest management in the province came out this morning and has been released. I wonder if the Premier and his colleagues can tell us if they are well pleased with the $20 million that has been expended and the recommendations, indeed not just recommendations, the requirements that are being put forward today by the EA panel.

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I would refer this question, in the absence of the Minister of Natural Resources, to the Minister of Environment and Energy.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): As the member indicated, this is a very important document, and it's quite extensive, as you can see. It has significant recommendations for sustainable forest development. It's over 500 pages. It was tabled this morning. We are currently reviewing the document and the recommendations, and we would be pleased to carry through with the process, as the member may be aware. He may have further questions on the process, but obviously at this point we are currently reviewing the document and we can't fully respond until we've had more time.

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): What's clear from this report is that the government's policies for regenerating Ontario's forests have been woefully inadequate. In 1993, the former Minister of Natural Resources, whom you might know fairly well, announced a new program for forest renewal that said he would increase forest regeneration to 100%. That strategy was based on a greater reliance on natural regeneration. You were going to plant fewer trees but regenerate more forest. Today we have learned the consequences of this policy. The EA board says in its report:

"We have concerns about the province's decreasing financial commitment to artificial regeneration. The adverse effects of cutting timber without investing in artificial regeneration are unacceptable." "Unacceptable" is the word they use. "We are ordering regeneration objectives and financial commitments to be set in timber production policy."

It is clear from that report that the policies of your government are threatening the viability of our forests and of our jobs. In the face of the board's conclusions, will you admit that your policies have failed and that you need to reverse the trend that you put in place?

Hon Mr Wildman: Members will know that this process has been long, arduous and quite expensive, and we have now a very extensive report which deals not just with the immediate concerns, which are significant, with regard to the sustainability of our forests, but with the history of the development of the current situation that we now face and makes significant recommendations.

The member will know that the point we have reached now was not just something that developed over the last couple of years and that this report was not just developed over the last couple of years. As the previous member indicated, this has been a long, very expensive process. We will determine how we will respond as a government, and I, as Minister of Environment, will ensure that the Ministry of Natural Resources and the government comply with the recommendations of the EA board, as decided by the process.

Mr Brown: This government has reduced the planting and regenerating in Ontario's forests of trees, of seedlings, by 25% since it took power. That is the record of this government. They have been frittering away one of Ontario's most important renewable natural resources. You have tried to justify your declining support for tree planting by saying that natural generation would be enough. But the facts are now in, the jury has reported: We've spent $20 million and we have 650 pages. You're wrong. We want to see the rubber hit the road. We want you to get the egg off your face.

Minister, are you going to get forestry in Ontario going again? Are you going to make some decisions and get this province to have truly world-class forests for all Ontarians?

Hon Mr Wildman: The fact is that until this government came to power, there was no such thing as a forestry policy in this province. We have had for years many, many timber management policies. We have managed the forest or mismanaged the forest historically in this province because we've managed only for timber values.

The value of this report and the work that the Ministry of Natural Resources has been doing is that it looks at all the forest values. It makes recommendations regarding proper management for all values of our forests, and that is the value of this report and the commitment of this government.

ONTARIO HYDRO EMPLOYEE

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): My question is for the Minister of Labour. The Toronto Sun reported that "negligence charges were laid against Toronto Hydro...after interference from Labour Minister Bob Mackenzie or his staff...." This was told in court yesterday.

Mr Minister, have you ever spoken to your political staff member Mr Don Eady about laying charges against Toronto Hydro in the death of Thomas Vanderstarren?

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): I'm aware of the issue that the member raises, and they are, I am sure, aware that the matter is now before the courts and it would be inappropriate for me to make any comments on this while it's before the courts.

Mrs Witmer: Mr Minister, when were you made aware that Mr Eady put pressure on the ministry lawyer to lay charges against Toronto Hydro?

Interjections.

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I'm sorry, maybe the member would repeat the question; I didn't hear it.

Mrs Witmer: When were you made aware that Mr Eady put pressure on the ministry lawyer to lay charges against Toronto Hydro?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I hadn't been made aware of that at all, and as I said before, the issue is before the courts and it would be inappropriate for me to respond.

Mrs Witmer: Did the Canadian Union of Public Employees or any other body or person—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Order. I can't hear the questions here either. Order, please. The member for Waterloo North.

Mrs Witmer: Mr Minister, since you were not able to answer the first two questions, I ask you this: Did the Canadian Union of Public Employees or any other body or person contact you personally with concerns that Toronto Hydro had not been charged in the death of Thomas Vanderstarren?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: Once again, I just want to make it clear that I am aware of the issue, but I also know that it's before the courts and I'm not prepared to talk about it while it's before the courts.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Can I ask the House to please refrain from shouting. It makes it extremely difficult for the Speaker to hear. Please. The member for Simcoe West.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): My question is to the Minister of Health. It's a question regarding a story which appeared in today's Toronto Star. In November 1990 an audit was completed by your ministry which revealed a catalogue of unauthorized spending, questionable accounting and excessive salaries at a Toronto social housing agency funded by the provincial government. This shocking abuse of government funds occurred between 1988 and 1990 at Houselink Community Homes Inc. I have a copy of that report, Minister, no thanks to your ministry. With so much taxpayers' money at stake, why have you deliberately covered up this report done by the auditor?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): As the member has identified, the report that was reported upon today covered a period from April 1, 1988, to March 31, 1990. When the audit was received by our government in October 1991, I think it was a good example of the kind of open-ended, just paying the bills without asking any questions or doing any evaluation or looking at the outcomes of a lot of programs which our government has significantly changed.

I'm glad to be able to tell the member that since that audit was received, all audit-related recoveries have been completed and all management and accountability issues identified in the audit report have been addressed with Houselink and have been resolved to the satisfaction of the ministry.

Mr Jim Wilson: Houselink provides housing for former psychiatric patients. It receives money from the ministries of Health and Housing. In fact, I have a press release from your government in 1992 that announces with great fanfare that your government was attending a ceremony to open two new Houselink projects.

Minister, I just want to make sure of a few facts here, and one is, did you share this report with the Minister of Housing? I want to know specifically what action either of you took, either the action you took or the Minister of Housing, to correct the abuse that's outlined in this report.

Hon Mrs Grier: I thought my first response had indicated that we took the audit of the operation of this home under the previous government very seriously and that all of the issues addressed in the audit had been addressed. Yes, the Ministry of Housing was of course aware of that.

Mr Jim Wilson: Clearly, the audit report is a catalogue of mismanagement and waste, if not outright graft, under the former Liberal government, and the report was buried by your government. I ask you again, why did it take a reporter from the Toronto Star, who couldn't get this report through access to information but had to get it through other means, why did it take a reporter in our press gallery to uncover this report?

Minister, I want to know, and I want to know if you'll table with this House, specifically what your ministry has done and what the Ministry of Housing has done to correct the abuse and to make sure it never happens again, that the dollars of the taxpayers of this province are protected when it comes to social housing projects and agencies.

Hon Mrs Grier: As I indicated in my response to the first question, I agree completely with the member and with the auditor that it was in fact a misuse of public funds. I also am confident that the misuse has been corrected and has not occurred again.

In response to the article today, which indicates that a freedom of information request had been made, let me say to the member that our ministry has no record of any such request, and had such a request been received, of course the final audit report would have been released. There's no reason not to. I'd be happy to release it to the member if he hasn't got a copy.

GAMBLING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a question for the Premier. I'm going to try to ask this—maybe you'll think it's uncharacteristic—in as non-partisan a way as possible because I feel, as I think he does, very strongly about this issue.

I realize that governments are very attracted—all governments; not just his, but all governments—to various sources of gambling proceeds, right across the country, right across North America. There's the offtrack betting, there's casino gambling, there's those break-open lotteries, there's the video terminals that we're talking about.

We're beginning to see some reports coming in from right across the world on the effect on our general society of this trend to gambling by all governments. Is the Premier not concerned that this widespread and rapid movement into all fields of gambling by his own government and by so many governments in North America, while it will raise in the short run a lot of money for government and is very attractive, is bound to have a profound and terrible effect on the most vulnerable people in our society, the poor and the disadvantaged and the desperate?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I think I'll refer that to the minister.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Minister.

Mr Bradley: Don't answer the question. I was the asking the Premier. I don't want an answer.

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Well, fine, Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. The next question, please.

VISITORS

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Table, could you stop the clock for a minute, please?

I would like to inform the members of the assembly that we have in the Speaker's gallery today a visiting delegation headed by Mr Wanmuhamadnoor Matha, First Deputy House Speaker from the House of Representatives in Thailand. Please join me in welcoming our guests.

ONTARIO HYDRO EMPLOYEE

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): My question is for the Minister of Labour. Mr Minister, I've listened to your responses and I want you to know that you are wrong. Don't tell me that you can't talk about this because it's before the courts. I want to know why a charge was laid when, according to the newspaper, your own Labour ministry lawyer said there was not enough evidence and you laid the charge.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Standing order 23(g)(i) specifically excludes matters that are sub judice from discussion in this House. You know that, Mr Speaker. We should be disallowing these types of questions in this place.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Order, please. The member for St George-St David, you're not in your seat.

On your request, Minister, I'd like to read the following:

"The freedom of speech accorded to members of Parliament is a fundamental right without which they would be hampered in the performance of their duties. The Speaker should interfere with that freedom of speech only in exceptional cases where it is clear that to do otherwise could be harmful to specific individuals."

I would ask, therefore, if the minister doesn't want to reply, it is his freedom of choice to do so.

Hon Mr Charlton: Mr Speaker, on the point that I raised, our standing orders are very clear. They say clearly, "A member shall be called to order by the Speaker if he or she...refers to any matter that is the subject of a proceeding that is pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination."

The matters that have been raised here are the subject of a case that's before the courts presently and the member should be called to order.

Interjections.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I want to make an observation. I have listened carefully to the member for Waterloo North's several questions on this subject. It seems to me that the traditions in this place are that members, within certain general limits, are allowed to put questions and ministers are, as you just observed, given every opportunity to answer in any way they choose, including, for reasons they might choose to cite, declining to answer the question. I think we would all be better off if we continued to operate within that established practice.

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: I am a little concerned about the fact that the government House leader was allowed to virtually stand up and challenge a ruling you had already made on his previous point of order. If that's going to be the standard around here, then you can expect me to stand up two, three, four and five times every time a Speaker gives a ruling that the government House leader or I don't like.

I would like to make the point that the member for Waterloo North was asking a very specific question about the minister's involvement. As far as I know, the minister hasn't been charged. If he is, perhaps we should know about that, and there's nothing in the standing orders or anywhere else that prevents him answering questions for matters for which he, as the minister, is responsible. It's as simple as that.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I have made my ruling. It is a final ruling, so we will continue now to our question period. Could you please start the clock again? The member for Waterloo North had the floor.

Mrs Witmer: My question is for the Minister of Labour. I want to know why a charge was laid when, according to the article in the Toronto Sun, your own ministry lawyer indicated that there was not enough evidence to lay a charge. Why did you lay a charge?

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): The situation is before the courts. It is the prosecution of a company and three individuals under the Occupational Health and Safety Act, and I feel it would be inappropriate for me to respond at this point in time.

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): Bye, bye, Bob.

Mr Eves: I think you are in trouble, Bob. The question is to you: Why did you politically interfere?

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mrs Witmer: Unfortunately, this entire issue smacks of political interference. The most important issue for us today is to determine whether the Labour ministry has been meddling, not only in this case but in other cases involving workplace accidents. I would ask you, would you support a full inquiry, without delay, in order that we can determine that serious charges have not been brought against other innocent parties?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: Once again, the matter is before the courts and it would be inappropriate, as far as I am concerned, to respond, and that's the answer that will continue to be given.

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): The court isn't inquiring into why you interfered. They should be. They should be inquiring into that.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, the member for Willowdale.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr Gary Wilson (Kingston and The Islands): My question is for the Minister of Health. Minister, last month you announced changes to the rules about who is eligible for coverage under the Ontario health insurance plan. One group of people in my riding who are affected by these changes are foreign students. There are approximately 900 students from countries outside Canada enrolled in secondary and post-secondary schools in the Kingston area. This figure doesn't include the almost 140 families of these students, also living in my riding.

Could you explain why foreign students and their family members will no longer be eligible for OHIP after June 30 and how these people are being notified of this change?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): In order to safeguard OHIP and our health care system for the permanent residents of Ontario, we've had to make some very difficult decisions, and the decision to no longer cover foreign students was certainly not an easy one to make. I would point out to the member that before foreign students are admitted into Canada, Immigration Canada requires that they demonstrate that they are prepared to meet all of their own costs while here in Canada as well as the costs of their own family members.

I would also point out to him that Ontario students who study abroad are not covered by health insurance in the countries in which they are studying. They are covered by OHIP for up to four years of study abroad.

Finally, let me say to him that of course in the case of an emergency, anybody will be treated by a hospital or by a community health care centre here in Ontario.

With respect to notification, anybody who is here and who is known to the Health ministry as having been a foreign student has been notified that as of the end of June they need to obtain their own health insurance.

Mr Gary Wilson: I'm sure you will agree that having foreign students study in Ontario is enormously valuable. First, the students themselves get a first-rate education, which will be of lasting benefit to them and their communities. Secondly, their native country will benefit from a better-educated citizenry. Finally, in this age of globalization, Ontario stands to profit economically and culturally.

Wherever these students settle in the world, they will recall the generosity of our province and its citizens in providing part of their education. This of course will make future business and cultural exchanges between Ontario and foreign countries easier. This couldn't be more important in today's world, where it's crucial that we do all we can to bring people together.

Minister, what is being done by your ministry to ensure that the cost of OHIP will not prevent foreign students from studying in Ontario?

Hon Mrs Grier: I am very well aware of the value to our institutions and to our province of people from all over the world who come here for a variety of reasons. But I'm also very conscious of the fact that the kind of double-digit increases in our spending on health care that we've had until recent years are something that the taxpayers and the residents of this province can no longer afford to sustain. Therefore, as I said in my first answer, we have had to make some difficult decisions in order to define what a "resident of Ontario" really means, and a resident of Ontario for whom our insurance plan is designed is somebody who is a permanent resident of the province.

Let me to say to the member that the change that we contemplated was announced in April 1993, so that it does not take effect until July of this year. The institutions and the people affected have had a great deal of time to prepare for it. It is perfectly likely, and in fact a number of colleges and universities are looking at the prospect, that they can provide an insurance policy for international students through the institution that would considerably lower the premiums that students would have to pay.

CONTAMINATED SOIL

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): I have a question to the Minister of Environment and Energy and I'm having the page take over a letter which has been provided to me. This is a very serious matter and certainly this week, as we're celebrating Earth Week, I want to talk to the minister about his permission to allow contaminated earth to be used in the Essex county landfill site.

In a letter dated February 28 an official from your ministry indicated to the county of Essex that material it was using for cover at the Maidstone township landfill site on a daily basis contained contaminated soils, including soils from industrial recommissioning projects, gas station remediation projects, oil-well drilling tailings and construction projects.

The letter states: "Please be advised that your use of the contaminated soils as daily cover does not comply with the certificate of approval. These soils are not clean earthfill, as is required."

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): That's right; it doesn't comply.

Mr Offer: The minister is yelling at me right now, "What is the matter?"

Hon Mr Wildman: No, I'm saying that's right.

Mr Offer: On page 2 of that same letter, your ministry proceeded to approve the use of this contaminated material for landfill cover at the site and indeed approve the use of other materials including foundry sand, dewatered sludges and industrial waste-water treatment plant material.

Can the minister please confirm that materials that were once banned for use as daily cover at the Maidstone township landfill are now being permitted for use in this regard?

Hon Mr Wildman: The member raises an important matter, and as he says in regard to this letter, the official in the ministry wrote to say that the contaminated soils did not comply with the condition. Then on the second page it goes on to say, "They may continue to use these materials" under a list of conditions, and one of those conditions is, "Chemical characteristics and methods of handling the alternative daily cover materials must meet the criteria."

Mr Offer: On the first page of the letter it says that the township is using contaminated soils. On the second page the ministry is saying okay, that's now permitted.

By way of supplementary, Mr Minister, your ministry's certificate of approval for this landfill site specifies that before any change to the materials being used can be used, there must be consultation with the technical review committee. It is our information that this did not occur. The technical review committee did not become aware of this request in January to use these contaminated materials as daily cover and the subsequent approval granted in February, and they were not aware of this request until after it had been ordered. March 21, 1994, was the first time they were aware, a full two months after the application was made.

Minister, your own ministry is now a party to the breach of your certificate of approval. You have permitted a pilot project to proceed without any public consultation. You have breached your certificate of approval in two areas.

Why did you secretly negotiate to break the conditions of the certificate of approval issued for the Maidstone landfill and permit contaminated material to be used as part of this experimental project? Why is your ministry a party to the breach of your own approval?

Hon Mr Wildman: I thought this was one of the most concise questions, Mr Speaker.

I'm happy to say that the local member, for Essex-Kent, has been very much involved in this matter and has raised it with my ministry staff and there have been discussions. As the member indicated, they were not secret, they were negotiations and discussions going on, and as I understand it, the ministry has decided to suspend any approvals that might not comply with the conditions.

JOB SECURITY

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): My question involves 2,000 jobs in Simcoe county and perhaps more job losses throughout the province. The Premier was aware that this question was directed to him prior to his leaving, so I'm wondering, Mr Speaker, if you could ask the government House leader to go fetch the Premier and get him in here to answer this very important question.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The House doesn't work that way.

Mr Jim Wilson: Maybe the Premier should start taking this House seriously, and maybe the House should start working for the people of Ontario.

The Deputy Speaker: Please ask your question.

Mr Jim Wilson: In the absence of the Premier, who doesn't seem to care any more, I ask the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: As representatives from the town of Collingwood and I made you and the Premier aware at a meeting in his office on March 21, the successor rights provisions contained in your government's labour laws are preventing private investors from purchasing short-line rail operations in Ontario. Without this sale to private investors, CN will abandon the rail line between Collingwood and Barrie and 2,000 jobs will be lost in Simcoe county. The National Transportation Agency of Canada has said that it will render its decision on abandonment of the Collingwood-to-Barrie rail line by June 17.

Minister, if you don't move soon, many of my constituents face the bleak prospect of joining the unemployment lines in this province. Can residents of Collingwood and Simcoe county expect a resolution to the problem created by your labour laws before the National Transportation Agency renders its decision on June 17? Yes or no, Minister.

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): From my experience with the member when he was Health critic and I was Minister of Health, he knows I'm incapable of giving just a yes or no answer, but I'll try and keep it to the point.

I share the concern the member raises with respect to the jobs and the impact on the local economy. The member will know that the Premier has asked me to work with the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transportation to find a resolution to this issue, not just for that Collingwood area—that's the most important community because it is the first stop—but a provincial solution.

We have been involved in meetings recently, have recently met with Mr Tellier from CN. I'm pleased to be able to inform the member that Mr Tellier has agreed that CN will take no immediate action post the National Transportation Agency decision in the middle of June and there will be at least a two-month extension after that which gives us a bit of breathing space, but it does not alleviate the urgency of responding to the local community concerns.

We are working on it and I'm trying to get a response as soon as possible.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): A supplementary to the minister: We have the answer and that's to amend Bill 40. If the Collingwood and Barrie rail line is abandoned, the Bradford and Washago rail line will be next in line. This will be a profound impact upon the jobs and industries in my riding of Simcoe East. Officials in Simcoe county made you aware last fall, Minister, that private investors would not purchase short rail-line operations because your labour laws made it uneconomical to do so. Seven months later, the clock is ticking and the CN and the NTA have run out of patience.

Minister, rather than rolling the dice with the economic future of Simcoe county, will you agree today to immediately table and support the private member's bill introduced by my colleague from Simcoe West which amends the successor rights provisions of your job-killing labour legislation? Will you support this bill and save jobs? Sixty days pass pretty quickly.

Hon Ms Lankin: As I've indicated to the member on a previous occasion, I have been taking action with respect to this issue. Over the past period of time I have met with Mr Tellier on two occasions. I have spoken to him on other occasions with respect to securing a commitment from CN that there would be no immediate action upon release of the National Transportation Agency decision in mid-June.

The member puts forward that they have a solution and the only solution, and I disagree with him on that. I do believe that there are other solutions which we can put in place which will help us secure the economic activity in those communities and retain those jobs.

I share the commitment of the members to that end goal, and pledge to find a solution to reach that end goal. Where I differ with him is that I think there may be more than one solution available to us, and we are in fact exploring that.

With respect to the private member's bill being put forward at this point in time which suggests there's only one solution, I disagree with that and I will not be supporting that.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr Jim Wiseman (Durham West): My question is to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. I am greatly concerned about what appears to be a disturbing trend. It seems there are a growing number of small businesses that are being forced out of business, not because of the recession and not because of any provincial government policy, not because they're uncompetitive, but because the banks are clawing back their lines of credit and then eventually calling them in.

Some of these businesses have never missed a payment, only to be put into bankruptcy by the banks, which have more concern for their portfolio balance than they have for the dreams, aspirations and hard work of the small business owners. These actions by banks that were immensely profitable last year are causing a continued increase in job loss and are hampering the economic recovery.

I know that the minister is not responsible for the banking industry, but I do know that she has been meeting with her federal counterpart. After all, the Liberals made such great fanfare about this in the last election. Why has this activity increased? Can the minister tell us what, if anything, we as a province can do to pick up the pieces of these dreams now being shattered by the Liberal economic policies or the lack thereof?

Hon Frances Lankin (Minister of Economic Development and Trade): There certainly is a lot of indication from the small business sector and in fact from medium-sized business and from a number of the companies that we've been dealing with in our sectoral strategies that there's a significant problem with access to capital and in terms of their experience with banks over the last period of time.

I would say part of it is due to the recession. Banks have pulled back on their lines of credit because they've looked at their portfolios. But I share the concern that the member raises. In fact, recent statistics from the Bank of Canada indicate that lending by banks is down in all categories across the board, and that's very troublesome for the viability of businesses out there.

There are a number of areas that are under provincial jurisdiction in fact where we have taken action. We have worked to set up the Ontario lead investment fund to bring more venture capital to Ontario, labour-sponsored venture capital funds. We have put in place the running start pilot project, which is now a full-fledged program to ensure that new businesses can access the new ventures loan program that had been established by the previous government.

There are a number of initiatives that we've put in place to try and help fill those gaps in terms of access to capital. But I share the member's concern. It is a significant one and we have been undertaking a major access to capital review.

Mr Wiseman: While I am encouraged to hear that we are doing a lot in this area, despite the fact that the federal Liberal government is doing nothing but continuing the federal Tory policies, I would like to address the specific sectoral problem that is a major issue in our economy, and that is the retail sector. Could the minister please tell—

Interjections.

Mr Wiseman: I'm trying to do this over the defence of the provincial Liberals for the federal Liberals at the expense of Ontario, but it is difficult.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Question.

Mr Wiseman: Could the minister please tell us what we can do in the province, within the confines of our limited jurisdiction, to help this sector, as many of the small businesses who have been to see me recently are retail. I might add that while the Liberals and the Tories don't care about small businesses in this province, I do.

Hon Ms Lankin: If I can indicate one of the things that is a problem when you are talking about the issue of access to capital in any of the sectors—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. Minister.

Hon Ms Lankin: I was indicating that one of the problems you have in examining the problems of access to capital on a sectoral basis is the fact that there is not a database or a collection of data from financial institutions, either federally or provincially regulated, which breaks down that information to show where in fact financial institutions are investing.

With respect to business assistance or investment programs on the part of the provincial government, the retail sector is not a sector that the government has invested in in the past. Usually as restaurants or clothing stores open up in a community they are competing with other existing businesses, as opposed to adding new net employment in a community.

However, the retail sector overall is a sector that is under great threat at this point in time, as we see discount stores, Wal-Mart and others, coming in. We have, as in other sectors, a sectoral strategy under way dealing with the retail sector, bringing diverse people to the table for the first time. I am hopeful to be able to report to the House within the next short while on the outcomes of those discussions.

LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): To the Minister of Labour: There is currently a strike by foodservices workers against the Marriott Management Services company, which has the food contract to service Queen's University. It should be clear that this is not a strike against Queen's but rather against the company that has the contract. These strikers have decided to picket public areas on the university site, including the student study areas. In an effort to help the students study in peace, the university has obtained an injunction against the union picketing in these areas.

Your Bill 40, Minister, allows this picketing, and the union has appealed the injunction to the OLRB. In any event, the injunction runs out this Friday. Are you prepared to sit by and allow the strikers to disrupt the study efforts of these students at this critical time leading up to their final exams?

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): This is a matter of a collective agreement and of collective bargaining going on. I certainly don't intend to interfere in a collective bargaining process.

Mr Mahoney: This is not about the collective bargaining process. The university is not interfering in the collective bargaining process. The mandate of the university is to provide an opportunity for these students to graduate, to pass their exams. How can they possibly study when they've got picketers coming into their study areas to disrupt the peace and quiet that is required to study for a university exam?

Minister, I'm not asking you to interfere in any way in the collective bargaining process. I am asking you, are you prepared to sit by and allow these picketers—not striking the university; very important—to put at risk the results of the final exams of these university students or are you prepared to do something to instruct the picketers not to bother these students and let them study and get on with their year?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: I'm sure the university could bring charges if it decided that the law was being broken. In the interim, I'm not prepared to interfere in a collective bargaining situation.

RETAIL SALES TAX

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): My question is for the Minister of Finance and it concerns his tax on you-brews. Members know that in last year's budget the minister announced that he was going to start collecting a 26-cent-a-litre tax on beer and wine made at brew-your-own establishments.

Last November I raised in this House the example of Karen and George Pudsey of Erin in Wellington county. They opened the doors of their you-brew business the day before the minister announced the you-brew tax in the last budget. Their business grew until August, when the you-brew tax kicked in, and drastically declined until January this year when, sadly, they were forced to close their doors. They estimate they've lost about $100,000.

On Monday the minister announced that he was cutting in half the you-brew tax because of its negative impact on the industry. George and Karen Pudsey have asked me to direct a question to the minister, and I've sent the minister a copy of their letter. Their question is this: How does the government propose to compensate those people whose businesses went under because of this tax?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): I appreciate the courtesy of the member for Wellington sending me over a copy of the letter to which he refers.

When we decided to reduce the tax by 50% and cancel two future scheduled tax increases this year and next, it was because of the difficulties in the you-brew industry to which the member for Wellington refers. There was at the time when we imposed the tax no tax whatsoever on this aspect of their business, the alcohol content, and I think in terms of public policy, that's wrong in the province. I think there should be a tax on all alcohol that's sold in this province. I think in terms of public policy, that's the right policy.

However, I do believe, given what the economists call the infant industry nature of the you-brew industry, that there were particular difficulties associated with this tax. I don't deny that or I would not have announced that we were going to reduce the tax and cancel two future increases. But having said that, I do not for a moment believe that all of the problems in this new industry can be tagged with the tax that was imposed last August.

Mr Arnott: The minister's announcement on Monday that he was cutting the you-brew tax was a direct admission that this tax was punitive; in other words, it had a direct negative impact on the you-brew businesses.

When George and Karen Pudsey opened their doors to do business, I dropped in to wish them success. They are a young, hardworking couple who had a dream for a better life for themselves and their family, which died with the introduction of that tax. George and Karen also said in their letter, "Don't start a business, whatever you do, as you'll surely be taxed out of existence and pay for it for the rest of your life."

Minister, we told you repeatedly that this tax would kill jobs and kill business. My question is, why didn't you listen?

Hon Mr Laughren: The fact is that we did listen. It's unusual for a government, at a time when revenues are very, very difficult to obtain, to reduce a tax by 50%. So I do believe that we listened and I would remind the member opposite—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Laughren: I don't need any smart comments from the Liberals opposite, who raised taxes at a record level when they were in office and never reduced the tax.

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): Now you're taking the tax off, now that they're all dead.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Order. Minister.

Hon Mr Laughren: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I believe the member for Wellington is trying to deal with a problem in a serious and compassionate way, and I respect that, which is more than I can say for the Liberals who are barracking opposite.

I understand the case the member for Wellington is making, but I do not believe that, given the fact that in any new sector and for small-business startups, there is traditionally something like a 25% or 26% failure rate in these sectors—

Interjection.

Hon Mr Laughren: Well, it's a fact of life. You may not like to admit it, but that's a fact of life. There's a high rate of failure or bankruptcy in new sectors anyway. That's simply a fact of life. I know you don't like to hear that, but it's a fact of life. Therefore, I think that to simply blame everything on a tax is simply unfair and makes no sense whatsoever.

Mr Arnott: Why don't you cut the tax then?

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): Bring a sledgehammer along to fulfil your own policy.

Hon Mr Laughren: I know that you're yacking over there. Why is it that the member for Wellington understands this problem so well and the colleague beside him is just flapping his gums and simply trying to make a political issue out of what I think is a serious problem? At least I give the member for Wellington credit for trying to deal with this in a serious way.

ONTARIO STOCK YARDS

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. As I mentioned earlier this week in a previous question, I recently attended the Oxford Federation of Agriculture's annual lobby day with elected officials. One of the issues that was raised that day was some concerns over the Ontario Stock Yards.

As you know, the stockyards have been closed, but a livestock trust fund was set up as a result of that closure. Concerns were expressed as to what is going to happen to the funds, who is going to control them and how they're going to be allocated. Minister, could you please inform the House and my constituents what is happening with this trust fund?

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): I'd like to thank the member for the question. At this time it probably is appropriate to thank the members on this side and on the other side of the House who have written me a letter on this issue because the Ontario cattlemen in many of the areas have raised their voices to individual members, hoping that the government, through the Ontario Stock Yards Board, would make sure that all the money that might accrue from leases of this property would go back to the livestock industry.

I want to assure the member, in fact all members of the House, that we have ongoing negotiations with my senior officials and the various commodity groups. They have made a recommendation to me about a breakdown between all the different commodity groups that have used the stockyards over the years. It starts off with 63.3% of the funds going to the beef industry, 8.3% going to dairy, 12% going to the veal industry etc on down to hogs, goats and sheep.

We have made a commitment to certainly give as much money as we can that we'll receive to the livestock industry, but we have no final breakdown. We have told the livestock industry—and been very honest and up front with all of the groups—that we expect, and my friend the Minister of Finance expects, to get some money in return for the investment that we've made over the years.

Some $1.3 million is required just to wind up and clean up the stockyards, and the government expects to be able to get some of those costs back. We are willing to negotiate openly with the groups to make sure that this fund is there for the benefit of the livestock industry in the future.

FISH AND WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): Initially my question was to the Premier, but I must agree with the member for Simcoe West that I really believe he just doesn't care about the issues of this province any more.

I'll redirect my question to the Minister of Natural Resources. Minister, some two weeks ago, you met with the Minnesota Natural Resources Department to advise them of Ontario's new fishing regulations and that they were in place to protect the resource. You were quoted as saying, "The regulations we put into place are meant to deal with the conservation plan and we have no intention of relaxing those regulations."

I cannot tell you how surprised I was when your Premier indicated that he was willing to take another look at what you said was non-negotiable. As the deputy commissioner of the Minnesota Natural Resources Department indicated, "The tone from the Premier seems to be different." Who are the people of the province to believe, you or your Premier?

Hon Howard Hampton (Minister of Natural Resources): First of all, let me take the member on. The Premier comes to this House more than I ever remember the former Premier, Mr Peterson, being in this House.

Secondly, let me say to the member that if he wants to be helpful on this issue, he should perhaps stop repeating the rhetoric of people from Minnesota. He could be helpful to the people of Ontario if he would do that.

We have been very, very clear with the state of Minnesota that Ontario intends to manage its resources, that Minnesota must reduce its harvest of Ontario's fish. We have been clear on that. The Premier has been clear on that. Minnesota would prefer to see it otherwise.

I can say to the member, he is not being helpful by taking Minnesota's line on this. Frankly, let me ask the member this: Where was he and where was his government when this activity was going on between 1985 and 1990?

Mr Miclash: I don't think the minister heard what I said. The deputy commissioner of the Minnesota Natural Resources Department indicated, and I quote, "The tone from the Premier seems to be different."

Mr Minister, I don't disagree with what you're doing. You know that the tourist operators agree with you, the anglers agree with you, most of my constituents agree with you, most of your constituents agree with you as well. But why is it that your Premier does not agree with you when it comes to the fish stocks of this province? He has indicated that he will take another look at this matter.

Hon Mr Hampton: Again I would say to the member that if he really wants to be helpful on this issue, he should stop taking the interest of Minnesota. MNR staff have worked on this issue for the last three years. I have worked on it for the last year. The Premier has met with the governor of Minnesota to state to him again and again what Ontario's position is.

If the member wants to repeat the rhetoric from Minnesota, that's for him to do, but he's not being very helpful to his constituents and the people across north-western Ontario in taking that position.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): My question is for the Solicitor General. Thousands of experienced hunters in Ontario are outraged that this government is compelling them to take the Canadian firearms safety test. Minister, can you tell me why you have chosen to force experienced hunters to waste their time and money on something they do not need?

Hon David Christopherson (Solicitor General): Let me say first of all, let's be very clear that the legislation the member refers to is Tory legislation. I would say there's a feeling among the provinces, as there is among hunters and anglers and others, that the job was not well done and it wasn't completed.

Whichever side of the argument you might be on, it was a piece of work that did not achieve anything near what anybody felt should be done in the area of gun control, and I offer that up from all sides of the issue. It was a very poor piece of legislation on behalf of this province. I conveyed that to the federal ministers and was supported by the other provinces.

Let me say with regard to the issue that the member raises, the matter is one of public safety and it's a question of whether or not we were going to allow exemptions that could indeed allow individuals who maybe should be taking the course and should be taking the test to perhaps not take it. So the only way to deal with it properly was to ensure that everybody had to take the test, as the federal government has outlined.

I would say, in conclusion, the honourable member should know that every province in this entire nation has taken exactly the same position that Ontario has.

Mr Jordan: Are you, Minister, telling me then that you in this province do not have the right to have a regulation that would exempt these experienced hunters from taking this course? Can you not regulate that people in this category can be grandfathered and not be required to take this test?

Hon Mr Christopherson: Let's be very clear. The federal legislation did not deal with this question. They left it up to the provinces to make a determination. The provinces collectively had to take a position, the right position, I believe, in the interests of Canadians, because we had to do the job that the federal government didn't do, and that is why you see every single province—Tory governments, Liberal governments and NDP governments—all taking exactly the same position. If the former Tory government of Brian Mulroney and Kim Campbell et al had done the job they should have done, we wouldn't be in here doing cleanup afterwards.

FOREST MANAGEMENT

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): My question is for the Minister of Environment and Energy. I'd like to ask him, now that the timber management Environmental Assessment Board has reported, what process are you contemplating to see that some of this is implemented?

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): The process is quite clear. Under the act there is a 28-day period following the decision of the board for the minister to make recommendations to cabinet or for appeals to be made. At the end of that period, as Minister of Environment and Energy, I will issue an order for the implementation of the recommendations and it will be the responsibility of my ministry to monitor the compliance of the Ministry of Natural Resources to those recommendations to ensure that we do in fact have the proper management of our forest resources in a way that this province has never seen before.

Mr Martin: That's all fine and good, and certainly during the report itself there was a lot of consultation done out there and a lot of people had a chance to give input. What are you going to do to make sure that as this thing unfolds now, people continue to have some say in how it's actually implemented?

Hon Mr Wildman: As I indicated, there is a 28-day period in which there can be comment and appeal before the final decision is made. But we all recognize that this has been a long, ongoing process. It has been very thorough. A significant number of intervenors have participated in that process, not just from the industry but from the tourist industry, from the anglers and hunters, environmental groups, the naturalists and recreationists.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): Shoot.

Hon Mr Wildman: I guess this member doesn't believe this is an important question, but this has been a tremendous investment. It cost my ministry approximately $1.8 million for this process and other ministries and intervenors much more than that, for a total of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $20 million. It has been an enormous investment to develop a forest management policy in this province, which we've never seen before, and it is important that we respond to it in a serious and thorough manner.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): My question is to the Minister of Labour. Minister, you're aware of the horrible deficit position, of course, of the Workers' Compensation Board, and I'm sure you're also aware of the two ministers in your government who are drawing, on top of their minister's salary, a fully indexed pension from workers' compensation. Are you prepared to approach these ministers to give up their WC pension to assist in decreasing the WCB deficit?

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): I want to say that in terms of the WCB and the problems that exist there, we are working on it and have come forward with plans, which is something I haven't seen from the previous governments, and I think we will deal with the problems at the WCB.

PETITIONS

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Ron Eddy (Brant-Haldimand): A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the minister the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course examinations."

It's signed and I have affixed my signature.

HAEMODIALYSIS

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas several patients from the town of New Tecumseth are forced to travel great distances under treacherous road conditions to receive necessary haemodialysis treatments in Orillia or Toronto; and

"Whereas the government has done nothing to discourage a patchwork dialysis treatment system whereby some patients receive haemodialysis in-home and others travel long distances for treatment; and

"Whereas there are currently two dialysis machines serving only two people in New Tecumseth and one patient is forced to pay for her own nurse; and

"Whereas the government continues to insist they are studying the problem, even though they have known about it for two years; and

"Whereas the Legislature passed Simcoe West MPP Jim Wilson's private member's resolution which called for the establishment of dialysis satellites in New Tecumseth and Collingwood;

"We demand the government establish a dialysis satellite immediately in the town of New Tecumseth."

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): I've got a petition here, intended for the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, signed by Helen and Andrew Kovacs of rural route 2, Welland; by Andrew Szabo of 10 Princess Street; Gord Little of rural route 4, Welland; Steve Apai of 95 Lyons Avenue, along with many others in the Welland and Niagara region area. It's a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads:

"As concerned citizens of Ontario, we, the undersigned, wish to register our objection to Bill 45, An Act to amend the Human Rights Code with respect to Sexual Orientation. Same-sex couples should not be acknowledged in Ontario law."

I table this petition on behalf of those signatories today, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): The member for St Catharines.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I do this I would like to, and I know you would like to, compliment the previous Speaker who sat in the chair and allowed for a record number of questions to be asked this session.

VIOLENCE

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): This is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas serial killer trading cards are being imported into and distributed throughout Ontario and the rest of Canada; and

"Whereas these trading cards feature the crimes of serial killers, mass murderers and gangsters; and

"Whereas we abhor crimes of violence against persons and believe that serial killer trading cards offer nothing positive for children or adults to admire or emulate, but rather contribute to the tolerance and desensitization of violence; and

"Whereas we as a society agree that the protection of our children is paramount;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ontario government enact legislation to ensure that the sale of these serial killer trading cards is restricted to people over the age of 18 years and that substantial and appropriate penalties be imposed on retailers who sell serial killer trading cards to minors."

I affix my signature to this petition from the people of Welland and the people of St Catharines, as I'm in agreement with it.

HAEMODIALYSIS

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas several patients from the Collingwood area are forced to travel great distances under treacherous road conditions to receive necessary haemodialysis treatments; and

"Whereas the government has done nothing to discourage a patchwork dialysis treatment system whereby some patients receive haemodialysis in-home and others travel long distances for treatment; and

"Whereas there are currently two dialysis machines serving only two people in the Collingwood area; and

"Whereas the government continues to insist they are studying the problem even though they have known about it for two years; and

"Whereas the Legislature passed Simcoe West MPP Jim Wilson's private member's resolution which called for the establishment of dialysis satellites in Alliston and Collingwood;

"We demand the government establish a dialysis satellite immediately in the town of Collingwood."

I have of course signed that petition.

ONTARIO HYDRO CLOSURES

Mr Paul R. Johnson (Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings): Today I have petitions with signatures numbering 37,650, and these petitions were delivered to the Minister of Environment and Energy, Bud Wildman, by the Power Workers' Union just today. The petitions read:

"Premier Rae, the undersigned citizens are concerned with and disturbed by the recent announcement by Ontario Hydro to close a number of generating units.

"We petition you and your government to appeal to Ontario Hydro's CEO, Maurice Strong, to defer any decisions on any closures until a complete and impartial review can be conducted.

"In light of Ontario Hydro's own admission of not conducting a complete review of all the impacts these shutdowns will have on local and provincial economies, welfare rolls and unemployment numbers, we strongly urge that your government make this request to Ontario Hydro."

If I might, Speaker, because there are 37,650 signatures here, I will carry this box of petitions down to the Clerk's table so that there will be no injuries to any of the pages.

ST COLUMBAN'S CEMETERY

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I have a petition signed by more than 350 residents of Cornwall and eastern Ontario which reads as follows:

"To the Parliament of Ontario:

"Whereas all cemeteries in the province of Ontario must conform to the Cemeteries Act which regulates the operation of all cemeteries, crematoria, mausolea, columbaria and burial grounds; and

"Whereas St Columban's Cemetery in Cornwall, Ontario, is not ensuring that the cemetery contain such sewers and drains as are necessary to drain it and keep it dry; and

"Whereas the cemetery backfilled existing ditches with eight-inch plastic pipe with the exception of where flooding presently occurs; and

"Whereas some residents have spent more than $2,000 in an attempt to raise the level of their backyards to reduce flooding; and

"Whereas the Registrar of Cemeteries regulation of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations has been unsuccessful in solving the flooding issue;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario to enforce section 19, regulation 130 of the Cemeteries Act ensuring that St Columban's Cemetery keep its cemetery drained and dry and request that the registrar and the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations participate in an onsite investigation to rectify the current situation."

The problem has not been solved, and it will not go away. I've already signed this petition.

VIDEO GAMES

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Theatres Act was amended in 1981 with the intention of keeping certain viewing materials away from children and advances in technology have occurred to such an extent that the concern for children covered by this legislation is negated as it does not cover electronically produced images that are part of video and computer games; and

"Whereas there has been a disturbing increase in the proliferation of violent and sexually explicit video games; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario should be making every effort to regulate the distribution of adult video games and ensure that games designed for adults are clearly marked as such; and

"Whereas Bill 135, the Theatres Amendment Act, 1993, a private member's bill introduced by Waterloo North MPP Elizabeth Witmer, would amend the definition of 'film' so that the electronically produced images that are part of video and computer games come within the purview of the act, particularly the classification system;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That Bill 135 be passed by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as quickly as possible."

This comes from Irene and Archie Hummel in the city of Kitchener. It has been signed by approximately 100 people, and I assign my signature.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I've got a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlords;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible with third reading of Bill 21."

They're appalled that the opposition has delayed this process, wouldn't allow a good process to take place through the committee process and delayed it. I affix my signature to this.

VIOLENCE

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): I have 22 petitions here signed by the good residents of Pembroke. This, added to the other petitions I've read within the last couple of weeks, comes to 3,224 signatures we've collected in support of my private member's Bill 76.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas serial killer trading cards are being imported into and distributed throughout Ontario and the rest of Canada; and

"Whereas these trading cards feature the crimes of serial killers, mass murderers and gangsters; and

"Whereas we abhor crimes of violence against persons and believe that serial killer trading cards offer nothing positive for children or adults to emulate or admire, but rather contribute to the tolerance and desensitization of violence; and

"Whereas we as a society agree that the protection of our children is paramount;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ontario government enact legislation to ensure that the sale of these serial killer trading cards is restricted to people over the age of 18 years and that substantial and appropriate penalties be imposed on retailers who sell serial killer trading cards to minors."

I support this petition, have affixed my signature and would like to commend the Catholic Women's League of Canada for its assistance.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"The Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury, Ontario, provides 24-hour emergency services to an area that covers the four neighbouring corners of Middlesex, Elgin, Kent and Lambton counties. Approximately 16,000 people live in small towns, villages and rural sections of this area.

"Due to a shortage of doctors in the area, the hospital has had difficulty in providing medical coverage for its emergency room on a 24-hour, seven-days-a-week basis. If the hospital cannot get enough doctors to cover, it will have to close its emergency department for part of the 24-hour period. The nearest emergency departments are 40 to 60 minutes' driving distance away.

"We, the residents of the hospital's service area, need 24-hour emergency coverage and want the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the critical issue of medical coverage of rural emergency departments immediately."

I've signed that petition.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I have a petition here from the residents of the Subway Mobile Home Trailer Park in my riding at Dundas Street East in Whitby. It is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities; and

"Whereas this bill has the strong support of our local member of provincial Parliament and is being opposed only by a small number of Progressive Conservatives; and

"Whereas many of these owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home"—their homes—"by the action of their landlords;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible to third and final reading of Bill 21."

MINISTRY STRUCTURE

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have a petition to the Parliament of Ontario.

"Whereas the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Native Affairs are two separate and incomparable ministries; and

"Whereas the abovementioned ministries are at times in conflict with one another;

"For complete and unquestionable representation for each specific ministry,

"I, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"The immediate separation of these two ministries and the immediate resignation of the Honourable Bud Wildman as the Minister of the Environment."

I have several hundred of these petitions.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I affix my signature.

On motion by Mr Phillips, the following bill was given first reading:

Bill 152, An Act to prohibit certain types of payments to Loan Brokers / Projet de loi 152, Loi interdisant aux courtiers en prêts d'exiger certains types de paiements.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): This bill prohibits loan brokers from requiring non-refundable payments, advance payments or deposits from clients.

PROVINCIAL OFFENCES AMENDMENT ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES INFRACTIONS PROVINCIALES

of those, some provincial offences aren't being prosecuted. I hope that the House will give support to this.

EMPLOYER HEALTH TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPÔT PRÉLEVÉ SUR LES EMPLOYEURS RELATIF AUX SERVICES DE SANTÉ

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act / Projet de loi 110, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'impôt prélevé sur les employeurs relatif aux services de santé et la Loi sur les accidents du travail.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): We are now resuming the adjourned debate. The member for Mississauga West has the floor.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): Thank you to the members for agreeing the other day to adjourn the debate so that I could begin afresh, shall we say, in sharing my remarks and concerns about this particular bill.

You will notice that it's called An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act, substantially two separate issues. I want to address them as two separate issues because one of the tricks this government has resorted to, in an attempt to get some of its distasteful legislation passed, is to piggy-back issues or to put forward omnibus bills.

The Workers' Compensation Act amendments that I have seen in relationship to Bill 110 make a lot of sense; in fact, they're overdue. It's an issue that many people have talked about. It's the issue of trying to get at the approximately 20,000 companies in the province of Ontario that currently are not registered to pay workers' compensation premiums.

One might ask how that could happen. Well, they simply never came in from the cold, so to speak. Someone would set up a business. They're probably not paying other things. Those companies may not even be paying their share in income taxes, in property taxes and other corporate taxes. We don't know, but there are estimates. It's difficult to know how you find these people, how you sort them out, but there are estimates that there are as many as 20,000 corporations in the province of Ontario that are avoiding, through one way or another, their workers' compensation premiums.

I recently spent some time talking to folks about reform to workers' comp and one of the things injured workers say is: "Before you decrease our benefit levels, why don't you go after the companies that are neglecting to pay their premiums? Before you concentrate on trying to say that all injured workers are fraudulent, go after these companies that indeed are fraudulent."

There was a suggestion made on a recent tour I was on on workers' compensation that we grant an amnesty. That had some appeal to it in the beginning, that we simply announce there will be a 90-day amnesty for all companies registered in the province of Ontario that wish to come in. The reason an amnesty would be needed is that the current law calls for penalties of up to seven years.

Imagine: If you're a company out there and you're not registered and you're not paying workers' comp fees, are you going to declare that and then get hit with a seven-year potential back-payment of your premiums? It will put you out of business.

The idea of an amnesty to avoid these charges and to avoid the complications of being put out of business was put forward as an alternative. I thought that made sense. Many people on the tour I was on thought it made sense as well. Our research staff looked at it and we thought, if there is a way to get these 20,000 companies currently not sharing the load in workers' compensation to come forward through an amnesty, then maybe we should do that.

I thought about that a little more and realized, what incentive would there be? If you did declare an amnesty, why would they come forward? If they're currently not registered and they're not paying other taxes and they're not supporting society the way most corporations and most people in this province do, why would they come forward just because they get an amnesty on penalty payments on WCB? I don't think they would.

We had to say: "Let's look at some other ideas. How do we get to these people?" One of the things we came up with is that there are currently government systems in place that we simply need to tap into to allow for better communication.

What Bill 110 allows for is the interchange of information between the Ministry of Finance and the Workers' Compensation Board. Until now, the ministry could not give information to the board because of privacy concerns. This is exactly the type of thing we should be doing.

I would suggest there's another step that could be taken, and without totally letting the cat out of the bag, so to speak, my report on Workers' Compensation Board reforms will be released on Friday morning, and one of the 36 recommendations we deal with in that report deals with the requirement for every corporation to file an annual return, for which this government has added a $50 fee or $50 tax grab for every single corporation in the province, whether you've changed, whether you've moved, whether you've got a new phone number, it doesn't matter.

You could be in exactly the same position you were in 12 months ago. Every year in Bob Rae's Ontario, you have to file a new declaration to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations and you've got to pay them $50. It doesn't matter if the company is inactive, it doesn't matter if you're doing business and it doesn't matter if you've made any changes: You have to fill out the new form, and when you send it in without the money, you get a nasty letter back from the ministry saying, "We want your $50."

We've objected to that. We find that's just another way that this Treasurer, if you can think of the companies—the member shakes her head no; it's absolute nonsense—it's another way for this government to increase revenue by simply penalizing small business, and we've objected to that. But maybe you can make some good out of this.

Why not do what you're doing in Bill 110 and use that $50 tax grab to find those 20,000 companies that are currently avoiding paying workers' compensation premiums? All that would be required, it seems to me, in this day of the modern technical highway, the digital highway that's available, would be to establish a computer link between the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations and the Workers' Compensation Board. If it needs to be done by legislation, then so be it. If there are concerns about the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, then do it by legislation as is being done in Bill 110.

Somebody in the government had a light go on and said, "Maybe we can get at those 20,000 people." I'm surprised it took the government this long because this has clearly been a very strong position of organized labour.

The sexy issues politically in workers' compensation surround the fraud charges, the fact that there are people who claim to be injured when they're not, the fact that indeed there are people in this Legislature who currently enjoy lifetime pensions in workers' compensation while they also enjoy the luxury of collecting a cabinet minister's salary. These are the kinds of things that upset people about workers' compensation.

Labour comes along and with some legitimacy says that before you just beat up on the worker here—the facts are that the vast majority of injured workers are truly injured and need the help of the Workers' Compensation Board. That's what Justice Meredith set it up for in 1914. That was the whole principle behind workers' compensation. So their message is, before you just take it out and think that you can solve the unfunded liability by slashing benefits to injured workers or by turning down more and more claims, why don't you get everybody at the table, get the 20,000 people who are avoiding paying workers' compensation premiums and make them pay into the system?

Bill 110, which will allow for the interchange of information, at least puts in place partially a system that should allow the Workers' Compensation Board to identify these companies. I'm not convinced it will, because it may well be that many of these companies are also avoiding the employer health tax. The reality is—think about it—they probably are. If they're avoiding WCB, I suspect they're avoiding EHT and anything else they can avoid. I think somebody over there at least got the message, and the message is that we should use the information that is available within the government computer network system, within other ministries, to share this information, to make sure that we're treating all Ontarians the same.

Hopefully, with the recommendation that will be coming out in my report on Friday and will be tabled with the Minister of Labour, the Premier, the Treasurer or anybody else who needs a little late-night reading, the government will see the sense of at least that recommendation and use that Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations' filing system, that $50 gouge that the government has implemented, to turn it into some revenue for the Workers' Compensation Board. Revenue, of course, is a big part of the problem in the Workers' Compensation Board as well as expenditures, and this would simply be one way of expanding that revenue base. I have some hope that at least someone has heard the message.

Bill 110 replaces Bill 27, and once again the purpose for doing that is similar to other bills that have been introduced, most of which, by the way, have gone through here in some form or other of closure by this government, because it's unable to manage its own political agenda in the Legislature, to put its ideas forward and get them debated in a proper way. The only solution they have, ultimately, is to bring in time allocation and closure.

The purpose of this bill is to extend the employer health tax to self-employed people, such as doctors and lawyers. Once again, we have a situation where—and this was dealt with because, let's face it, we in our party were the ones who introduced the employer health tax. People seem to want to talk a lot about that. What they fail to say when they talk about the employer health tax is the fact that it also replaced and abolished all OHIP premiums throughout the province.

That was a promise. That wasn't something that we, as the government of the day, sprung on anybody. That was a pledge during an election campaign by David Peterson, the former Premier of the province, that he would eliminate OHIP premiums. Obviously, when you do that, you have to have some way of replacing that revenue. You can't just simply say, "We're going to run a $33-billion or $40-billion health care system without any particular mechanism to fund it."

The arguments can be put forward that perhaps it was unfair to transfer it, and that could be a debate of some significance, but one of the problems that was recognized at the time of the implementation of the EHT was the impact on independent business people. Under the terms of Bill 110, the first $40,000 of net self-employment income for these self-employed doctors, lawyers etc, for these individuals, is exempted from the EHT.

If I'm a self-employed lawyer, I just found a way to get out of this. It's easy. I will simply draw a salary of $39,999 and the rest of it I'll put out in some form of dividend or profit-sharing or other expenses through the business. Perhaps I'll set up a separate corporation and channel the money, quite legally. I'm not suggesting they would do anything illegal. I'm not suggesting even it's immoral. You've laid the rules down here. You're saying that anybody who earns under the $40,000 figure, if it's self-employment income, will be provided an exemption. I can tell you that this bill then becomes nothing more than mere paper.

That's part of the problem that was recognized by the former government in implementing it and how broad you can expand it.

Mr Paul Klopp (Huron): You didn't.

Mr Mahoney: Absolutely, that was looked at.

The difficulty with this bill is that you think it's a panacea at a time, by the way, when times are dramatically different, I would add, at a time when back in 1987, 1988, as we often hear shouted in our direction, we had all kinds of money.

One of the real differences was that we adopted a policy of pay as you go. It was very much a policy that said—

Ms Christel Haeck (St Catharines-Brock): Try that again.

Mr Mahoney: No. Not only did we not deficit finance, I say to the members opposite, we provided in this government the first balanced budget in many, many years, and in fact actually paid almost $500 million off the total provincial debt.

Just to give you a comparison, Bob Rae's government, Floyd Laughren's government will have taken, by the time you're all laid to rest, by the time we are reading your eulogies—and there won't be many but there will be some—your government will have taken this province down the road from a $39-billion total debt in the province of Ontario to a debt somewhere, dare I say, exceeding $90 billion. You will almost triple the total debt.

People talk about the deficit. You're going to bring out this good-news budget next Thursday, whenever it is, May 5. You come out with this budget. "No new taxes," Floyd says. "Read my lips." As I said earlier, I think he's dancing and what he really meant was, "Read my hips," because I don't think he's being straight.

What he's going to do is, he's going to take the debt and he's going to transfer it into the crown corporations. You're going to have a crown corporation with a pile of debt to build schools, and yet they'll be lucky if they get the money. We don't quite know. In fact, the separate school board in my own community, Dufferin-Peel, is at last count 29 schools behind in its requirements, based on the enrolment of that school board. Can they ever catch up?

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): Where were they in 1989?

Mr Mahoney: Well, let me tell you where they were, my friend. We were the first government ever to give a long-term commitment of capital financing to the school boards. We announced five years so that they could plan their budgeting, so that they knew what they were going to get. We put the money there and we said, "We know it's not enough," and I say to the government opposite, no matter how much money you put into it, it won't be enough. If the Dufferin-Peel separate school board is behind 29 schools and then you add in the problems in other communities, you can imagine, how in the world are we going to build 100 or 200 schools throughout the province of Ontario? I am not suggesting for a minute that this government should be even trying to approach those figures.

But the fact of the matter is that what the Treasurer is doing is fudging the books, setting up crown corporations, moving the debt off the government's books into a crown corporation and then saying, "Aren't we good money managers?" There is a small problem with that.

You can fool some of the people some of the time, there's no question; but you will never fool the bond raters. You will never fool the financial institutions. More importantly, you will never fool the investors, who are the people, who lack complete and total confidence in this government and in this Premier and in this Treasurer.

What is your solution? Your solution is to bring in more taxes. I hear stuff about all the taxes the Tories brought in and the Liberals brought in over the years. I hear about, "This government abolished the tire tax." Great round of applause in the budget debate that day, members will recall. You were all trained and ready to applaud on cue. And you abolished the commercial concentration—oh, I'm sorry—the "hated" commercial concentration tax. Whenever you say that, you have to say "the hated tax."

What that did was, that took out of the consolidated revenue fund total revenues of about $110 million. Some $110 million taken out of those two taxes, the hated commercial concentration tax and the tire tax.

Then a couple of paragraphs down in that same budget document, there was a great announcement that didn't quite get the same kind of applause from the back bench, and it was to impose a tax on insurance premiums. Interesting.

Do any members here know how much revenue was generated from the tax on insurance premiums? Does the member for Downsview know the answer to that?

Mr Perruzza: No, you tell us.

Mr Mahoney: Let me just help you out. It was about $700 million. We're talking about a revenue shift of $590 million in more tax revenue for this government. "Hurray, we got rid of the tire tax. Hurray, we got rid of the commercial concentration tax. And oh, by the way, we put in another tax—but we don't want to tell you about that—on insurance premiums."

Do you know the problem? There is no choice on insurance premiums; none whatsoever. You haven't told us what you're going to do with the money. You let it sink into the black hole of the consolidated revenue fund to try to make this Treasurer look like he's even got a clue about how to manage the finances of this province. An absolute charade, a sham, close to dishonest.

You brought in a tax—who can live in this province without insuring their automobile? It's against the law. You don't need collision, but if you've got a bank loan you're going to need collision or you won't get the bank loan. If it's a car you paid cash for and you decide you want to run the risk, you don't need collision but you've got to have liability. It's the law in Ontario. Do they have a choice? Do they have a choice on insuring a house, an apartment building, a small business for liability? Do they have a choice? They have no choice.

So I just ask the government to be a little more forthcoming, a little more honest, a little more open when you talk about your taxation policy. I am quite sure there was another reason for bringing that in: People's policies expire at different times throughout the year. It's an issue of divide and conquer. You won't get everybody mad at the same time. Some of the policies come up in April, some of them come up in September, some of them come up in January and people don't really get angry, they don't pay attention until it hits them right in the backyard or right in the back pocket.

Every once in a while constituency telephones will ring and people will say, "I just got my insurance premium." I got a call yesterday from a senior citizen in Mississauga who said: "I just got my policy renewal. What is this tax?" I felt like saying, "Sir, where have you been?" But I said I understood the fact that not everybody, contrary to what we believe, pays attention to Ontario politics every day.

The fact is, only 2% of the population of our entire country belongs to a political party of one description or another, so a very small minority of the population is actively involved in politics. Also, a lot of the issues get buried on the editorial page. We have to understand that people don't get hit with this stuff until they get their bills.

This government's solution is to pretend they're being heroes by eliminating certain taxation that a former government might have put in place and by announcing another grab that is by far—well, it's five times the tax grab of those other two taxes combined.

The past—what is it now?—10 days, maybe not quite 10 days; about five or six days—

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): How big was the—

Mr Mahoney: You'll have your chance—about five or six days of legislative days. For five or six days—

Mr Turnbull: Believe me, I will take it.

Mr Mahoney: I was interested to hear the critic for—I'm not sure what his role is but I guess he's the Finance critic or Intergovernmental Affairs critic—earlier today going on at the Premier and his statement, saying he should cut down the partisanship. An interesting comment coming from one of the Conservatives, who seem to spend their lives just pointing all over the place trying to blame everybody else.

I remember the days really well under Bill Davis when I was on municipal council in Mississauga. I remember the days really well and, believe you me, sir, you were not around at that particular time. You may have been practising law or doing something else but, believe you me, the Bill Davis pink Tories were no angels when it came to taxation. I can recall many a transfer payment being cut out from underneath the legs. You talk about the Premier saying, "knee-capped"; let me tell you, Bill Davis, Dennis Timbrell and all of your glorious former Tory cabinet ministers I think invented the art of knee-capping municipalities and school boards.

Mind you, I think it's been taken to a new level by the NDP. It's interesting to me to see how often the NDP and the Conservatives in this province get into bed with one another. It must be awfully uncomfortable. It's a little bit like that stuff you hear in Ottawa about, imagine, the Reform Party and the NDP forming an alliance in the federal Parliament. Somehow I find it difficult to understand, but maybe we've seen a forerunner of that.

I know on second reading of the social contract the Conservatives in this Legislature voted in favour of that bill; of course, they changed their vote when they came under tremendous pressure, I'm sure, from their constituents, and voted against it on third reading. It was awfully strange to see Mike Harris and the Conservatives climbing into bed and saying: "Excuse me, Mr Rae, Mr Laughren, would you mind moving over? We want in. We agree with what you're doing." But they did.

I was about to say that for the past six or so legislative days in this place we've done nothing but talk about tax increases by this government, we've done nothing but address how they can increase that black hole, how they can increase their revenue without talking about creating any kind of confidence or any sense in the private sector that they've got a chance to survive.

We recently put out a document that I'd like to share with you. It is called The Report of the Lyn McLeod Task Force on Jobs. I commend this to all of you; it's excellent reading. The vice-chair, the member for York Centre, the honourable Greg Sorbara, former Minister of Labour et al, is joining us. This document puts out what we refer to as a five-part plan for success rather than just continuing to bash small business and anybody who tries to get up.

Just when the economy's getting up, just when the small business persons are starting to get to their feet, along comes Rae and, boom, smacks them down again with more taxes. Six days of debate in this Legislature on tax increases, on revenue increases from this government. Why don't you wake up and try to say something positive that just might give an investor some hope for the future of this province? They're frightened to death, and you don't understand: They're leaving. There are moving vans going down the QEW and crossing the border because of Bob Rae and the NDP.

What you have done to this province is sad. You will be held accountable. There will be a legacy that you will not be able to defend, and the people will show you what they think about that when you finally have the courage to call an election.

Our five-part plan under the Lyn McLeod plan, under her leadership, is as follows:

"(1) Charting a Bold New Course...to get the commitment of all of Ontario to the benefits of embarking on this vision...one that embraces the future and gears the economy to that future."

You've got to think in terms of starting the engine. You've got to think in terms of allowing the private sector to have an opportunity to move ahead to create jobs. You won't create them. The jobs you will create will be short-term. Build some subways; we need them. Fine. But when they're built the job's over, and you don't understand that.

You've got to let the economy breathe. That's our second point. The stifling—we've seen nothing, no attempt to reduce or eliminate the red tape, and what do we do? We're in here talking about expanding a tax bill that is so full of loopholes the private sector is laughing at it.

In fact, what you're doing with this bill is, I would tell you, creating more work for the chartered accountants, and I'm sure they're appreciative. At this time of the year, of course, they're awfully busy. We're two weeks away from filing our income tax and they're busy, but once that's over they're going to get a copy of this bill and they're going to say: "Aha. All of my clients can avoid this by only declaring $39,000 worth of income"—that's job number one—"and why don't we just set up some trust funds and some methods of moving the money out?" You just don't get it. I don't know where you think you're going to get any revenue out of this thing.

The fact of the matter is that what you should be doing is concentrating on helping certain specific industries. How about the hospitality industry? I was recently in Sault Ste Marie at the Water Tower Inn with my good friend Mike Quinn—Mike's probably watching; Mike's a crazy guy—and we were talking about the impact on small business in Sault Ste Marie.

Why not put in place some ideas that will encourage the entrepreneur? Instead, what do we do? We get a member here talking up. They want to blame the banks. If they can't blame the banks, they want to blame the feds. I just wish for once you would accept your responsibility and look in the mirror and say, "I have found the problem." There it is; every morning Bob Rae and Floyd Laughren can identify the biggest problem that this province has got. It is not reforming taxes, it is not increasing taxes; it is reducing taxes. If you reduce the percentage you will increase your revenue. When are you finally going to get to understand that?

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr Mahoney: I thank you for the opportunity of speaking to this legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Now we have time for questions or comments.

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I listened intently, and a lot of government bashing usually seems to take place when we discuss money bills.

I had an opportunity earlier on this week, as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health, to go to Mississauga, to Medtronic. They've introduced a new pacemaker and they've got an international approval rating. They're investing here. All the Latin American parts of the corporation are run out of Canada. It's high-tech.

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): What's their health tax?

Mr O'Connor: I guess people would say, "How much money are you putting into it?" I think that's what I heard from the member from Dufferin here. The fact of the matter is, these corporations are developing here and it's not government money. The fact of the matter is, the global market for health products today is around $300 billion and people are investing here.

I was also in the Mississauga area a week ago touring a health-related facility, EFOS, Engineering Fibre Optic Systems, and again they're investing, when they could be investing anywhere else in the world, here. The fact of the matter is that yes, it's because of programs like Jobs

Ontario which recognize that for business people—we didn't just reduce taxes for business people. We did that, yes, but that's not all we did. We put together a program, we had some interaction, said let's recognize the cost of training employees. You know, EFOS has actually used some of those dollars. They got people trained through Jobs Ontario; a lot of rhetoric in this.

I was up to Aurora this morning, just outside of my riding, to take a look at Torcan. It's a pharmaceutical research laboratory, and it's all good news. Their employees are growing all the time.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr O'Connor: Let's take a look at some good news once in a while.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions or comments?

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): I only had an opportunity to hear a brief part of the speech of my friend from Mississauga West, and I see that obviously not many members of the government party were listening very carefully.

We spend a lot of time, particularly on tax bills, discussing the overall performance of the government. When you cut away all of the rhetoric and all of the shouting and screaming, the reality in Ontario over the past four years is the most dismal economic performance of all of the provinces in Canada and one of the most dismal economic performances of any similar jurisdiction in the western world and certainly in North America.

I personally do not lay all of the blame for that at the feet of the Bob Rae government. It would be foolish to suggest that every single economic problem that Ontario confronts right now is the fault of Bob Rae and the policies and principles and taxes and legislation that he's brought forward.

The thing that really troubles me, and this troubled me particularly as we went through the two and a half months of hearings of the jobs task force that, as my friend said, I and Gerry Phillips chaired, is that the government fails to acknowledge, I guess much like any government in Ontario, any kernel of responsibility. It's always somebody else's fault. It's the fault of the worldwide depression, according to Bob Rae, it's the fault of—today we heard it in ministers' statements—the federal government, and now, a new twist to Bob Rae's lecture on whose fault it is, it's the fault of the province of Quebec, which is getting more than its share.

This business of seeking to blame others is the thing that is destroying us in Ontario, and we really have to stop it.

Ms Haeck: I wanted just to take a couple of moments to respond to some points that the member from Mississauga brought forward today.

I have the privilege of sitting as Chair for the standing committee on regulations and private bills. During that time, the last year or so that I've held that position, I have had many opportunities to have private bills come before me for revival of corporations that have been in default of keeping their information before the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

What always amazes me is to hear the comments made by members like the member from Mississauga, where he casts aspersions on the $50 filing fee yet he doesn't put into place the fact that in order to be revived as a corporation under the procedures of this House and this Legislature, the corporations would have to spend well in excess of $1,000 to achieve their proper standing as a corporation.

I ask those viewers out there to listen with a rather large grain of salt to these comments, because the $50 filing fee, weighed against the more than $1,000 that it could cost a company for not maintaining its records properly, is I think actually a minor expense.

The member from Mississauga should actually take a look at the current Ontario Gazette and see the list of corporations which are currently under default for not keeping their information up to date with the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I'd say that's a pretty large expense for those corporations to encounter.

Mr David Winniger (London South): I too listened very carefully to the remarks of the member for Mississauga West, and quite frankly, I was astounded by some of the allegations he's made in the House today.

If we go back and look just four years ago at the situation in Ontario, where the Liberals had just come through some of the most prosperous years this province has ever seen, all of us were a little mystified when they called an early election in 1990. But you don't need a crystal ball to know why. They knew that tough times were right around the corner. They knew we might be entering the worst recession since the 1930s, not only a cyclical but a structural recession where the recovery would be extremely long and protracted. And instead of inheriting a balanced budget, which the Liberals trumpeted during their 1990 election campaign, we opened the cupboard and found that the deficit we came into government with had already climbed to at least $250 million.

Since that time, instead of pointing the finger of blame, as the Liberals like to do and the member for Mississauga West has attempted to do today, we've taken a very constructive approach where we've offered to go in and help industry recover during these very difficult times, and we don't have to look far to see the results and the success of that endeavour.

We look at Provincial Papers in Thunder Bay. We look at Algoma and Sault Ste Marie, Kapuskasing, Hamilton, Windsor. Across the province, the government has entered into partnership with business to bring back some of those jobs that were lost during the recession. We know that in the last four years we've been in government, over 300,000 jobs have been created in this province, and we remain undeterred in turning around the deficit situation and renewing our economy in Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: Now we have reply from the member for Mississauga West.

Mr Mahoney: The analysis is really quite something. I'm not sure I heard this, but I think I did: We called the early election because we wanted to lose and thought, "Well, let's let them try it." We wanted out; we'd had enough of government. That's the logic.

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): That's pretty clear.

Mr Mahoney: If that's what you guys believe, fine, that's good.

Then the member for St Catharines says, "We put a $50 fee on every business in the province to save them money." That's what I heard her say. "We're going to save them money, because if the poor souls happen to go into default of whatever the requirements are under the Corporations Act, it's going to cost them $1,000 to get back in business."

That logic is clearly an example of what is wrong with the New Democratic Party and this socialist government.

They don't want to pay it. If their business goes out of business, let them go out of business. Let them die in peace, for God's sake. Don't be harassing them every year to put 50 bucks in your pocket and to file a new document when nothing has changed. That is absolute, incredible nonsense to use as justification.

Let me talk to the member for Durham-York. I'm delighted to know you were in Mississauga. It's too bad you didn't spend some time and go to city hall and meet the mayor or talk to the business development people in Mississauga, because maybe you'd get an idea of why those businesses are expanding in the city of Mississauga.

Let me tell you something. They're not doing it because of you, they're doing it in spite of you. They're doing it because our city has got a balanced budget with reduced taxes, because it's debt-free, because it's got an atmosphere and a community that is second to none in this province, a place for people to work and live and raise their families in peace and harmony and affordability. You don't even know what that means.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. Further debate?

Mr Tilson: I'm pleased to make a few comments with respect to Bill 110, which deals with the extension of the employer health tax.

This is a bill, of course, that came out of the 1993 budget, the budget where one of the Toronto papers said, "They're even taxing dirt."

Dealing specifically with the issue of health, this of course has been a problem for all governments, the issue of, how do we pay for the health service? Should it be free? The attitude of, do we have any idea what it's costing us when we go to see a doctor or anyone in the health service?

There's the issue of fraud, which hasn't been well handled by this government. The Liberal red card, which was developed by the Liberals and brought forward by the NDP government, hasn't worked. It's been shown to be full of fraudulent activity, people who had cards who shouldn't have had cards, and the tremendous expense that is going on.

Finally, the third issue, which is what this bill is all about: Who is going to pay for our health services? That's a topic that many of us continually have in our minds when we look at the size of the health budget and the cost to the taxpayer.

This bill of course is an extension of the bill that was introduced in the past by the Liberals to replace OHIP payments. I think the Liberal bill was entitled Bill 47. This bill now extends the employer health tax to self-employed people: partnerships, professionals, doctors, lawyers, engineers, commissioned sales people, farmers, people involved in the fishing industry, all kinds of people who are self-employed—who, I might add, if they are already employing people do pay a health tax for their employees. I don't think anyone's ever referred to this, but it's almost a form of double taxation. I hope the government takes a look at this.

The government talks about its Jobs Ontario, which I'm not sure is working, with the unemployment that continues in this province, the fear people have for their jobs. A lot of these jobs that occur in the province come from small business, and yet we're adding on to it, more and more, what the small business person has to pay to keep going, and they can't afford to pay. Jobs are moving away from this province.

I know members will stand up and they'll give quotes of visits to various ridings where new businesses are occurring, but that isn't what the statistics say. I'll be referring to those statistics as we progress in my comments this afternoon, that people are moving away, that small businesses are closing. Small businesses are closing.

It's estimated that this tax will put $35 million in the provincial coffers and will affect up to 45,000 people in the province of Ontario. To date, only 35,000 people have registered for the employer health tax. The difficulty is that these small business people are going to be taxed. Whether they're making a profit or whether they're not, they're going to be taxed. Whether you're making a large profit or whether you're making a small profit, these small people—the farmer, the engineer, the professional individual, any individual who is operating their own business—are now going to be taxed whether they're making a profit or not, notwithstanding the fact that they're already paying for employees. That's a principle we can't forget.

Normally, many of our taxes are based on what you're making; it's not a tax on the poor. Many of these people aren't exactly well off as a result of the recession and the political philosophies of our governments of today, whether it be provincial or federal. They're dying out there, and this tax is going to be levied on the self-employed individual whether or not he or she is making a profit.

People who earn less than $40,000 are exempt from the tax, as are corporations, limited partners, trusts, non-residents who do business in Ontario, and status Indians who are self-employed and operating an unincorporated business on a reserve do not pay the employer health tax.

It gets back to the question, how are we going to pay for our health services? Yes, there were problems with the OHIP system, there's no question. The Liberals tried to fix that, but it was a miserable failure. There's fraud all over the place. I made a statement in the House last week and produced two health cards that I was able to obtain. My card was falling apart. I made an application. I now have two health cards, a rather remarkable situation. People are getting cards all over the place, and they are being used in fraudulent fashion. There's no way to stop the fraud.

Perhaps the government is just trying to raise money in this province for the general consolidated revenue, perhaps they're trying to pay for health services, I don't know. My guess is that it has nothing to do with that, particularly when we look at the slowness of the government with respect to solving our health expenses, the fraudulent activity.

This bill will in fact, I believe, be inequitable in that it will narrow down the number of people to a smaller group that are paying for our health services, as opposed to all of us. Many of us in this province have no idea, if you go to see a doctor or anyone else that's covered under our health plans, what that service costs. We could go any number of times. It's free. I believe we all abuse it. I believe doctors abuse it. I believe that everyone in the system abuses it. We all abuse it because it's free. Well, it has to be paid for. That's the problem. The cost of health is mushrooming. I don't know what it is now. It was a third of our budget. It's at least a third, if not more. There doesn't seem to be any control on it.

I know the Minister of Health has promised that she's going to bring forward a new system. I sat on a committee prior to Christmas and listened to Mr Decter promise a new health card system, although we have yet to see it. We've got a real problem with health, and I don't think the answer is in this bill, to be passing it on to the farmer and the self-employed individual and the professional. I don't think that's the answer.

To date, the Ministry of Finance spends $1.5 million on staffing charges, and there are 25 to 30 people employed by the government to administer the employer health tax. Direct operating expenses are $0.5 million, making the total $2 million. That's another issue. When you get into this business of filling out forms, if you look at the bill, we're going to have more forms; it's just another form that's got to be filled out. We're going nuts with bureaucracy. We're going to hire more bureaucrats to administer this legislation. I can say that I'm not in favour of that, not in favour of simply expanding the bureaucratic system.

This bill was introduced, as I indicated, in 1989 by the Liberals as part of their election campaign to eliminate OHIP premiums. It was known as Bill 47. It went into effect in January 1990. It imposed a new payroll tax on employers who had a permanent business in Ontario. Again, the philosophy of that bill is to restrict as to who's making the payment.

Health services should be paid for by all of us. Those who cannot afford the health payments should be compensated. This bill narrows down the payments to a fewer number.

Progressive Conservatives were opposed to this tax because it was a payroll tax, which is in effect a tax on job creation. It's going to be a burden on small and marginal firms. That's exactly what this tax is. It is going to be a tax on job creation. The government stands up on a daily basis and boasts about its Jobs Ontario program, which is rather restrictive. Jobs Ontario, to my knowledge, isn't really helping the small business person. Yet you're putting a health tax on a small business person to pay for a mushrooming health system that is completely out of control.

We tried to amend the bill to provide employers with a $400,000 deductible, to exempt payrolls of small and medium-sized firms, to exempt transfer payment recipients and to freeze the tax rates. None of these amendments passed.

If you're in a small business, any of the individuals we've spoken to and to whom this particular bill will apply, let's run down the types of payroll taxes that the small business person pays. It's tough out there.

People have to pay for unemployment insurance. Yes, that's a federal tax, but they have to pay for that, the types of individuals who are being affected by this legislation. That's $4.30 per $100 of payroll, with a maximum of $1,743.56 per employee.

Then we have Canada pension. That's another deduction, another piece of paper that the small business person has to deal with in trying to stay alive in this province of Ontario. Yes, that's a federal law, a federal tax, but it does affect the small business person we're all trying to keep alive. Yet we're having a great deal of difficulty keeping the small business person alive. That is $2.60 per $100 of payroll, with a maximum of $806 per employee.

Now you've got the employer health tax, which is a provincial tax brought in by the Liberals. That is 1.95%, with no ceiling whatsoever. Then, of course, we've got the workers' compensation deduction, which is 0.2% to 20.15%, depending on the business, and that's to a maximum of $53,900. That is another subject, which the government has a commission on that is probably doomed to failure, but I wish them well. Certainly that's a concern to the small business person, these various deductions. Then there's a tax on insurance of 1%.

I don't know how many of you people know small business people. Many of you may be small business people. But you have to have a bookkeeper to handle all this stuff. It's impossible, unless you spend hours at night—many of these people have to, because they run their business during the day; they can't afford any other staff—to fill out all the paperwork.

The paperwork, the accounting that goes on for all of these funny forms that have to be prepared, not only for the federal government but for the provincial government, is driving people crazy. Yet here's another series of paperwork and another series of bureaucracy that's being added to these people. There's the cost of accounting that is being added to the small self-employed individuals as a result of this bill.

Payroll taxes cumulatively, all of those taxes I've listed, add an average of 11% to 12% to the cost of each Ontario employer's payroll. Mandatory vacation, vacation pay, push the government-mandated costs to 18% to 19% of payroll. It's tough to do business in Ontario.

To challenge some of the speakers from the government who talked about all the new business that's coming to this province, I'll tell you that if you're coming to this province and you're from another province or if you're from out of North America or if you're from the United States, people are going to look at all these things. People are going to look at the bureaucracy and the tax system and what it has to be to operate, particularly a business such as this, and they're not going to be pleased, and they're not pleased. I submit that the response the member who responded to the member for Mississauga West gave isn't accurate, because that isn't what the statistics are revealing. There is a major problem.

Then you've got to collect all this stuff. You've got to collect the GST and you've got to collect the PST, so there are all kinds of things that the small employer has to look at. There's licensing and there's health and safety and there's pay equity and employment equity. It's bureaucracy. We're sinking. This province, this country in many cases but particularly this province, is sinking in paper, just paper, let alone the tax that they have to put up with to operate.

I would like to refer to, and I believe this has been referred to in the past, submissions that have been put forward by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. This is a report that was prepared on January 31, 1994. It was prepared in response to the Fair Tax Commission and in anticipation of the 1994 budget. There are a number of sections that if you haven't referred to it I'd get a copy of this, because it doesn't deal just with employer health tax; it deals with a number of taxes and the effect that has in operating this place of Ontario.

They spent some time with respect to health tax. I'm going to ask the Speaker's indulgence to read some of the submissions that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business made because I think they're noteworthy to put into the record.

"Payroll Taxes"—this is on page 2 of the report—"Ontario's excessively high workers' compensation payroll taxes are very much part of the overall tax load which is punishing small businesses and acting as a disincentive to employment."

The Fair Tax Commission's view, that there may be room to increase payroll taxes in Ontario: They simply don't accept that. "In this province, a very heavy load of profit-insensitive local taxes is heaped on payroll taxes"—all of which I have tried to summarize—"which together outweigh the combined burden in competing jurisdictions."

That's what we need to look at. What are we doing? Are we making Ontario a competitive place to do business? Does it pay us to do business in this province, if we look around us? It's tough. We're in an international scene, yet we now find that it's really more and more tough; it's another notch in the gun that's pointing to the head of the small business person.

The report goes on: "When income and capital taxes and commodity taxes are added, total tax burden in Ontario is considerably worse than in many nearby competing jurisdictions."

There's one paragraph which really caught my eye which I'd like to read to the House, on page 3:

"The FTC's recommendation of a new method of calculating remuneration for EHT purposes of owner-managers of private corporations and self-employed individuals is highly theoretical and would appear (without knowing its precise impact on the affected people) to be even worse than the existing approach."

I haven't heard any comments, from the members on the government side or from the Finance department in their press releases that they've put out with respect to this legislation, dealing with the impact on the very people they're trying to affect, the impact on small business.

Hopefully, when you put a tax forward—we have learned the lesson with you-brew.

Mr Klopp: You-brew tax that has been cut in half.

Mr Tilson: The member says you-brew, the tax that has been now cut in half by the Treasurer which—he's cutting his losses, because he knows there are a number of businesses that have gone out of business as a result of that tax which is being collected.

My assumption is that he didn't look at all that. He didn't look at the effect on a struggling new business that was coming forward: the you-brew industry. He didn't look at all that, he just plowed ahead and he said: "We've got to get some money from somewhere. Let's tax these people."

The same goes with respect to this. It's another way of getting money, but what is the impact? What is the real impact with respect to the small business person who's trying to stay alive?

Mr Klopp: It's part of the GST that is cut in—GST does harm to small business.

Mr Tilson: I'm not denying that the various tax structures—the member talks about GST and good for him. That's a good answer from the government; they use it all the time. You've got to look at what you've been doing in your province, in this province of Ontario, and the unbelievable amount of taxes that you've been putting on this province, combined with the Liberals; it's an astronomical amount in the last decade. The leader talks about the lost decade of NDP and Liberal policies and this is another example of the sinking of the small business person.

They go on in this report to say:

"If the government intends to pursue levies on individuals to help pay for health care, then in lieu of the payroll tax it should do so for all health care users, not just self-employed people and owner-managers of corporations."

Hopefully, in government, we will be fair; we will be fair to the people of Ontario. I can remember governments in the past, NDP governments in the past—the former federal leader, David Lewis, talking about the corporate welfare bums and all the play he got on that and talking about people who are not paying their share. That was his alleged submission on a group in society that was not paying its share of the expenses of operating this province.

The difficulty with this legislation is we are now creating a new group of people who are not going to be paying for their share of a very expensive and a very nebulous type of operation: our health care system.

I hope the government members read this report. On page 13 there's a whole section on payroll taxes which goes on to about page 17. They have examined this whole topic and have studied, made surveys of their own, because the government certainly hasn't looked at it. The government certainly hasn't studied the effect of this tax on the small business person in this province.

The report says on page 13:

"Payroll taxes encompass all compulsory taxes imposed by payroll by different levels of government and their agencies. Voluntary benefits to employee groups such as life insurance and extended health insurance are properly excluded."

I don't think they've analysed this. You look at some taxes that are excluded, some taxes that are included. Surely we've got a system in this place as to how we're going to tax the people of Ontario and there doesn't seem to be any system. It's a willy-nilly tax grab. The example with respect to cigarettes shows how something got out of control, and there's the whole issue of the underground economy.

Who's going to be paying for the health services in the underground economy, that whole group of people? From the government's perspective, they don't even exist. They're not paying any taxes. They're not doing anything. They're operating out there. Who is going to be paying for their health services?

The people in this bill is one group of people who are going to be paying for those taxes and I don't imagine—the Treasurer has at different times stood up and talked about what his estimates are of the underground economy, and I don't think the estimates he's given with respect to the cost of health services have truly been calculated with respect to the effect of the underground economy on our health services.

The report goes on to say: "There is some evidence that group benefits have been downgraded or dismantled owing to the imposition of a provincial sales tax in the 1993 budget. Where this hasn't happened, the provincial sales tax impacts similarly to payroll tax, being another fixed charge related to profitability."

I know this goes on to another bill, Madam Speaker, Bill 138 I think it is, but they're all related.

The provincial sales tax on insurance is roughly equivalent to a payroll tax of 1%.

That's where these figures came as to the overall effect on a small business person that cumulatively, payroll taxes add, on average, 11% to 12% to the cost of each employer's payroll. That's a heck of a bite for small business people who are trying to stay alive, trying to pay their mortgage payments, trying to send their young people to university, trying to do all kinds of things with a recession and all the difficulties that we're all involved in. Yet the answer of this government is to tax the small business person. That's their answer.

I indicated that, cumulatively, the payroll taxes add, on average, 11% to 12% to the cost of each Ontario employer's payroll. Mandatory vacation and statutory holiday pay push the government-mandated costs to a very significant 18% to 19% of payroll, and the provincial sales tax on group insurance plans pushed the cost to nearly 20%.

Now, I know, Madam Speaker, that I'm not talking directly about the employer health tax, but you have to look at all these other taxes. It's part of the puzzle that's been created by this government, the puzzle that's having such a dastardly effect on the workings of this government.

I'd like to read all of the report verbatim, but that's probably not allowed so I'm not going to. I'm going to recommend to you that you do read this if you haven't.

They continue at page 14:

"It is a bald fact that payroll taxes are not neutral in their impact on firms in various circumstances. These taxes bear more heavily on businesses which have a larger employment component in their activities, that is, greater labour intensity. Worse, payroll taxes bear no relationship to a firm's profitability."

If I try to leave any message as a result of the one half-hour that I'm allowed to speak on this, it's that point, and I will repeat it again: Payroll taxes bear no relationship to a firm's profitability. You could be on the verge of bankruptcy and you have to pay this stuff. You're trying to stay alive. Is that fair? We're trying to encourage businesses who employ people to stay alive, and yet we're taxing them the same as if they're making a large profit, the same as another company that's making a large profit.

This is what the report goes on to say: "Two corporations with identical salary payments pay exactly the same payroll levies, although one may have lost money while the other made profits."

They go on to a table which talks about salaries and wages to total expenses, and I think if you studied this, Madam Speaker and members of the House, you wouldn't want to put this bill forward. You wouldn't want to pass this bill. It's unfair.

The data put forward in this study by this group of business people prove that payroll taxes are highly regressive. The ratio of payroll taxes to taxable income decreases as the size of firm increases. "In the services sector the small firm ratio of 0.61% shrinks to 0.25% for large firms." It's not a fair bill. It's not fair to the people of this province. It's not fair to the small business person.

Think back to David Lewis making his talk about the corporate welfare bum. His theory was that there's a certain group of people who aren't paying taxes and they are living off the rest of us. I'm not suggesting that there are certain people that are living off the rest of us; what I am saying is that this tax is unfair and that certain people are taxed more than others. Some people aren't even paying anything, some people who can well afford it. Is that how we should be paying for the health services in this province? Is that the answer? I think not.

"The manufacturing sector presents similar results, with mid-size firms even worse off. These data show that small and medium-size businesses, because they are more labour-intensive and generally less profitable, are heavily penalized by payroll taxes. Without question, payroll taxes are a deterrent both to new job creation and to firms maintaining jobs through recessionary periods."

This report was made after the bill was introduced, which I think was in December 1993. I could stand to be corrected, but it was made after. The government had an opportunity and they've taken all this time to proceed with it. It's ironic that this bill is being debated literally a couple of weeks before the new budget is coming in. I think May 5 is the date of the new budget, and it's ironic that you haven't got a very good mood in this province when you start hearing about this legislation.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr Tilson: Madam Speaker, my time has expired, and I thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for your contribution. Now we have time for questions or comments to the member for Dufferin-Peel.

Mr O'Connor: I appreciate having an opportunity to speak to my colleague from Dufferin-Peel's comments. He spoke to the bill quite reasonably, though I think maybe didn't talk about some of the wonderful things about our health care program.

I know that it's easy to complain about it, that it isn't the best and you're not spending enough money, but this week is Organ Donor Awareness Week, and later on today I'm actually going to have an opportunity of touring the Eye Bank of Canada.

What the member has said about how bad our system is, he hasn't recognized some of the good in our system. For example, in some of the notes that I've received to prepare me to head over there for this visit today, I found out that in Ontario, over the period of a month, over 200 donations arrive at the Eye Bank, and the cost of the transplant is around $300. It's covered by OHIP.

I think that's a good investment, an investment in people. People are going to be able to see again as a result of this. If we were in the United States, the same thing would cost about $1,300, so while the member complains about what it costs for our health care system, he doesn't recognize that we do have an awful lot of wonderful things that are part of that entire system.

I guess if you just look at the overall picture, you say it's all bad without recognizing a lot of successes, a lot of positive things, and a lot of cost advantages as to why people invest in Ontario.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I enjoyed very much the remarks of the previous speaker. I know that he didn't have time to mention the people at Linhaven Nursing Home, and the Speaker herself visited Dorchester Manor last weekend.

How I relate this to the bill and the member's remarks is that if people were assured that the funding from this tax were going to provide the kinds of services that you and I would like to see, everyone in this House would like to see, in nursing homes such as Linhaven in St Catharines, then they would be more inclined to be agreeable to legislation of this kind. But of course we can't be assured of that.

If it were the case, however, I think we know that homes such as Linhaven where there are Alzheimer's patients and other patients who have some rather severe problems which require some constant and very extensive care, those people need these funds, and we're all getting letters from them. We've been asked to visit the various nursing homes that have encountered this particular problem, and I would like to see the appropriate funding going to places such as Linhaven so that the very dedicated staff that is there could, once again, provide the kind of service that they did in the past to people who require that service. It's extremely difficult for family members particularly to see their loved ones go through some rather difficult stages in life and not have the kind of service they used to have in years gone by.

The appropriate funding is needed. This bill is probably not the particular vehicle to use to derive that funding. They would hope that the government would establish priorities, take it from less essential areas of endeavour and place that funding in nursing homes, such as Linhaven, to serve the very vulnerable people who are residents there, in many cases.

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I am delighted to rise to compliment the member for Dufferin-Peel. The member for Dufferin-Peel has a great deal of common sense when he talks about taxes, when he talks about jobs, employment, when he talks about our economy. He knows what it takes to get this economy going, the types of measures that it takes to get the economy going.

What is required is more taxpayers, not more taxes. The people of the province of Ontario have suffered through $7.6 billion in new or increased taxes since 1985 through Liberal governments and through NDP government. The people of the province of Ontario have seen the average per-capita tax burden increased by 73% during that period of time, from 1985, whereas their per capita personal income has only risen by 53%. If you wonder why you feel poorer now than you did a few years ago, there are the statistics that prove the point. Taxes have risen too quickly.

Interjection.

Mr David Johnson: Yes. The member has pointed out that health is costly: $17 billion, I believe, in terms of cost for health on an annual basis. The employer health tax brings in about $3 billion. But this is not the point in time to increase taxes on the business community and on the self-employed business people. It will not create jobs; it will be a disincentive. We have seen that in the you-brew industry. It's interesting that the government, on the very same day when it recognizes the impact on small business people in the you-brew industry, as the member for Dufferin-Peel has pointed out, imposes taxes on self-employed people. The impact will be the same: Jobs will be lost. It will not help our economy in the province of Ontario.

Mr Robert Frankford (Scarborough East): I always enjoy listening to the well-thought-out contributions of the member for Dufferin-Peel. I would however, on this question of the economy and incentives and disincentives to business, just remind him of the significant benefit we have in this province of a single-payer, tax-funded system. We pay 9.5% of GDP for health. The US pays 14% and provides inadequate coverage. A figure that is commonly quoted means that $800 of an average car is for health costs. It's a significant benefit we have and I wish that the parties across the floor—they may be doing their job to criticize in opposition, but we really have something to be proud of.

This is something which I believe has to come from a tax-based system. I listened with interest to his critique of the type of tax and I think he makes some very reasonable points, but I think the logic would be to move to an income-tax-based system or a progressive-tax-based system. I'd just like to point out to him that Americans are coming here to learn about what we have to offer. There are very respected advocates of a single-payer system.

In the middle of May we are going to have a meeting of the Physicians for a National Health Program, including Dr Himmelstein and Dr Woolhandler, who are, I think, the most respected advocates of a Canadian plan, very well-meaning people, and I would invite the member to come and hear them, along with Dr Julian Tudor Hart, whom I regard as the most influential proponent of a real, effective tax-based system which can easily be less of an expense on the public purse than the 9.5% that we are dealing with in this province right now.

The Acting Speaker: Now the member for Dufferin-Peel has two minutes to respond.

Mr Tilson: I thank the members for responding. The member for Scarborough East made some interesting comments which I'd like to specifically speak of. One is the issue of incentive, I suppose, and he is a doctor.

I look at some of the background material our party had available when the Liberal bill came into existence, and much of those same facts apply still today.

But look at the issue of fairness, and we'll take a doctor, who, with a self-employed income of $400,000, would pay $3,500 in health tax. A corporate executive with $400,000 in income would pay no health tax. An investor living off $400,000—which doesn't take much, when senior citizens particularly sell the home they've lived in since the 1920s—of invested income would pay no health tax. An owner of an incorporated company who paid himself a salary in dividends would pay perhaps as much as half the $3,500, because it's deductible to his corporation.

My point, to the member for Scarborough East, is that this bill is not fair. It gets back to that old principle that we're not all equal. Some people are more equal than others, to use that Orwellian expression, and this bill is an example of that.

There's the other issue which has been mentioned in this House, and that's the incentive. All these companies that have health programs, fitness programs, and spend a lot of money on that, why would they do that now when they're just being added to another tax? Why would they do that? We're trying to keep our people fit so we don't have this terrible burden of health, and this is how we treat them.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for your contribution to the debate. Further debate?

Mr Frankford: I'd just like to have the opportunity to elaborate a little further. I'm slightly confused by that last contribution of the member for Dufferin-Peel, who I thought said that doctors would be taxed and executives wouldn't. I think he has it upside down, because when I was a self-employed practitioner I was exempt from the tax because of being self-employed, because they said this is in fact a payroll tax.

This is an example of what we're trying to address here. As a strong advocate of a tax-based health care system, I feel that that tax must be fair. As I say, we probably should be moving to a more progressive approach.

But let's look at the alternatives. The non-tax-based system is an insurance system in which you are paying premiums and the premiums are fixed per head, so it's in a way a sort of poll tax, except then you get into the terrible situations of ratings, of variations by age, sex and pre-existing conditions, which is what we have in the United States, with dreadful consequences and serious effects on business. This is restricting labour mobility there: People are unwilling to change from one place to another because they've got, for the time being, a particular plan.

Mr Turnbull: There are lots better models than that.

Mr Frankford: But ours is the best model, I would say, except for the possibilities of a more—

Mr Turnbull: Try Switzerland. The Swiss have a better model than we have.

Mr Frankford: No, we have the best. In many ways we have the best, I would respond to the member.

Mr Turnbull: That's not what the Economist said two years ago.

Mr Frankford: The member refers to the Economist, a journal which has absolutely no credibility as far as health insurance goes. And I don't imagine that the member has listened to the alternatives of a fully socialized system where one can get primary care reform, none of which is at all possible in an insurance-based model in terms of this competitive advantage. We are seeing the pathetic efforts of Mr Clinton, who has introduced a sort of insurance-based scheme with the payroll tax which the opposition is attacking, and it's not going to work. I believe a tax-based system is inevitable, and I think it gives the security of funding that is needed.

As I say, I think the critiques of a payroll tax are well taken. I would point out, for those who think that Ontario is the worst place, that our payroll tax rate is less than Quebec, but we don't hear them going on about how that is supposedly to our competitive advantage. We just see this shotgun approach to criticism, that somehow we are the worst.

I accept a lot of suggestions for reform. I think we should have a much better system, with a system of primary care, which is quite impossible under the insurance model which is favoured by the people who don't understand what they're talking about, like the writers for the Economist. But there are people of goodwill and sound analysis, such as Himmelstein and Woolhandler, whose contributions you can see very frequently in the New York Times and whose suggestions are standing up. I believe that what they are offering for a universal tax-based plan is the only alternative which will come through.

I will not take any more time, but I think this is a useful debate for putting forward our ideas, for the opposition to try to critique a universal tax-based plan. The more extreme member for York Mills, who obviously will only favour an insurance model, is not here at the moment, and I imagine ideologues like him are never going to be convinced.

But I clearly believe that with a more socialized, tax-based system we will be able to reduce our level of expenditure by one percentage point of GDP, which, I would remind you, Madam Speaker, and all members, is something we very much need as a solution to our deficit problems.

The Acting Speaker: Are there questions or comments to the member?

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): A comment, yes. I appreciate the member's comments because we are dealing with how we fund—frankly, not how we fund health care but how we fund the province's spending, because while it's called the employer health tax, the fact is it goes into the general revenue.

The emerging issue in health I think is going to be, how are we funding our health system? I'd always had the feeling that it was publicly funded to a huge extent and that that was something that sets us apart as unique from other jurisdictions, certainly unique from the US.

I now find that the amount of money funded publicly on health care is declining as a percentage of the spending and the amount of money that's funded privately on health care is increasing fairly substantially. We are indeed, it would appear, trending more and more towards a US system, and I think it's happening heavily because governments at all levels are under an enormous strain on spending. This government's no different from any other.

We see that now, I gather, roughly 30% of hospital funding is funded privately, and that's growing. We saw that our doctors are looking for an increasing part of their revenue from private funding, for charging companies for the annual medicals and that sort of thing.

The member's comments I think are useful. I'm looking forward, as we go through the health debate, to, where is this government heading on public versus private funding? Certainly right now the legacy is a substantial increase in private funding of health care in the province.

Mr Bradley: I want to discuss as well, because the member for Scarborough East did, the funding of health care and recall, as he would like me to recall, I'm sure, the regressive tax which was in place called the OHIP premium. It was quite regressive because a lot of people who couldn't afford it were forced to pay it; there were certain people in more privileged positions.

First of all, there were those who through their collective agreement that the union had signed on their behalf, perhaps had all of the premium paid. When I was a teacher, for instance, I think two thirds, and maybe by the time I left teaching all of it, was paid, so I was not affected by the premium directly. There were other people who simply had a lot of money and were able to afford a premium, so it wasn't particularly onerous on them.

Where it was onerous was on a number of people who didn't have a collective agreement that called for the paying of the premium by the employer, or people perhaps who found themselves in very difficult circumstances and were still forced to pay all or a portion of the OHIP premium.

I found that to be very regressive. I knew a number of people in that category. I knew a lot of people who were not aware of the OHIP assistance plan that was available or didn't want to be bothered because their circumstances would get better sometimes and worse sometimes economically, and it was difficult for them to deal with the red tape involved in that or the bureaucracy involved in that.

I think a system—I'm not suggesting this bill—which spreads that cost in a different way is superior to the OHIP premium. I recall vividly when Darcy McKeough of a Progressive Conservative government wanted to raise it 37.5% at one time. I'll be interested in the member's comments on that.

The Acting Speaker: Are there further questions or comments? If not, the member for Scarborough East has two minutes to respond.

Mr Frankford: I very much welcome the remarks of the member for St Catharines because this actually leads into another question where I believe there is an inequity or certainly an inefficiency. I compliment the Liberals for having changed to a tax-based system and I think maybe I even had a little bit of influence in that, because I recall, as a member of the Medical Reform Group of Ontario, visiting Mrs Caplan, the minister of the day, and we made that suggestion, which subsequently they put into effect.

One flaw, however: There are people who are not eligible as full citizens—I'm thinking of temporary residents—who would like to participate. At the time they were able to pay a premium and participate on the same basis as everyone else. We have made the decision to exclude them, which I believe is perfectly legitimate under the Canada Health Act, but we're certainly getting complaints about that. I have a letter in front of me from the York international students who I know have had a lot of questions about this. I have actually had a discussion today with them about an alternative.

I would like to see—I'm not blaming the Liberals particularly; I think it's something which only time has shown was an oversight—the option of still having the possibility of paying a premium. As I recall, it was something like $600 for an individual, which in my discussions with student organizations and faculty, they think would be a reasonable way of doing it. It would, of course, have the benefit of not excluding people with pre-existing conditions, which is the real downside of a private system approach.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. Further debate?

Mr Phillips: I'm pleased to continue the debate on this bill which is called Bill 110. I guess for all of us, we all appreciate what the bill is, but it's one of the tax bills that we're dealing with. For those people who may not be familiar with the process that goes on here, taxes are introduced in budgets, they are implemented, and then the law catches up with them eventually and we pass bills that ensure that the actions of the government are legitimized by a bill.

I think everyone should recognize that over the next little while here in the Legislature we'll be dealing with bills that fully implement tax measures that were introduced more than two years ago and we are now just catching up with that process, although the bill we're dealing with I think deals with tax measures in last year's budget. In the next few days we'll be dealing with more bills that implement the Rae government's taxes going back to 1992.

I think the first thing we should reflect on a little bit is that something is happening out in Ontario around taxes. What we've seen from the Rae government is that in its first budget, the 1991 budget, if you flip to the tax changes, the tax increases on page 28, you see that taxes went up $1 billion. What in the world does $1 billion mean? What it means is that the tax level in the province in the first Rae budget went up about 3%; Bob Rae's first budget took taxes up 3%.

In the second budget, which was obviously the 1992 budget, we see again tax measures totalling another $1-billion tax increase. We had another 3% increase in the level of taxation in the province in the 1992 budget.

Then in the 1993 budget which was presented, obviously, essentially a year ago, we saw that the tax level went up not $1 billion, as we saw in the first two years, it actually went up $2 billion. We've now seen three budgets from the Rae government. The fourth, as we know, will be presented here actually two weeks tomorrow at around 4 o'clock.

After three budgets, taxes in the first year went up roughly 3%, in the second year 3% and in the third year an additional 6%. Everybody in the province has faced an increased level in taxation of approximately 12%. By the way, I would add that over that period of time, as I think we all know, income levels have essentially stayed flat. The gross domestic product of the province, the output of the economy—actually, I found this extremely interesting.

This is from the Ministry of Finance, dated March 1994, and what it shows here is that this is the real gross domestic product. This is the measurement of the output of the economy in Ontario. It compares Ontario and the rest of Canada. They've pulled Ontario out and looked at the rest of Canada. You can see what's happened to Ontario: That's the solid line. In 1990 it was obviously running at 100% and then it dipped below 100%, way down in 1991 and has not even yet recovered back up to where it was in 1990. The rest of Canada, when you take Ontario out, has never gotten below the level it was in 1990 and is growing very nicely.

The reason for pointing that out is that something has happened in Ontario, something quite profound. We also saw it, I might say, on the employment front where Ontario has had virtually all the job losses. In the first three months of 1994 in the rest of Canada, outside of Ontario, we've seen about 150,000 more jobs created in the economy. Ontario actually, if you can believe it, has lost 4,000 jobs.

What we've seen are three budgets from Premier Rae. The first budget had a 3% increase in the level of taxation, the second year another 3% and the third year a 6% increase in the level of taxation. At the same time, we've seen the Ontario economy not only stagnate, it actually is lower than it was in 1990. Ontario's economy still is below where it was in 1990. The rest of Canada never declined, never fell below that level, and actually has seen some very good growth, on the job creation front far outstripping Ontario.

One of the things I think we have to analyse and determine the impact of on the economy has been three consecutive years of significant tax increases. I know when you're in opposition it sometimes can be seen as easy to criticize, and obviously you're against tax increases because you don't have to have the responsibility of raising the revenue to pay for the programs. But I hope all of us can appreciate that these three years of tax increases have coincided with virtually no growth in the economy.

I would add also, if you can believe this, and it's true and you can check it out, that we've seen, as I said before, tax levels increasing. The expectation was that it would result in tax revenue growth: $1 billion, $1 billion, $2 billion. What has actually happened? What has actually happened to the tax revenue over that period of time? Tax revenue has actually dropped.

If you go back to the revenue that the province received in taxation before these tax increases and you look at 1990-91, tax revenue in the province was $33.6 billion. We now have the latest estimate from the government on tax revenue for 1993-94, the year that just ended three weeks ago. What was tax revenue? It was $31.2 billion. I'll just repeat those numbers because it surely is for all of us a signal: 1990-91, tax revenue in the province, $33.6 billion. Three years of huge tax increases designed to generate more tax revenue, theoretically almost $4 billion more tax revenue, and what has actually happened is the tax revenue has declined by almost $2.5 billion.

One cannot blame all of that on tax increases. We understand the slow economy, low inflation. And the government did do some things. They moved from what used to be a property tax expenditure program, where seniors got a $500-a-year credit against their property tax. That used to be an expenditure program. It moved to what's called a tax credit program, where it comes off the tax payable. That was, I think, worth $500 million. But none the less, it does not change the fundamental: that we have increased tax levels dramatically in the province and tax revenues have actually declined, and I think they've declined dramatically.

You often hear people talk about, "Well, you're going to hit a tax wall." You finally reach the point where people just simply find a way to avoid paying it, for two reasons. One is that they are not working or their business isn't generating profit, or they find a way to avoid it or evade it. Avoid is quite legal, but people are spending, there's no doubt, a lot of time finding ways to avoid paying taxes, and there's no doubt people are evading taxes.

I go through all of this because it's quite fundamental to what we're trying to do around here. Have we collectively reached agreement that the province is taxed out? How could it be that you could raise tax levels to the tune of, as I say, almost $4 billion and have tax revenue drop $2.5 billion? What is happening?

The members will recall that one of our legislative committees looked at the underground economy. I personally, after having sat on that committee, am of the opinion and personally satisfied that the underground economy is large and growing.

It was just last week, I think, that Statistics Canada published a report that said it's not that big, that it's perhaps 3% of the economy. I believe it is closer to 8% or 9% or 10% of the economy, and in some sectors of our economy, like home renovations, it is huge.

That is, in my opinion, one of the consequences of the tax increases we've seen, although I must say that in our study the most common tax that was talked about was the GST. There were many that felt that was the catalyst; that there always was an underground economy, it seemed to be growing fairly steadily, the GST came in and then it seemed to grow quite dramatically.

I think I've said before in the Legislature that I've now had an opportunity to be on two talk shows where people phone in and talk about the underground economy. I was shocked, but perhaps I shouldn't have been surprised. I think every call that came in was from someone who said: "I am participating in the underground economy, and I'm proud of it. I'm going to keep doing it. I'm teaching you people a lesson, you politicians that have done this to us."

I raise all of that because I do think we are dealing with a bill that is simply one of a series of bills that are designed to implement a policy where we have for three straight years seen dramatic increases in the tax level here in the province of Ontario. As the tax levels have increased, tax revenue has actually decreased.

Many of the members may be aware that our caucus, the Liberal caucus, spent January, February and March travelling around the province getting ideas about how jobs can be created in the province. I will say to the Legislature that the conclusion of that report was that the employment situation in this province is a state of emergency. I will make, I guess, a pitch to the Legislature to at least consider that it is a state of emergency. Our caucus has determined that it is.

I think one of the problems we're going to run into on seeing jobs created in the province is that there will be no one event that will force us into dramatic action around jobs. There won't be any single event. In my opinion, there won't be 50,000 people that march on the Legislature; maybe there should be. Maybe there should be 50,000 unemployed young people or unemployed people who march on the Legislature. But I don't think that's going to happen. There will not be any one single event.

Governments that are in power have a natural vested interest in saying, "Well, things are going to get better, so what are you worried about?" In fact, regarding the April unemployment numbers that came out, I heard the Premier saying: "Well, we're right on track. Things are just fine. We're heading in the right direction."

I say to the members that if you look at the numbers, I am shocked at the numbers, all the numbers. I will say to the members that the released numbers indicate approximately a 20% unemployment rate among our young people. If you look behind the numbers at the number of young people that have simply dropped out of the labour market, the real number is much closer to one out of three. I think if you really look at the numbers, one out of three of our young people, 15 to 24, can't find work right now.

Not finding work is not unique to our young people. As I say, we've got literally record numbers of people out of work. The more shocking number to me was the fact that we actually have 4,000 fewer jobs in the province in the first quarter of 1994 than we did in the first quarter of 1993.

But as I say, because governments always have a vested interest in saying, "Well, we've got our plans in order. Things are getting better. Don't you worry," there is not going to be that event that will galvanize the energy that we believe, in our caucus, is needed to solve the problem.

The reason I'm going through all of that is that as we travelled the province looking for how we are going to see significant numbers of jobs created in this province, the conclusion of the task force was that we're going to have to launch an all-out war on it. In our opinion, we're going to have to find a way that Ontario becomes clearly seen as the leading economy in North America.

A key goal of that—because, in my opinion, there's no benefit in being the leading economy unless we benefit from that—is to see the level of unemployment decline dramatically and reach approximately 6% in five years. Right now, what's predicted? The level of unemployment will stay well above 9% for as long as we can see.

What's going to be required to get there? We laid out a five-point plan. One of them is that we have to let the economy breathe. Part of doing that, part of helping our job creating sectors to do that, we concluded, is that we truly do need to look at reducing the level of taxation.

I spent a lot of time on this task force looking at that recommendation, because the public is probably pretty cynical about politicians who promise to actually reduce taxation. To be promising tax reductions when we are faced with a significant deficit and real spending challenges—people are saying: "Wait a minute. Isn't our higher priority to reduce the debt and deficit?"

But we concluded in our study that if we don't find a way to let our economy breathe, let our job creating sectors get an opportunity to compete more effectively, we aren't going to see the jobs created that we need, we're not going to see the economic growth created that we need, and we are going to continue to wallow in high unemployment and wallow in very heavy costs of dealing with the symptoms of unemployment.

If we could find a way to get the economy moving faster and to see more jobs created, I guarantee you, first we would see more revenue come in, and second we would see opportunities for people to move off social assistance and back into the workplace. We concluded, and the recommendation is, that we reduce the level of taxation by 1% a year for five years. To do that, if you take taxes down 1%, it means, theoretically, tax revenue drops by $330 million, roughly. That's 1% of $33 billion of tax revenue.

The cynics will say, "Where in the world are you going to find $330 million?" Our assessment was that a signal that taxes are actually coming down, along with doing a lot of other things we talk about there, we felt could be helpful to getting the economy growing by at least 0.5% more of what they call GDP, gross domestic product. If we were to do that, our estimate is that the revenues as a result of that increased growth could be $200 million to $220 million.

The second thing we felt was that if we could see 30,000 more jobs a year created—and this is our goal, this is the Liberal caucus's goal and hopefully it is the legislative goal—we think many of those people would be people who, right now, require social assistance, who can't find a job and have obligations. If we could do that—30,000 more jobs a year—we felt social assistance costs could be reduced by perhaps 2%. You probably all know the numbers on social assistance and what not, but as we looked at it, we felt perhaps 2%.

If we do those two things, we can see the economy growing better, we hope by 0.5%, and 30,000 jobs created, and we believe we could offset a 1% reduction in the level of taxation a year.

We also believe that's an important, almost an essential, signal for us to send to restore public confidence and business confidence in Ontario. We've got a large number of other recommendations in our report around how we substantially make it easier to do business in the province by making it easier to deal with our paperwork and regulatory burden; how, as the report says, in many respects we are trying to deal in a 1990s economy with 1960s-type government apparatus.

We say in our report that workers' compensation and unemployment insurance, social assistance, were all born as good ideas, all were well intentioned, but they have not kept pace with a change where we now are seeing not

3% and 4% unemployment, as we did in the 1960s and in the 1950s, but are now seeing unemployment rates that are reported at 11%, but, as the government itself said in last year's budget when it outlined what it regarded as the real unemployment rate, and I thought that was a useful chart in the budget, "There's the reported unemployment rate. The real unemployment rate is running closer to 14%." All the members would recall that.

So we need to find ways in which we, to use the jargon of the day, reinvent or redesign or re-engineer those programs. We need to also, I might say, find a way that our job creating sectors have better access to capital.

The reason I'm spending the time on this is that there was no doubt, as we did our work around the province, that we have knocked the confidence out of our job creating sector. Individuals are very confident about their own abilities, very confident about their ability to compete globally.

In fact, I would say there's been an enormous feeling in Ontario that individuals know and feel they can take on the world—our export business is booming, as we all know—but they have very little confidence in the ability of the Ontario government to set the climate they're going to feel good and comfortable about building their business in.

That's what leads us to this tax bill today. This is one of a series of bills—in the next few days we'll be dealing with several others—all designed to increase the level of taxation and all designed to finalize the government's plans.

It's ironic, almost—it is ironic, not almost—that there's a bill that deals with what's called the you-brew industry, the industry that brews beer in small premises, that in the budget the tax went way up and put, I gather, at least 400 people out of work—the member shakes his head, but I think that's the estimate we've received, 400 people out of work—and drove the revenue down; the province got dramatically less revenue.

We put entrepreneurs, many who had invested their life savings, at risk, many of whom went bankrupt, many of whom lost their jobs, many of whom lost their life savings, and before we can even pass the bill—for anyone's information, we still haven't even passed the bill that would incorporate that—the government announced an amendment to the bill to reduce the taxes.

The point is that in one year, with one tax, we essentially put hundreds of people out of work, dozens of entrepreneurs out of business, and before the bill was even debated in the House we're back down to quite a different number.

But the damage has been done, and in a broader sense I think the damage is being done on the tax front with, as I said before, tax increases of roughly $4 billion.

We are suggesting that it is a time for reflecting on these tax increases and challenging ourselves why in the world we are continuing to increase taxes at a time when I think we've proven to ourselves that we've hit the wall, that increased taxes actually seem, based on the evidence, to be yielding less revenue.

In the specific one we're talking about here, we're not, in my opinion, talking about how we fund health care. It's called the employer health tax. It's not about how we fund health care. In fact, the employer health tax raises I think about $3 billion of about $25 billion of health spending in the province. We're talking about how we raise more taxes.

Actually, it was the Liberal government that brought the employer health tax in to replace the OHIP premium. I understand that, and I am one of those who says you must learn from the past.

Mr Derek Fletcher (Guelph): Learn from your mistakes.

Mr Phillips: Learn from the past. I'm not one who defends the action of previous regimes, whatever stripe they are, if we can learn and do better from that.

Mr Fletcher: We learned from you.

Mr Phillips: The member across is heckling. The people of Ontario should appreciate that this is the government that, as it enters its fifth year of office, one out of three young people in this province are out of work. If there's anything you should be ashamed of, totally ashamed of, it's that.

Mr Fletcher: It's not us.

Mr Phillips: He says it's not true. It is true.

Mr Fletcher: I said it's not us.

Mr Phillips: He says, "It's not us." It is you, and if you don't understand that, you're making a big mistake.

I now am slightly energized by the member's comments, because your legacy will be five years of misery. The social assistance case load is still growing. You promised the unemployment rate would be dropping. It isn't dropping. You promised there would be more jobs. We are losing jobs. The rest of Canada sees 150,000 more jobs. We're losing jobs. You talk about construction jobs. There's never been as many people out of work as there are now in construction.

I remember clearly September 1991. Bob Rae came in here and said: "Jobs are my number one priority. I'm going to challenge the Legislature." He said it was his number one priority, and I actually believed him.

What's happened? Every single month he talks about jobs being his number one priority and that's where he's going to devote his energies and attention, and he's failing. We have a debate in the Legislature, and the members of the NDP, maybe because they're so embarrassed about the numbers, choose to heckle rather than attempt to find the solutions.

As I say, the Premier—I keep his speeches. He knows people care about jobs, so he says it's his number one issue. I can remember to this day September 1991, the day the Legislature came back after the summer break, and him saying, "That's going to be our number one priority." What are the results?

I would say that one of the key contributing factors in that has been, now that we have seen three straight budgets from Bob Rae, dramatic tax increases, dramatic increases in people out of work, and in my opinion, no plan to solve it, no plan for our young people to have a future and a hope, no plan for all our older workers who are out of work, nothing but rhetoric about Bob Rae caring about jobs, and in my opinion, doing very little.

The Acting Speaker: Now we have time for questions or comments.

Mr Turnbull: I must admit I always enjoy listening to my colleague from Scarborough, and I think what he has had to say today is, as usual, very good, solid debate speaking to the important issues.

I am a little concerned that the government of which he was a minister—he seems to have amnesia about the damage it did to the economy. They indeed introduced the employer health tax. They seem to have forgotten about that. No doubt he will get back to me on that issue.

The fact is that the impact of the employer health tax on employment has been profound. We had it introduced by that government just at the time we were going into a recession which, in fairness to the previous government, I don't think anybody could have contemplated would have been as severe as it was. Nevertheless, they introduced this going into a recession, in full knowledge that the press and business groups had suggested that it would have an impact on jobs. But they plowed ahead. It was a wonderful election issue because they were able to go to the electorate and say, "Look, we've made your health costs zero."

It didn't work for them, but in the meantime the present government has taken over legislation which it believes it's enhancing. They believe they're making it fairer. They believe they're changing the legislation to make it a more reasonable bill. I think they're wrong, but nevertheless, the burden for this bill lies clearly with the Liberals. While it was an excellent debate by my colleague—I always enjoy what he brings to a debate—I really believe that he should reflect on the damage they did to the economy.

Mr Frankford: I note with interest the member for Scarborough-Agincourt saying that this is not really an employer health tax, that it is a payroll tax, that it's called an employer health tax but it doesn't pay for health costs and that no government has increased it in proportion to the amount of the health costs.

It's a payroll tax. Interestingly, and people keep on neglecting to say this, if there is something cosmetic about it, it is that it is lower than in other jurisdictions. It is lower than in Quebec. Why don't we advertise it as such? I believe it is substantially lower than what Mr Clinton has proposed for the US, although it's very hard to gather what they're saying there and clearly his proposal is going to fall apart.

They will have to move to take things seriously, to become a single-payer plan almost certainly, although they may have to go through a considerable amount of grief as they try to accommodate all the so-called experts, the people who write for the op-ed page of the New York Times, the insurance companies and all the other people who feel that they somehow create health care, which is actually made by health providers, and in many cases by consumers themselves if they are properly trained to do it.

All of which explains why our system is so much cheaper and efficient and, as Himmelstein and Woolhandler have pointed out several times, our administrative costs are astoundingly smaller. They could pay for their 30 million uninsured by the administrative costs.

We really have to look positively at what we have and look at our competitive advantages.

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): I too want to join my colleague in indicating that I have a great deal of respect for the contributions the member for Scarborough-Agincourt makes on a regular basis in respect to financial issues facing the Ontario government, but I think he has a problem, a cross to bear, if you will, in respect to the question of credibility related to the five years of the Peterson Liberal government in the province of Ontario: 33 tax increases.

I grant you, the member was a member of the cabinet, but a relatively new member, a junior member of cabinet, and I suppose somewhat reluctant to perhaps express his views. I'm not sure; he may want to comment on that. But we know that things happened and we know that a payroll tax certainly came into place in terms of the health care costs to the province.

We know there was significant contempt shown for the people of Ontario in the 1990 election by calling an early election and then a fudging of the figures, when we were told we were going to have a surplus. Indeed, when the NDP assumed power, they found out that it was a significant deficit situation, which I'm sure the Liberal government of the day was well aware of, and that certainly was a significant factor in them calling an early election.

They also raised WCB benefit levels, contributing to the ongoing growth of the unfunded liability. The biggest problem was the spending binge that the Liberals went on in their five years in office, increasing the spending in the province of Ontario I think from somewhere around $40 billion or $41 billion total expenditures when the Conservatives left office to in excess of $50 billion when the Liberals left office.

I think the biggest problem that we face now is the spending commitments made by the Liberal government which this government, the NDP government, has been tied into and can't come to grips with when it faces significant revenue shortfalls.

The Acting Speaker: We have time for one more question or comment to the member. If not, the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has two minutes to reply.

Mr Phillips: I appreciate the member for Leeds-Grenville's comments. I want to get on the record some facts, and then I'd welcome any viewers to call my office and I'll send a copy of this. I'm always reluctant to get into who did what to who, but I would say this about the Conservatives, and he was a member of the cabinet then. Here's what the Provincial Auditor had to say about the Conservatives. "Ontario's had only one surplus in the last 20 years. That was the year ending March 31, 1990." What the auditor is saying, for all of the viewers, is the Conservatives for 15 straight years never, ever ran a surplus—the famous Darcy McKeough and all the great financial managers, and the member was a member of the cabinet. That's not me speaking. That's the Provincial Auditor.

I know my Reform friends, when I tell them, say: "Say it ain't so. You mean Mike Harris and the Conservatives ran 15 straight years of deficits in good times and bad times?" As I say, my friends in the Reform say: "Mike Harris was part of a party that never balanced the budget for 15 straight years? It can't be true."

The second thing the member talks about is spending. Spending increases under the Conservatives for the last five years of their regime went up 11.3%, and the average deficit was $2.7 billion, well above the five years of the Liberals.

I never say the Liberals ran it perfectly, but I'd never put my chin out, as the member for Leeds-Grenville did, when the facts indicate, firstly, that the last five years they were around they ran a deficit well above anything the Liberals did. The Liberals balanced the budget.

The final thing I would say, anybody who wants the explanation on the $3-billion deficit, the auditor has it here, phone my office tomorrow. I'd love to hear from you.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate? The member for York Mills has the floor.

Mr Turnbull: I cannot imagine a better segue to what I'm about to say. Let us just deal with the facts, and I agree with my colleague the member for Scarborough-Agincourt that there was only one balanced budget in the last 20 years. It's now I guess some 23 years. Let's be very clear. Every single politician who has been associated with that should hang their heads in shame, irrespective of which party they're in. But let me dissect—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Turnbull: Can you get this rabble under control, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker: Order. Members come to order.

Mr Turnbull: I do hope that my colleague the member for Scarborough-Agincourt will wait just to hear what I have to say because I don't want to miss his response to this.

Mr Turnbull: The facts are that the only time the Liberals balanced their budget was 1989. Let's examine that. Their budget for that year called for a deficit, but instead they showed a surplus. They had indicated in their budget documents that they were going to have a $550-million deficit. There was an unusual transfer of funds from the federal government because the economy was booming so much that they got an unanticipated $888 million from the federal government.

You don't have to be quick with math on this. Simply take away from that $888-million unusual transfer, unanticipated transfer, the $550-million deficit that they had projected and you would come up with a number that they should have had: a surplus of $338 million, which they could have paid against the debt.

But guess what? They only had a $90-million surplus. So, in other words, the Liberal government that is so proud of having balanced the budget once in its five years did it by fluke. Had they not been bailed out by this unanticipated transfer, they would have in fact been further in the hole than their budgeted $550-million deficit.

Let's move to the next year, 1990. My friends across the floor on the NDP benches will remember 1990; I certainly do. As we went on to the hustings, we were told that we were going to have another balanced budget, and they were going to be so fiscally responsible. Much to the chagrin of the NDP—and frankly, we told them during the election and we told the Liberals that this was the case, that they weren't going to have a balanced budget; we said that their numbers were cooked—what happened was that when the government of the day got in, it found that in fact there was a deficit of some $2.5 billion; not a surplus, but a deficit.

This is the kind of fiscal game-playing that we've got to stop. Every single person who is involved with politics has got to wake up to the fact that as we have been borrowing in the past $1 billion a month, and with a population of 10 million that means we have been borrowing $100 for every man, woman and child per month under this present government, we are off the tracks. I've spoken about that many times before.

All I wanted to do was point out the inaccuracies of the Liberals' memory as to what happened during their term in office. David Peterson and Lyn McLeod and Bob Nixon, the Treasurer at the time, brought in the employer health tax. The employer health tax was to replace the OHIP fees. Approximately 70% of all employers at the time were paying the OHIP premiums for the employees, but there were a number of small businesses that weren't paying that. We also had the situation that municipalities and school boards and hospitals sometimes were only paying part of the fee. So there was an increase in the cost to those municipal transfer agencies—which cost the taxpayer, because ultimately the taxpayer pays for all of these things—of $75 million in extra costs in the first year. That was a cost which was transferred by the Liberal government to municipalities, to hospitals and to school boards.

We know that the kinds of tax grabs the Liberals got involved in during their term in office led to the demise of their government and there was a great reaction from it. Let me read just briefly from a clipping from the time before, 1989, when the Liberals were just about to bring in the employer health tax. It was written by Richard Mackie of the Globe and Mail. It states:

"The Ontario Liberal government intends to ignore intense opposition and proceed with a controversial tax plan that would hit the province's businesses with what critics charge is a system of double taxation. The proposed new tax, the employer health levy, would be a payroll tax to replace premiums for the Ontario health insurance plan, 70% of which are already paid by employers.

"The officials in the treasury ministry say that the Liberal government has no plans to change the tax despite lobbying efforts directed at Treasurer Robert Nixon and Industry, Trade and Technology minister Monte Kwinter."

At the time, they said it wasn't going to impact businesses. Here we are three years later—and by no means could I suggest that that measure alone is responsible for what happened in this province. We are indeed, as the government of the day likes to proclaim so often, in a worldwide recession. It's very interesting. Until they started getting into trouble politically—

The Acting Speaker: I would ask members to keep their conversation level down. The member may continue.

Mr Turnbull: The government has never accepted any responsibility for this. It's always outside sources. But indeed they took over some of the seeds of destruction of the Ontario economy. At a time when the world was going into a recession, they took over such tax grabs as the employer health tax, a tax which has disproportionately hit smaller businesses. Once again, this government is now going back to the trough and saying: "Gee, maybe there's a little more money in the trough. Let's suck it up."

We have had a task force going around the province—by "we," that is the Ontario provincial party and the caucus—examining problems that small businesses are having. It's titled the Mike Harris Task Force on Cutting Red Tape and Growing Small Business, and we are talking about all of the burdens on business and why they're not creating jobs. In addition to the actual task force, we've sent a survey out to 19,500 businesses, and it generated an unusually large response. For anybody who is familiar with the response rate from postal surveys like this, we had a 9.7% return, which is a very good response rate.

Over half the respondents represented firms which employed 10 or fewer people, 36.7% employed less than five workers, and 22.5% had between five and 10 workers. Overwhelmingly, the bulk of the people who were responding represented the small and medium-sized sector.

It's very interesting to note that when asked which of the major provincial taxes had the greatest negative impact on their ability or willingness to create jobs, 56.9% of the responses tagged payroll taxes as the primary culprit, well above the next, which was the 17.1% who pointed to the corporate income tax or the 13.4% who identified PST—the number one block to creating jobs or maintaining jobs in small businesses.

When business people were asked to rate the problems they had encountered in starting and running their businesses, payroll taxes and dealing with government paperwork emerged as the two items most frequently ranked as a major problem by respondents. Payroll taxes were identified as a major problem by 61.8% of respondents, while dealing with government paperwork was given a rating by 56.6%. In addition, dealing with government paperwork was the least likely to be identified as no problem at all by respondents. Only 9.9% of respondents said that dealing with government paperwork was not a problem, the lowest percentage of all factors.

The Acting Speaker: I would ask the member if he could wind up his remarks and continue in a further debate.

Mr Turnbull: Just to conclude that thought, the bill we have before us, Bill 110, is giving us both payroll taxes, which are a burden on business in terms of creating jobs, and in addition to that creates a paperwork burden which is identified as the next most problematic area for small businesses in terms of creating and maintaining small businesses. With that, I will adjourn the debate.

The Acting Speaker: We will be able to resume the debate at a further time. It being 6 o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 in the morning.

The House adjourned at 1801.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

TENANTS ON SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

LOCATAIRES SUR L'AIDE SOCIALE

Mr Bisson moved private member's notice of motion number 38:

That, in the opinion of this House, the assembly calls upon the government of Ontario to undertake legislative and/or regulatory changes that would allow direct payment of shelter allowances and benefits to a landlord from the Family Benefits Act and the General Welfare Assistance Act in situations where the tenant is in default in payment of rent.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Pursuant to standing order 96(c)(i), the honourable member has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I bring this resolution to the House as an issue I think many of us have dealt with in our constituencies. However, before starting, I want people to understand quite clearly what I'm trying to do here and not misread or misunderstand what the intent of this resolution is.

We've seen over the past few years a number of people taking runs at some of the most vulnerable people in our society: the people who find themselves unemployed. I was worried, bringing forward this resolution, that people would see it in that light and say: "What is this all about? Is this about taking a run at or attacking those people who find themselves on social assistance either through family benefits or general welfare benefits?"

I want to clearly say that that's not what this is all about. What we're talking about doing here is passing a resolution that simply says that in the event a person does not pay the rent, for whatever reason—the present situation is that if I happen to be working and paying rent to my landlord, if I don't pay my rent a landlord has a mechanism by which to collect non-payment of rent. The landlord can take me through the Small Claims Court system, bring me before the Small Claims Court and in the end have an order against me to pay the amount of rent I am in arrears.

The problem is that if a person's on GWA or FBA benefits, you as a landlord are able to bring the person to Small Claims Court but have absolutely no mechanism to collect the money even if the judgement is in your favour.

We need to explain the two parts of this. First of all, I think that is unfair. I come from a northern Ontario riding, from Timmins, Iroquois Falls and Matheson. Most of my landlords, 95%, 98%, 99% of them, are people like you and me who happen to own a house, who try to pay the mortgage through the rent they may have coming from an apartment or two within their building. If somebody falls in default of that rent, it means that landlord can't pay his or her mortgage. Clearly, especially in this day and age, you can't have that kind of thing going on.

I've had a lot of people coming into my office—I wouldn't say hundreds, but many people—over the past two or three years with exactly that situation, who say: "I've rented out my apartment. My mortgage is due. The person hasn't paid their rent. I've now started proceedings under the Landlord and Tenant Act for eviction, but I have absolutely no way of collecting the money." In some cases that could put that landlord in a really tough spot.

Most people in my riding are working-class people who happen to work at Dome or Royal Oak or Abitibi or Hembraff contracting or Kidd Creek, who own a house and pay the mortgage through the rent to a certain extent, and they can't afford to be put in that position. There's been an extreme amount of frustration on the part of these individuals when they come into my office and find out in the end that there's nothing they can do. They've been calling on me, as their member, to try to find a way of resolving this situation.

With a lot of discussion with both the Minister of Housing and the Minister of Community and Social Services, my colleagues and other colleagues across the way, we talked about one of the ways we can possibly do that.

One of the things we need to understand is that when it comes to social assistance, general welfare benefits or family benefits, there's a very good reason you're not allowed to garnishee somebody once you've gone to Small Claims Court. The money they get is to help them in a situation, more than likely an emergency situation, especially on general welfare, and it was intended through the act not to allow people to be garnished in that situation because the little amount of money they get is to pay for sustenance, food, the hydro bill, for making sure your children have shoes to go to school, that you can just do the basic things in life. In the wisdom of the former Conservative government when they put together this act, they understood you can't start garnisheeing people with $600 a month coming in to pay for groceries for the family and some of those benefits. That's why you're not able to garnishee in a court.

I tried to look at doing this in another way, and what we came up with is this resolution that basically calls on the government to do something that's fairly simple. In situations where somebody falls behind on their rent, and clearly only in those situations—first, we have to understand up front that people on social assistance pay their rent at the same rate as people not on social assistance. People on social assistance are as responsible as people not on social assistance. I don't want to leave an impression that because somebody who happens to be unemployed runs out of unemployment insurance benefits and ends up on social assistance, somehow they're irresponsible. That's not what the issue is here.

The issue is that we need to find a mechanism that allows a landlord to get access to the dollars he or she is owed for that rent. What you've got is a contract between a tenant and a landlord. The landlord, in good faith, says, "I will let you live in that apartment and I will provide services to you to make sure you have a good place to live, but what I want in exchange is that you pay your rent at the end of the month," and clearly the landlord is entitled to that payment. This is what's at issue.

I'm calling on us to do simply this: In those situations where the tenant has gone into arrears situation and the money is not able to be collected through normal means, we put in a mechanism that the landlord under that circumstance is able to go to the authorities and say, "Pay the rent directly to me through their shelter allowance." I think that's a fair compromise.

I know there are people who will criticize me. I've had this discussion with people in the House on both sides, and I've had some members from the Liberal caucus as well as members from my caucus say, "Isn't this an attack on welfare?" I want to say up front that this is not what this is about. It's about saying we have a contractual obligation between a landlord and a tenant, and if the landlord's expected to fulfil his or her obligations in that contract when it comes to providing the tenant with an apartment, surely to God the tenant has an obligation to pay that rent. That's really what this is all about. Basically, what we're calling for is a very simple thing: to allow direct payment of rent in the event that the individual falls into arrears so that a landlord is able to be paid.

I want to bring forward another thing that really bothers me. One of the things we have going through society over these past years is that for some reason, I think because of what's happened in the economy, many people tend to try to blame the problems in the economy on groups of people. One of the things we've seen over the past four, five, 10 years is that many people, from all parts of the political spectrum to a certain extent, turn the guns a little and aim them towards people on social assistance, and say that just because somebody's on social assistance somehow they're not responsible. We're hearing a lot of derogatory comments through the media, made by very responsible people in our societies, about people on social assistance.

I think we have to refrain from that. We need to understand that fundamentally there is no difference between a person on social assistance and a person who happens to be working, other than that they don't have a job. That's the difference. People do things with the same frequency on social assistance as they do when they're working.

I want to point to an article I read in today's Toronto Star, a comment made by the Prime Minister yesterday here in Toronto while speaking to a group of newspaper executives. He says, "In my judgement it is better to have them at 50% of productivity than to be sitting at home, drinking beer, at 0% of productivity." I think that's a disservice to the people of this province, a disservice to the people on social assistance. I didn't know that only people who are on social assistance sit at home and drink beer. I sit at home and drink beer like anybody else, and I'm sure my colleagues do too. I see the members across the way waving. I think we have to be very careful not to make those kinds of statements.

Je voudrais seulement, en finissant, expliquer un peu en cours exactement ce que la résolution demande. C'est pour avoir un mécanisme, en fin de la journée, que si le locataire qui paie le loyer et, pour une raison ou une autre, cette personne n'est pas capable de payer son loyer à la fin du mois, qu'on donne directement à la personne à qui appartient l'appartement l'opportunité de faire la collecte de ce qui lui est dû directement, que dans une telle situation la personne à qui appartient la bâtisse est capable de mettre en place un mécanisme pour être capable de payer directement à lui ou elle l'argent qui lui est dû.

Clairement on n'a jamais, je pense, dans cette Assemblée ou n'importe où dans ce pays, dit que juste parce qu'une personne se trouve sur le bien-être social pour une raison ou une autre, elle n'a pas le droit et n'a pas la responsabilité de prendre ses responsabilités. Je pense qu'on a besoin d'être clair que tout le monde sur le bien-être social, c'est du monde responsable comme n'importe qui d'autre.

Mais ce qu'on a c'est une situation présentement où les règlements qui traitent la situation — si une personne est sur le bien-être social ou si une personne n'est pas sur le bien-être social — ne sont pas égaux. Ce que cette résolution demande, c'est simplement qu'on a besoin d'avoir de l'égalité dans la loi qui dit que dans n'importe quelle situation, les règlements qui s'appliquent à cette situation sont exactement les mêmes.

Just in closing, I would like to call on my members in this House, because I know you face this problem as well in your own constituencies, to join me today to pass this resolution so we can move forward and bring some fairness to the people of this province.

The Acting Speaker: Now each party will have 15 minutes, in rotation, to debate this resolution.

Mrs Yvonne O'Neill (Ottawa-Rideau): I'm pleased to participate in the debate on the resolution put before this House this morning by the member for Cochrane South. I'd like to state from the outset that I find the resolution very confusing. The remedy he seeks through resolution 38 already exists within the regulations of the General Welfare Assistance Act and in the trusteeship provisions of the Family Benefits Act.

First, I find it passing strange that the member for Cochrane South presents his resolution today just two weeks after the Minister of Community and Social Services told the recipients of social assistance in this province that they will no longer be paid a minimum shelter allowance but will be paid actual costs. Surely the minister has an administrative process in place to determine what these actual costs are, either through lease conditions or rent receipts or trustee arrangements. I ask the member for Cochrane South, have you talked to your Minister of Community and Social Services about this matter?

The GWA act and regulations manual, section 0104-02, as it exists today, this morning, in this province outlines measures available to recover rent from social assistance recipients, and I underline;

"If the administrator decides to pay for items on behalf of the recipient, the authority is contained in section 12(1) of the regulations, which states that an allowance shall be paid to or on behalf of a person, eg, shelter costs to the landlord, fuel allowance to a fuel supplier; the welfare administrator, or any member of his/her staff, may be directly involved in the apportionment of the applicant's assistance and the payments to the other person(s) on his/her behalf."

In addition, the landlord always has the option of eviction or court proceedings.

I have verified the information I have just related with a number of municipal social assistance commissioners over the past few days as well as with my contacts in the Ministry of Community and Social Services, and I am told that the vast majority, over 90%, of welfare recipients pay their rent on time and in full and that the GWA remedy quoted above is very, very rarely used.

The member's resolution therefore does not adequately consider existing regulations which already permit the remedy he seeks from this House this morning. If there's a weakness in the system, it's the reluctance of a local administrator to use the power that he or she possesses.

May I suggest that the member for Cochrane South be very careful to examine the financial, social and legal costs involved in the implementation of his resolution. To download the additional administrative expense of accounting for, producing and mailing two cheques instead of one would add significant financial burden and would force further cutbacks in existing programs which are sorely needed in our communities.

As the member for Oakville South did two weeks ago, this speaker wants a different standard of justice for people on social assistance than for others in Ontario communities. I have no doubt that this resolution will lead to a large number of challenges to the Social Assistance Review Board and to the courts. As you know, current backlogs in both bodies already force long waiting periods on people seeking a hearing, delays which are costly to this province and to the individual appellant.

In closing, I find it curious that the NDP caucus suddenly has a belated concern for Ontario landlords. I would suggest that the member for Cochrane South share his new concern with the Minister of Housing, whose retroactive rent control legislation destroyed the life savings of so many of Ontario's small landlords of whom the member speaks.

I cannot support this member's resolution this morning. It's imprecise to the ultimate and therefore open to many dangerous interpretations. The social assistance recipients in the member's riding and across Ontario deserve better from him and from the government he represents.

Sadly, the Queen's Park contest I mentioned two weeks ago continues, a contest based on sweeping pronouncements rather than hard evidence, a contest that will increase appeals to the Social Assistance Review Board, a contest that's based on confusion, a contest where the prize is unknown. The contest now has a new player in the member for Cochrane South.

I close by sharing an editorial cartoon from the Windsor Star. It shows a line of people entering and exiting a welfare office. As they exit, they are each wearing a target. Is this how the score is now kept in Queen's Park between the Treasurer, the member for Oakville South and the member for Cochrane South?

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I take great pleasure in joining this debate today and congratulate my colleague from Cochrane South in bringing forward this resolution. Frankly, I wish it was a bill. It's an issue I've wanted to speak on for quite some time. I will just title my few words that I'm going to add to the debate A Tale of Two Constituents. They're two stories that I've come across since I've been a member.

The first concerns a constituent of mine who came to me, desperate for help. She was a Jamaican immigrant of very modest means who had scraped together every penny that she'd ever earned and saved and had managed to put a deposit down on a very modest bungalow. Because she wanted to improve the life of herself and her children, she recognized that at the beginning she could rent more modest accommodation for herself and she would top up the amount of money she was getting in rent in an effort to build up some equity in the house.

She bought it at the depths of the recession, so it certainly helped the economy, and then went, actually, to the welfare office and said: "Do you have a family that needs accommodation? I will rent this." In fact, the welfare office recommended this family and the family came forward and she rented. It was a single mother who turned out later to have a man who was a live-in boyfriend—well, some of the time. He was a truck driver. He was also a motorbike gang member.

The truck was parked illegally on the driveway to this house and the tractor of the truck started to damage the driveway. The owner of the house complained that this was not appropriate, that they were not supposed to be parking the tractor on the driveway. She was told in no uncertain terms to get lost.

Mrs O'Neill: Because she was on welfare.

Mr Turnbull: I'll ignore the babbling on the side.

The tenant stopped paying the rent and the owner of the house went in desperation and said, "Look, I haven't received your rent," and she was put off for some length of time. Then it became very apparent that the tenant, who was a welfare recipient, had no intention of paying the rent.

Finally, in desperation, the Jamaican immigrant—and I emphasize "Jamaican immigrant" because today there are so many negative things that people are saying. They're good, productive people who have come, like my colleague, from Jamaica originally. We have got so many people who come here and work hard and contribute to our society. She was trying to improve her lot and she was in danger of losing her house; she was in danger of losing all the money she had invested because she couldn't meet the mortgage payments.

She went to the welfare office and the welfare office, responding to a request from the owner of the house—it was a very simple request. It wasn't, "Pay me directly," in fact; it was just, "Can you put aside that money into some sort of trust fund until at least I can go through the court process?" which was going to take about three months, to be able to at least get the tenant out. The welfare office said, "No, we will not do that." They continued to pay the full amount to the welfare recipient. Meantime, the money was being spent on other things instead of accommodation. The welfare office could very easily, if it had been directed to respond to these kinds of situations, have put it into a trust fund and that's all that would be required, but it refused to do it.

Finally, this lady of very modest means came to me and she was on the verge of tears, saying, "Please, can't you help me?" I investigated and unfortunately, no, there wasn't any way I could help. I felt very bad, because this immigrant who had come to Canada to better her lot and was a productive member of society was being victimized by the way in which the welfare system was working.

The second story, because I said it's A Tale of Two Constituents, is of another single mother who came to me and she was a welfare recipient and she had suffered, some months before, the loss of her mother. In her bereavement she had reached out for the only vice she had, and that was to go to bingo parlours. She started gambling quite excessively in the bingo parlours and spent all the money that she would normally spend on rent and got herself deeply into the hole. Finally, the landlord was moving against her to have her removed, and she too was on the verge of tears, saying, "What can I do?" I asked her, "Why didn't you pay your rent?" She had no logical reason.

If we had a mechanism which would allow the welfare office, in those few cases—as the last speaker mentioned, 90% of the people on welfare or better, maybe more than 90% but certainly the vast majority of welfare recipients, don't want to be on welfare. They don't want to be in that situation. They want to be productive members of society. But sometimes people get off the rails and it's a very difficult time.

There is an element of people who deliberately want to use the welfare system in this way, and the welfare system couldn't move in and help. In both of these cases, the system was not working to help them. When people are in these desperate straits of being on welfare, we should reach out and certainly, for the landlords who have welfare recipients as their tenants, we should not make it a difficult situation.

I see my good friend Mr Mills just entering the House. I remember well speaking to him about this particular problem, and he was very sympathetic at the time to what I was speaking to him about. In fact, in discussions with the minister, we were getting nowhere.

I commend my colleague across the floor. I wish that you had brought this as a bill. At least if you have a vote today, sir, where the House supports you, I hope you will use that within your caucus to move this issue forward, because we do need to help the welfare recipients who get off the rails and we also need to help the landlords, the people who rent to welfare recipients, so that it doesn't become a very odious thing having a welfare recipient. If in any way I can help you in your task, I assure you I'm at your disposal.

Mr Len Wood (Cochrane North): I'd like to start off by saying that I fully support the resolution that's brought forward by my good friend and colleague the member for Cochrane South. What this resolution speaks to is very dear to some of the people in Cochrane North who are in the business of rental units and to the people throughout my riding.

There are a lot of landlords who have two, three or four apartments who depend on an income from tenants to make ends meet, to make their payments and to do the necessary repairs that they have on the building. What I would like to see, and I'm sure we're going to get a lot of support from my own colleagues and members of the opposition and the third party, is that when there's a lapse of a month where the rent hasn't been paid, there is a mechanism in place for the landlord to collect the rent that is owed. This would ensure that the tenant and the landlord would be able to have the agency pay the rent so that the tenant is not faced with an eviction and the landlord does not have to worry about financial loss. In most cases, direct payment of the rent would be a solution.

I don't want people to think I would consider that those working and those on general welfare or family benefits are any different. If there's an income that's coming in, whether it's from an employer or from family benefits or from welfare, people are expected to pay their rent. In society, this is what we expect. But there are situations where in various parts of the province things are handled in a different situation.

We know that our government has been looking at changes and amendments to the general welfare assistance in finding ways of helping people gain access to training, find suitable day care facilities and find jobs through Jobs Ontario projects which fund employers. Jobs Ontario cannot do this alone, but we have to deal with this. I believe this resolution will deal with the situation between landlords and tenants.

We have to understand that after losing their jobs and running out of unemployment insurance benefits, they have no choice but to utilize the welfare system. We know it was created only as a cushion for those unable to find employment, but they have to have a certain amount of money and a little bit of income to be able to make ends meet from the time they've lost their employment and ended up on either family benefits or welfare until they get back into employment.

At the same time, I've met many landlords who are going through tough times: four or five months without receiving any income through rents. I believe this is not necessary in today's society. Most people pay their rent on time, but I would suggest that there are probably in the neighbourhood of 2%, 3%, 4%, at least less than 10% in my riding, where the landlords are having problems. I've met with the landlords' association, I've met with individual landlords and they've raised the issue with me: "Len, how can you help us to make sure we're not put in the position where we have to evict people from their apartments? Is there a system of direct payment that can be put in place? If they're one or two months behind, is there any way we can get the rent?"

I know this is not a new situation. It's been developing over the last 20 years. But we also have to understand that we've been in a recession, the worst recession in 50 years, which has been going on for three years.

With that, I would just like to say once again that I congratulate my good colleague Mr Bisson for bringing this forward during private members' hour today. I'm sure he's going to get support from the government members, the official opposition members and the members of the third party. I congratulate him on that.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): I too appreciate the opportunity to speak on this bill, which the member for Cochrane South introduced as ballot item number 49.

It's rather interesting that the NDP, the government of the day, is introducing something like this. I'm not at all surprised that it's a private member's bill. The fact is that now they have the opportunity to bring in something sensible as a government bill, but what they are doing is floating this situation on a private member's bill about shelter allowance. They would never have thought about it before.

The problem I have is that, as a matter of fact, I fully agree with the member for York Mills that it should be a government bill, not a private member's bill.

The NDP, as you know, Madam Speaker, and you fully agree with me on this, has never had a balanced view on housing. They have always advocated only for the tenants, who need, of course, some advocates in order to support their position, and justifiably so. But as a government you cannot look on only one side of things.

If you're bringing legislation in, it should be balanced.

Not at all surprisingly, the Conservative Party has never understood housing policy, because it feels that only the landlord should be driving this policy of housing.

We and our leader, Lyn McLeod, have stated over and over that we must have a balanced approach to housing policies. We must involve the non-profit housing component and also the private sector contribution in giving supportive housing to the people of the province.

Unless we decide that we can take it sensibly and approach it in a manner where we can have a balanced approach, we will always have this adversarial aspect of it, one supporting the tenant and the other supporting the landlord. In the balanced approach, we'll have a proper housing policy.

How surprising it is too that this legislation talks about a shelter allowance. Let me first say that I believe in shelter allowances. I believe too that we should have control. We have a rent review process that we brought in in 1986 and followed through with in order that we have some control of the charges for our rental accommodation.

The problem we have in this situation here is on the road to a proper way of handling shelter allowance and handling rental payments, and default in rental payments. As my colleague stated, there are provisions that can be done in order to require the amount of money be placed for the rent to guarantee that landlords get their money when there is default.

Many of the landlords and the care givers today in our cities, especially in Toronto—I know of a group that is challenged all the time by those people who are given accommodation. They are unable to collect the rent, because as soon as those individuals get their rent, some demands are placed on them that they sometimes seem to respond to quicker than their accommodation. Accommodation is so important. The care givers say to them: "Your accommodation is first. That's what you should emphasize. In this country there's severe cold and you need this accommodation. You must pay for that."

However, some other people hijack them of their money or demands are placed elsewhere and they have no accommodation. What happens is that they have to go somewhere else, like the Salvation Army or some other shelter, to get accommodation for the night because they're scared to come to the place where they did not pay their money.

What is happening? The government would have paid twice. They would have paid them through the welfare or the family benefits for accommodation, but which did not get paid to the care givers or the landlord, and then they would go to the shelter, where it is again paid.

I think the direction in which the member is going is right, that we should have some sort of shelter allowance, maybe a certificate, in the sense that, "Here is a housing certificate and it can only be spent for accommodation." You give that in order to get your accommodation going properly.

The public trustee, of course, as we know, handles some of those situations. They are just overwhelmed with the type of administrative work they have to do.

The hospitals also at times handle some of these situations where people have nowhere to go after leaving the hospital or they would more or less have their funds coming in and not be able to re-enter the place where they're owing rent because, again, they have abused it.

So I think it's the right direction, but I want to say there's a bit of hypocrisy here, though, which bothers me. The fact is that the Housing minister, who I find very insensitive to the overall policy of housing, that she would have not come in here today and say to the honourable member for Cochrane South, "Let's get together and make a bill that will address the situation on the government level"—but oh, no, sneaking it through here hoping it will die.

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): It is only a resolution.

Mr Curling: My colleague on the government side says, "It's only a resolution." In other words, let's float it; it will die. I'll tell you something: There are many members on our side who are prepared to support this and also the Conservative side, although I'm not quite sure the Conservatives understand the process of housing, will support that. I'm sure every single one of your members over there will support the shelter allowance situation. I know that. You're committed in order to make sure that everyone who's in need of accommodation will be paid through this shelter allowance process.

But it's a half-baked process. Do it properly, as my colleague said, so that in some situations it can be addressed, but now, presently, come forward with a bill that is sensible. Come forward like what the Liberals did and bring a balanced approach to housing. Come forward right now and assess the situation properly now that the cost of non-profit housing is even higher than the private sector which can produce accommodation. Say to yourself, maybe non-profit housing can be better delivered through the private sector, because right now, you are delivering non-profit housing at a higher cost.

You see what I'm saying? The NDP, who used to be so concerned about accommodation on the one side, and the Conservatives, who seem to be so concerned about accommodation who want to deliver in the private sector, don't understand that both sides have to come together in delivering that, exactly the way the Liberal Party, through Lyn McLeod, has said over and over. As a matter of fact, in Ottawa, Lyn McLeod has stated that what we should be doing is put a moratorium, a stop, on all of this. Let's look at it rather sensibly and decide to come up with a strategy to address the needs of people.

I know how sensitive it is to all that they're playing politics with this. In Housing itself, in all respect, while they have their hearts in it, their minds are not there at all. They don't have the full understanding of it. Get the private sector, get some of the non-profit people who have worked along with this to give you some of the answers, not come in with this kind of half-baked situation in order to say that this is the way we will deliver shelter allowance and protect the landlords.

Landlords, of course, need to be protected. Their assets need to be protected in order that they would have that accommodation for those people who come in here.

I will support this, I tell you, and hope that the Minister of Housing is listening and also would bring in a rather sensible bill to cover it all.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): Now we've had a lesson from the former Liberal Housing minister, we can prepare to deal with the opportunity that we have to comment on the resolution from the member for Cochrane South.

He calls on the provincial government to make legislative and/or regulatory changes to allow direct payment of shelter allowances and benefits to a landlord from the Family Benefits Act and the General Welfare Assistance Act, when a tenant is in default of his or her rental payments. I just wish this had been in the form of a bill instead of a resolution and we could have had some time in committee to debate it.

Many landlords in Simcoe East tell me they're sick and tired of people ripping them off and ripping off the system and they say to themselves: "We are struggling to survive. We're operating under rent controls."

Ontario taxpayers deserve and are demanding social services; they want workers' compensation and health care that are effective and accountable and not a waste and a fraud. I want to make it clear that the landlords and I know the majority of welfare and family recipients are truly in need. But we also know there always will be a small group of people who will take advantage of and abuse our caring social system. Those same people who are taking advantage of the system will not hesitate to stick the landlords with unpaid rent and their unpaid hydro, gas or oil bills.

Landlords are taxpayers and they understand better than most the need for government to provide services in an efficient, responsible and financially sound fashion.

I'd like to share with you just a couple of instances of people who brought to my attention—Helen Wright, who owns property on Barrie Road in Orillia, and Marie Richardson, who owns property near Elmvale.

On March 21, Helen Wright wrote to me with regard to some problems she was having collecting rent. Tenants moved in in April 1993 and by July 1993 they'd only paid $600 in rent. By a few months later, there was $1,640 that was an outstanding balance. She supplied a letter to the welfare department, signed by the tenant, directing them to pay the rent directly to her. However, they refused to do that. The tenant agreed to do that, but the welfare system would not do it. If there's an administrative problem, then how come we're getting these letters from people such as that who do want to have it paid direct?

The other lady, with regard to the problems she was having—they had a lot of damage done to their property. The landlord spent $300 extra, over and above, in legal costs; $1,300 of a bill she had and nobody would pay it.

We all know there was a time when tenants had few rights to protect them from the few unscrupulous landlords who tried to take advantage of them. However, times have changed and I believe the pendulum has swung too far in favour of some tenants who abuse the social system and the patience and goodwill of the landlords.

That is why I will be supporting this resolution to allow direct payment of shelter allowances and benefits to a landlord from the Family Benefits Act and the General Welfare Assistance Act when a tenant fails to pay their rent. I thank these people for giving me the opportunity to read some of their letters in this debate today so that tenants and landlords will have a deal whereby their rent will be paid directly if they so desire.

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): I have had several calls to my office about this issue and that is some concern to me because, to tell you the truth, this isn't a large metropolitan area like downtown Toronto. This is a smaller community where we know a lot of people and everyone knows each other, but it's become worrisome because I see this type of thing happening even in our smaller communities.

I would like to mention a couple of letters I've got. One was from a gentleman who said: "As a landlord, I feel it is very unfair that I can't collect from a bad tenant. As of now, I have a tenant that owes me four months' rent, plus over $500 to get them out. In my opinion, people living off the taxpayer should be just as obligated to pay their rent as a person working for a living and they should be made to pay through the courts the same as a working person.

"I will not rent to someone on mother's allowance again unless I am guaranteed I get the rent. The rent cheques should go to the landlord directly."

When my opponents talk about targets, we see here that there are people being targeted, but they are everybody else on FBA or everybody else who needs social assistance and that's a concern. I think we do have to tighten up for those who aren't following the rules, who aren't playing fair.

He goes on to say: "I hope these issues will be given some thought and consideration. As a landlord, I like to be fair to everyone, but I can't let this kind of thing happen, as I need to collect rent in order to pay for the upkeep of the apartment, such as taxes, expenses," and so on and so forth.

I had another letter from a gentleman, who said:

"I have a problem. I had a person living in the house. She was finally evicted for non-payment of rent for many months, damage to the apartment, continually disturbing the rest of the neighbourhood. I had a rough time getting her out through the courts, which cost me more money on top of having to pay for the upkeep of my place and fixing the apartment up after she left.

"I attended court twice, to which she never bothered to appear nor send anyone on her behalf to represent her. The General Division agreed she must pay back half the utilities. That amounted to over $500 plus my expenses. In small claims court I was awarded in the area of almost $3,000 for back rent and damages. This is all fine, but I have not been able to collect a cent.

"This person is on mother's allowance and it seems that she gets off scot-free at my expense and continues to abuse the assistance programs to this day."

That's what I'm saying: In some cases there is abuse, but even though the courts determine that the landlord is entitled to arrears, the likelihood of ever receiving this money from FBA recipients is virtually nil. Being on social assistance should not exclude persons from their financial responsibilities.

Firstly, being on social assistance should not exclude persons. The money a social assistance recipient receives monthly is based on their budgetary needs. The shelter allowance is based on their actual monthly rental or mortgage costs. If a recipient is receiving money to pay this shelter cost and is not putting it towards this expense, they are in essence committing fraud. If they did not have any shelter costs, their budgets would be adjusted accordingly.

Is there a way this problem could be remedied? In a case such as this, where the courts have determined that the landlord is legally entitled to collect the rent arrears, could the recipients be charged with an overpayment for the moneys instead of using them for shelter costs?

A second concern is the fact that presently landlords are unable to collect arrears, even though the court has ordered, and that, unfortunately, affects all persons receiving social assistance. It is probably one of the main reasons landlords are hesitant to rent to social assistance recipients. I am aware of landlords that are legally not allowed to discriminate, but the reality is that this problem does affect the decision in selecting their tenants.

There are no specific directions given under FBA or GWA as to how a person must spend their allowance; however, it is expected that people receiving social assistance pay for their shelter costs. Overpayments cannot be collected from recipients based on the manner in which they spend their allowance, but rather overpayments are recovered where a recipient has received assistance to which he or she is not entitled. Therefore, let me point out that they would not be entitled to this percentage—

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): Two per cent of that is recovered.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mrs Haslam: That's correct. They would not be entitled to this money if they're not giving this money to the landlord. Therefore, we should be looking at a way that we can tighten up the criteria.

It's unfair. It's unfair to landlords because they're the ones who are renting and not getting their damage paid, they're not getting recovery through the courts. It's unfair to other GWA recipients because they are targeted like those who are not following the rules. It's unfair to the FBA recipients because people don't designate between those two, and therefore the FBA recipients who are being fair, who are on social assistance and need some help, are not being treated fairly. It's unfair to the women and the children who need social assistance, who need places to live, and they need decent shelter.

So I think the solutions are not quick to find, not easy to find. I think it's something that we do have to look at, and I will be supporting my colleague's motion in this instance.

Mr Mills: I am pleased to rise in my place this morning and speak in support of my colleague from Cochrane's resolution.

It's not an easy solution that we're faced with. I want to just start off my comments by saying, most people on welfare today and in receipt of some social assistance are there not because they want to be there; they are there because they're grasping at the social network to keep them afloat until they're able to get back into the workforce.

I do not like the statement made by the Prime Minister of Canada yesterday in the House of Commons that suggests somehow that people on welfare are just hanging around drinking beer and wasting time and picking up money. Most of the people in my riding who are on welfare are there because it's the last straw in their existence. I have people—

Mr Jackson: He is only talking about the poor in Ontario.

Mr Mills: You tell Earl Warren that on your show. I'm speaking.

I want to talk about the problems that people have in my riding. The member for York Mills and I discussed this over a year ago. Some of the people in my riding are ordinary working folks who have somehow managed to get together the down payment on a house and the very essence that they can hang on to that property after all those years of effort is through regular payment of rent.

I believe, contrary to some of the debate that's taken place, that most people on social assistance are decent, upright citizens and they're there because there's no other way from there. These people also meet their obligations in a very honest, straightforward way. But like every situation that we have in the province of Ontario, there are some people who don't play the game. This is likewise true in paying the rent.

There are certain pressures that come upon people at the end of each month, I'm sure, that force their hand about who they're going to pay and what they're going to pay first. What I would like to see, my colleague from Cochrane, is that some method be put into place where people who miss one month's rent are given some sort of stern warning and spoken to and told this is not on and the next time, the right of paying the rent themselves is taken away.

I think everybody, whether you're on social assistance, whether you're in the workforce, should have the dignity to be able to manage the money that they get, be it from work or from social assistance. I am a great believer in that dignity and giving the people that dignity to manage their own affairs. I came from England years ago when people ended up in the workhouse. I think that's awful, that we somehow say to people: "You can't manage your affairs. The state is going to take over and we're going to pay the rent for you."

Something has to be done and it's my understanding, I believe, that down the road in some reform this issue is being looked at and I look forward to that day. But in the meantime, I want to make it perfectly clear that while I support this resolution this morning, I also recognize the dignity that we should afford to people who, as a last resort, are on social assistance for their very existence, brought about, I might add, by the diabolical free trade agreement and NAFTA and all these other measures that—

Interjection: GST.

Mr Mills: And the GST, my colleagues over there, their cohorts.

I also read in the press yesterday that the federal Liberals are determined to cut and slash more transfer payments to the province of Ontario and make more people dependent on the social assistance programs. I don't know where we're going to get the money but I say shame on the federal Liberals, shame on the 96 people who do nothing for this province and shame on the Prime Minister of Canada for suggesting that people hang around and drink beer.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member's time has expired. Further debate? The member for Burlington South.

Mr Jackson: I just can't believe it. I imagine Tommy Douglas must be rolling over in his grave to listen to the outpouring of support from the socialists for the private sector. I'm going to send this Hansard to so many people who won't understand what this new enlightenment on the part of the NDP is. There isn't an NDP member in the House today who has any more than three years' experience in this Legislature, and that's unfortunate. The truth of the matter is that they would be aware that there has been resolution after resolution in this House calling for this kind of reform.

I commend the member for Cochrane South for his courage in bringing this forward. It's not an easy resolution, after all. But the arguments purported by the government that this has got to be fairer for landlords is an unbelievable argument coming from the socialists. I applaud them, I applaud every speaker who has gotten up with this new-found version of hypocrisy, but if that's the new marching orders from the Premier, go for it.

The truth is that the Liberal government, when it was running the show, started out—I want to give you some idea. If you listened to the Liberals, what was their argument? The argument was that it would be too bureaucratic.

Mr Jackson: You might learn something. Listen to these figures. When the Tories left power in 1985, we were spending $8 million on rent control, to administer the entire rent control plan in this province. After the ravages of the Liberal government, including a former minister who stood up in this House and spoke on this debate, rent control is costing the taxpayers of this province nearly $50 million. So much for the Liberal argument about growing bureaucracy.

Now the NDP has a bill before the House called Bill

120 that's going to expand rent control services to thousands and thousands more residents in this province, including illegal basement apartments, all sorts of people receiving care in retirement-type homes. The government has been asked for the last nine months, how much more is it going to cost? You know what? They don't have a figure. So why should we be surprised that we have a very good resolution here today where the Liberals say, "My God, it's going to cost more money"—we know that—and the government can't tell us how much?

There are a lot of problems associated with social assistance and ensuring that every citizen has a right to accommodation. We have argued, for example, that we cannot compound the difficulties facing the poor by exposing them to more lotteries and gambling and opportunities to have their limited paycheque diminished. The children become school-phobic because they're more mobile, and tenants are rotating in and out of these buildings because they fall behind in their rent.

The truth of the matter is that the Tories have been fighting for shelter subsidies and this kind of linkage for the last eight and a half years. So I applaud the member for Cochrane South for bringing forward the resolution. I can't believe my ears that the NDP is actually defending landlords in Ontario, but thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Time for debate has expired. The member for Cochrane South has two minutes to respond.

Mr Bisson: I appreciate the comments made by my colleagues today in regard to what a lot of members recognize is a fairly serious issue and, I would admit, an issue many of us have been trying to deal with over the years.

I just want to respond to one thing so that there's no misunderstanding. One of the assertions that was made in the debate is that there is a mechanism already within GWA for a landlord to collect the rent directly. If we take a look at the system, it doesn't work, because one component is that the landlord must get the tenant to sign the paper to make it happen, and that's a fairly difficult situation to make happen.

What I'm calling for is to make sure we have a system in the end that says people their responsibilities when it comes to a contractual arrangement made between a landlord and a tenant. No matter whether they're a working person or a person on social assistance, they must take that responsibility. No way should a landlord be in a situation where because a person decides they don't want to take their responsibility, his livelihood and his home are put in jeopardy.

We must put on the record that the vast majority of landlords this would affect are people like you and me, people of working class who own a home because they're able to rent a unit in it to pay the mortgage. To put people in a situation where all of a sudden, because a tenant decides not to pay the rent, you have no recourse is highly unfair not only to the landlord but to the tenant.

I applaud the members who are going to be voting with me today to support this resolution, and I really, really appreciate the support they have given.

Juste pour conclure, je veux seulement dire que j'apprécie beaucoup le temps que les députés ont pris pour parler sur cette motion. Je veux dire clairement que les règlements que je regarde pour faire des changements donneraient finalement en Ontario, si on est capable d'en venir à un accord pour supporter cette résolution, l'occasion de mettre en place un système qui dit qu'on a des règlements qui sont égaux pour toutes les personnes impliquées dans cette situation.

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. A vote will be held on Mr Bisson's motion at 12 noon.

AMMUNITION CONTROL ACT, 1994 LOI DE 1994 SUR LA RÉGLEMENTATION DES MUNITIONS

Mr Chiarelli moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 151, An Act to control the Purchase and Sale of Ammunition / Projet de loi 151, Loi visant à réglementer l'achat et la vente de munitions.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Pursuant to standing order 96(c)(i), the member has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): Canada spends $7.7 billion per year on policing, in our courts and in our correctional institutions, yet people still don't feel safe on our streets and in our communities. On the question of violent crimes, people want governments to act and to act now. They are demanding, and they are entitled to, stronger measures of prevention and stronger measures of enforcement.

Unfortunately, for some people it will be too late. Of course, I'm referring to the type of case which occurred in Ottawa, the Nicholas Battersby case, where a young man was gunned down while walking on an Ottawa street in a drive-by shooting, and the café killing of Georgina Leimonis in a Toronto-area café.

And of course we have a lot of people who are demanding stronger action of enforcement, in fact zero tolerance, in our schools.

On that point, I want to refer to a letter which I received from an Ottawa-area high school teacher, one Colleen Fraser. It's dated April 8, 1994, and addressed to me.

"As my MPP, I must remind you that the Elgin Street slaughter and mayhem that has so sickened Ottawa is once again an opportunity for our society to address the misguided direction in which we are all heading." It goes on to say: "Is it not now time for law-abiding members of society to receive a signal from the justice system that their rights and safety are at least as important as those who victimize others for adventure? As a local high school teacher, I am frightened by the increasing violence and lawlessness within the schools. How can students learn academic and personal responsibility when increasing murder and assault are punishable by such insignificant penalties?"

And it goes on to say: "Please respond to my concerns with something other than a form letter. In particular, I very much want to know the changes you will be advancing in response to this latest outrage."

People everywhere are asking the legislators for action and they want to know what we are going to do. Indeed governments have been lax and must act now.

We limit by age the sale of cigarettes. We limit by age the sale of alcohol. We limit driving by age. But we have no such limit on the sale of lethal ammunition. That has to change.

Indeed, according to the Ottawa police, in the drive-by shooting on Elgin Street, by young offenders, I might add, the police say it was an illegal weapon but that the bullets were store-bought over the counter, bought legally by these young people, who are not of age to buy alcohol or cigarettes. That's intolerable.

Why this bill? This bill is An Act to control the Purchase and Sale of Ammunition. People are saying, "We want stronger action on gun control, enforcement and prevention." Well, we in this Legislature do not have the authority, the constitutional jurisdiction, to deal with gun control matters. That is for the federal Parliament to do under our Constitution. Indeed, the federal Minister of Justice has stated that he is going to move, and move quickly, on the area of gun control in terms of prevention and enforcement. We encourage him to do so. We support him in doing so, because the people in Canada, the people in Ontario, are demanding it at the present time. They do not feel safe on our streets. So this bill deals with a retail matter which we feel is within the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. It deals with the control of the sale and purchase of ammunition over the counter.

It's a very simple bill. I'll read a couple of the sections.

First, "No person shall purchase ammunition unless the person holds a valid Ontario Outdoors Card with the appropriate hunting licence or a valid firearms acquisition certificate and produces it at the time of purchase." Of course, for that there are penalties of up to $5,000 for the first offence and up to $10,000 for a second or subsequent offence. I've received a lot of comments from people who feel these penalties are not sufficient enough, that they should be higher, but hopefully this bill will be referred to the standing committee on administration of justice, where changes can be made and suggestions can be received.

The bill also says, "No person shall present, for the purpose of purchasing ammunition, an Ontario Outdoors Card with the appropriate hunting licence or a firearms acquisition certificate other than the card and licence or the certificate that was lawfully issued to him or her." That also has penalties of up to $10,000. That is going to be used to prevent the transferring of this card, which is already issued in Ontario but is not required for the purchase of ammunition. The transfer and forgery of this type of card would be a serious offence under this legislation.

This bill is not a major step in the course of crime prevention, the use of guns and the whole area of gun control. It is a small but important step. It is an area this Legislature has the jurisdiction to deal with. We're asking the people who will be here to vote today in the Legislature to support this bill in principle and send it to the standing committee on administration of justice.

The major steps in terms of gun control, prevention and enforcement, as I said, are at the federal level, and we encourage the federal government and the federal Justice minister, the Honourable Allan Rock, to move on that as quickly as possible. But there are some steps, major steps, which can be taken in the province of Ontario by the Attorney General. Of course, she can instruct prosecutors to seek stricter sentences for persons convicted of gun-related crimes. She can also prohibit plea bargaining of gun-related offences, 80% of which are plea bargained away or given minimal sentences.

That is a serious flaw in Ontario in terms of controlling guns, in terms of prevention and enforcement, and that is that the people who are charged with gun offences are basically not having to face any sanction for these. They are plea bargained away in connection with other crimes, such as burglary, robbery, you name it; and when they are given sentences, they're given minimal sentences. That is not acceptable to the people of Ontario at this time. The government can also enforce zero tolerance in our schools with respect to weapons.

Very simply, we're asking the members of the Legislature today to approve this bill in principle. There are changes that can be made. There are submissions that we want to hear from different groups. But hopefully we can take some action and this bill can be enacted before the end of this session in June.

I want to make reference to one of the objectors. Last night I received a fax from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters and I'll just read very briefly from that:

"Provisions must be made to allow target shooters, legal handgun shooters, and those who use firearms to control predators and nuisance animals, to purchase ammunition without an Outdoors Card or FAC. At a minimum, a restricted weapons permit issued by the chief provincial firearms office must also be accepted documentation."

We certainly would welcome the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters to come to the justice committee. We certainly would look to making changes that hopefully could accommodate their concerns. Indeed, they're offering to come to the committee and to work with all parties in the Legislature to come up with a better means of prevention and enforcement of gun offences. That group is particularly concerned with the large number of weapons which are imported from the United States. That is an area which has to be dealt with by the federal government.

In conclusion, I want again to refer to the letter Colleen Fraser wrote to me on April 8. She says, "Please respond to my concerns with something other than a form letter." I'm asking all members of this Legislature to please respond with action. We can always find reasons not to do something. We have all the reasons in the world now to do something collectively and in a non-partisan way. So I urge you to please vote for this and refer it to the standing committee on administration of justice.

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): I will be supporting the bill on second reading in principle. The bill is clearly hastily put together. We just received a copy of it this weekend. There are significant flaws and concerns and implications, jurisdictional and otherwise, but we do support the principle and believe it's something that should be considered through a standing committee of the Legislature.

I am bothered by what's happening here in respect to the Liberal Party of Ontario. They're coming to this whole issue rather late in the day when some very terrible things have happened, in Toronto, in Ottawa and in other parts of Ontario.

Our party, the Mike Harris Ontario Conservative Party, has been dealing with these issues for a significant period of time. I can recall when we established a task force to take a look at law and order issues in the province that we were ridiculed by the Liberal members in this Legislature. They said we were rednecks, we were scare-mongering. We took the time to travel the province for over nine months listening to people, listening to everyday Ontarians, listening to crown attorneys, listening to lawyers, listening to police officers.

We developed a document. We're the only party in this province that has a significant document dealing with the concerns of Ontarians in respect to justice issues, A Blueprint for Justice and Community Safety in Ontario. I would urge the public, anyone viewing, to call our office, 1-800-665-MIKE, and we'll be pleased to provide Ontarians with a copy of this document. It's a very fine document with a lot of work put into it.

Mr Runciman: Again members of the other two parties are treating this as a joke, and that's the way they've dealt with this whole justice issue for the past number of years. It's a bit of a joke, a sad one, that the Liberal Party is trying to capitalize on some very terrible incidents in this province. I want to remind our viewers, if no one else, of their track record of five years in office. I just want to remind people of some of the matters that came to a head during the Liberal years in office.

The SIU, the special investigations unit, was the creation of the Liberal government. We know of all the difficulties the SIU has created for police officers in this province: the hiring policies of the SIU; its going after police officers—that seems to be its sole mandate—in areas where there clearly is no justification. We've even seen the NDP use preferred indictments, but this is quite comparable to the Liberals in the creation of the SIU in going after police officers.

Susan Eng, who is the current chair of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Services Board, a Liberal appointee, certainly has not been a friend of police officers or policemen and policewomen and has been consistently attacking police forces and police officers in Metro Toronto. She has had a vendetta against Chief Bill McCormack, has wanted to get McCormack out of the Metro board. She's been rather quiet for the last year or so because she realizes the public is not supportive and perhaps she has some electoral ambitions of her own, I don't know.

Ian Scott, who was the Liberal Attorney General: I can recall an incident where drug dealers were convicted by a court in Toronto and were turned right back out on to the streets. Two Metro detectives who had spent months trying to get these people into court and convict them were furious with the judge and the courts that put these people right back out on the streets to deal drugs and impact upon young people in our communities. They expressed their frustration with that judge and with the court system.

What was the reaction of the Liberal Attorney General? He got up and vented his spleen against the police officers. He said he was going to have those officers reprimanded, even dismissed, if they dared to criticize the justice system that was putting drug dealers back out on to the street after they had spent months and months trying to get convictions and rid us of that vermin. That's what Ian Scott, the Liberal Attorney General, said on that day. I recall it vividly.

Police concerns: I have a quote from 1989, during the Liberal years in office. A police officer phoned my office and told us that in his 31 years as an officer, he had never seen police morale "as bad as it is today." He said: "There's no leadership in the Ontario government. There's no one to back us up." That was a Liberal government.

I could go on about a host of areas; one quick one where Wade Lawson was shot by Peel Regional Police driving a stolen car attempting to run down those officers. Two Liberal cabinet ministers attended that funeral. Not during the Liberal tenure did one minister ever get up to express condolences over an officer shot or wounded on the job, but they went to the funeral of a man who was driving a stolen car and attempted to drive down police officers. That's the kind of support police got in this province from the Liberals.

Mr David Wininger (London South): I know that the constituents in my riding and right across Ontario were clearly horrified by the senseless drive-by shooting of Nicholas Battersby in Ottawa that the member for Ottawa West referred to. I know they were also horrified when felons burst into the Just Desserts restaurant in Toronto and turned it into a killing field.

I was personally concerned because not too long ago my younger sister, when she was an art student, was a waitress at Just Desserts. I'm sure she was equally shocked to hear that a quiet, tranquil place where people go to consume cake and cappuccino was suddenly turned into a killing field in a very mindless and senseless way.

So who could possibly oppose greater restriction of the sale of ammunition? I certainly can't. Most people I know couldn't oppose further restriction of ammunition sales. However, we do have to be mindful, and I think that the member for Ottawa West is mindful, that there are some constitutional challenges here.

We have, under the Criminal Code, provisions that deal with the sale of ammunition. Section 110 allows for reasonable conditions to be placed on ammunition permits. Section 94 prohibits the sale of ammunition to people of unsound mind, to people who appear to be influenced by alcohol or drugs or to people who are prohibited by the courts from possession of ammunition.

Under the regulations to the Explosives Act, dealers of ammunition are not permitted to sell to people under the age of 16 unless they have special permits for sustenance hunting; that is, hunting as a way of life.

We know there are problems when the province attempts to trench on federal jurisdiction. It's unfortunate that Bill C-17, rushed through by the former federal Conservative government, did not contain any amendments to the requirements for sale of ammunition. That would certainly have been laudable. We have to continue to urge our federal counterpart to change the law to restrict the sale of ammunition. It seems absurd to me that you require a firearms acquisition certificate to acquire a firearm, but you don't need an FAC to acquire ammunition.

Presently, the province does issue firearms ammunition permits to dealers, who are obliged to follow regulations that deal with safe storage, keeping sporting ammunition out of the hands of young people, and certainly there's customarily a criminal record search before those ammunition permits are distributed.

This bill does not deal with some of the concerns of the federation of anglers and hunters. How do we deal with farmers? How do we deal with target shooters? How do we deal, for example, with native people who the Supreme Court, in the Sparrow decision, indicated have a right to hunt and fish in their traditional areas? We need to address that as well. So there are a number of problems that need to be addressed with this bill.

As my time is short, I just want to deal with one other issue raised by the member for Ottawa West. That is the issue of mandatory imprisonment for use of a firearm during a crime under section 85 of the Criminal Code. I would alert the House and the people who watch the proceedings in this House to the fact that the crown law policy manual gives clear direction regarding the treatment of section 85 offences by prosecutors.

In all cases involving the use of a weapon or firearm, crown counsel are obliged to point out to the court that such involvement is an aggravating factor relevant to the issue of sentencing and should be reflected in a harsher sentence. In terms of plea bargains, the crown policy manual says that these plea bargains should not be the subject when section 85 is concerned.

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): I very much appreciate the opportunity to speak in favour of this bill. I agree with the member for Ottawa West that this is not a cure-all, it's not a major step, but it is I think an important step in helping reduce access to guns, which I think are the primary unfortunate player in violent crime in our communities.

I represent a community where concern and fear about violent crime is a daily unfortunate fact. I think of the people I represent in Regent Park, where last year there were seven shootings in seven weeks. Much of that, according to the police, is related to the drug trade and we need to do something about drug trafficking as well.

That kind of criminal activity on a consistent basis can do nothing but raise fears.

It's not isolated there. In the St Lawrence neighbourhood recently, there were unfortunately two violent incidents within a short period of time which have caused a lot of concern there. The members in Corktown and people involved in SOBRA, the Seaton Ontario Berkeley Residents' Association, the Carleton and Jarvis area, St James Town, Cabbagetown, areas all across the riding I'm proud to represent have a fear about what's happening in terms of crime.

I think this is an example of where we can say we're doing something. We are saying that we can do a little bit to reduce the amount of violent crime and the access to guns and, importantly, ammunition that is out there now, because we see that in the streets.

There are other initiatives we can support. Community policing and foot patrols: 51 Division has had a 33% cut in its foot patrol, which is clearly the most effective way to police the downtown community. It's a shock to me. I'm told that part of the reason there's been a cut in community policing in my riding is because of the social contract. It's unfortunate that an essential service like policing was not taken out of the social contract.

I think actually there's a good example of why we should support something like this ammunition bill. I have in the members' gallery Tanya Whiteside, who is my MPP for a day.

Applause.

Mr Murphy: Yes, by all means; please applaud her.

She was shocked to find out that she could walk into any store and buy ammunition. I wanted to pass that message on to the legislators here and hope that will encourage them to support this.

The member for London South expressed concern about constitutionality. I think there is clearly an overlapping jurisdiction here, but I have canvassed constitutional law lawyers on this issue who have indicated to me that there is a provincial jurisdiction and that there is room for provincial action in this area.

I see the member for Durham East shaking his head. I assume that means he disagrees with me, but it's so rare a thing, I'm shocked to see it. I'm sure the member for Durham East will show me his constitutional law degree in support of his conclusion. But I'm not a constitutional law lawyer and won't claim to be.

Interjection: You're an expert at everything, Gord.

Mr Murphy: Yes, the member for Durham East is an expert in most things, but I have talked to constitutional law lawyers and they indicate to me there is room for provincial action.

I want to say at this time that obviously we are debating this now to a certain degree because of that sense of random violence that has been connected to the unfortunate shooting in Ottawa and the unfortunate shooting in Toronto at the Just Desserts café. But while those focus much of public attention, it's not the only circumstance where those kinds of criminal shootings and criminal activities have occurred. There are many other circumstances which are continuing on a daily basis. As I think I indicated in the House the other day, between July and December 1993, 51 Division had 460 weapons offences. That's a shocking statistic to me, one which I think we need to do something about.

Finally, in the few seconds left to me, I want to repeat a message that I've mentioned before, that it's important that we as legislators understand that what we are trying to do is make communities safe for everyone. I think that, for example, in the last few weeks being a black youth in Toronto is a very difficult thing because of the way in which the issue played out. I want to express my sympathy, of course, to the family of Georgina Leimonis, but I think also that we have to ensure we don't add to the tension that's created, but that we say we're trying to make the city safe for everyone in it. I hope the government members and the Conservative members, including the always temperate member for Leeds-Grenville, will vote in favour of it.

I thank you for the opportunity to participate.

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): It's a privilege for me this morning to have the opportunity to say a few words on second reading of Bill 151.

I think every member of this Legislature will agree that we must find a way to stem the illegal trade of weapons and ammunition. A concerted effort must be made to prevent violent crimes and so provide safe streets and communities for the citizens of Ontario once again.

Under the leadership of Mike Harris, the Conservative Party has developed a comprehensive strategy to address the issue of crime and safety. Earlier this year, our party released a third edition of New Directions covering crime, justice and community safety. We are not doing something at the last minute on this subject. As my colleague from Leeds pointed out, we have been working with this task force going across the province of Ontario for almost a year and we have now compiled what I would suggest every member should read, volume three of our New Directions covering this subject.

In this policy book, we put before the people recommendations that will reduce crime, restore the rights of victims and make our streets safe. In our town hall meetings across the province, we listened to the people and we acted upon their advice. The people of Ontario told us that one of the best ways to reduce crime is through greater community involvement. This means giving the community an active stake in making their neighbourhoods safe. It is through community participation that we can find real solutions to the real problems of violent crime and the fear it generates.

Through this initiative, members of the community voluntarily buy into the notion of reducing the number of guns on our streets. This is the kind of initiative that will work.

This bill, however, does nothing to target the illegal weapons and ammunition trade. By making it illegal to purchase ammunition without an Outdoors Card, we will be bolstering the underground arms business. Those who have legitimate uses for ammunition will be forced to look to the underground market.

By trying to capture some headlines, the Liberal Party has sensationalized a serious issue and put forward a bill that is ineffective and ill-inspired. I wonder if the member for Renfrew North thought he was truly representing his constituents when he stood in this Legislature and railed against the freedom to purchase ammunition.

To force sporting gun users to acquire an Outdoors Card when they do not want to hunt is a ridiculous proposition. I have a letter here, that's been circulated, from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters:

"This bill, as drafted, will further restrict the legal law-abiding firearms owner but does little to address the illegal trade and traffic in firearms from the United States. Many federation members and other firearm owners do not possess either of these documents, yet remain law-abiding, safe firearm owners and users. Provisions must be made to allow target shooters, legal handgun shooters and those who use firearms to control predators and nuisance animals to purchase ammunition without an Outdoors Card or an FAC. At a minimum, a restricted weapons permit issued by the chief provincial firearms office must also be accepted as documentation."

I have many other reports here that I would like to read in, but the time is going by and I have other members who would like to speak on this.

In closing, I want to point out to the member introducing this bill that this is not a provincial jurisdiction. Violations in the purchase of ammunition are federal offenses. It would be an offence for the provincial government to set the fines which are in this legislation. We do not, as a provincial government, have the right to set these fines. It's a federal jurisdiction.

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I am very pleased to be able to stand in my place this morning and speak to the bill of my colleague across the floor.

I find it absolutely regrettable and repulsive that the member for Leeds-Grenville would interject and introduce some wild, partisan, neo-right-wing, Harris police state philosophy to the discussion here this morning.

We are here, I believe, as legislators—and it crosses all party lines—to do the best that we possibly can to reduce the crime, to reduce the tragedies that happen across this wonderful province of Ontario. For someone to get up and make some sort of political statement is absolutely—and I use this often, but it really fits today—diabolical, to introduce that statement.

If we talk about the Mike Harris strategy of dealing with crime with his crime force, I just would like to look at the statistics in the United States. They have built more prisons in an effort to contain their crime. It doesn't work. The crime in the United States, the number of killings with guns, is absolutely out of control and they have not contained this one little bit, although they insist on building more prisons and more facilities to lock people up from society. It doesn't work.

As to this meanness of the Conservative Party that they're going around the province with, I remind them that in the Thatcher era in England it produced the Thatcher children, and that's a legacy the English people are dealing with today in so far as thugs, crimes, criminals are concerned. It's all a social problem brought about in England by Thatcher.

Let's turn to the other neo-right-wing group they're trying to copy, the Reagan administration. We all saw what happened in the United States with the social programs, the cutting of the welfare and all those things. This is also a social issue, dealing with this crime. We saw on television the riots in Los Angeles, and heaven forbid if Ontario is heading into that way of thinking.

To get back to the bill which my colleague has issued, I'd just like to point out certain facts that probably we should understand.

First of all, I'd like to say that pursuant to sections 1 and 5 of the Criminal Code of Canada, the permit to sell ammunition is issued by the office of the chief provincial firearms officer, which is under the jurisdiction of the Attorney General. Subsection 110(11) of the Criminal Code allows for reasonable conditions to be placed on ammunition permits, and section 94 of the Criminal Code prohibits the sale of ammunition to a person who is of unsound mind, impaired by alcohol or drugs, or prohibited by the courts from possessing ammunition.

There are no further controls on ammunition sales under the Criminal Code. However, regulations under the federal Explosives Act prohibit the sale of ammunition to a person under the age of 16 unless that person has a permit under section 110(6) of the Criminal Code to possess firearms for the purpose of hunting as a way of life.

The control of the sale of ammunition, therefore, would appear—and I'm not a constitutional lawyer as my colleague from St George-St David suggested; I have a life experience of a lot of things, but that's not one of them—it would appear that the sale of ammunition will be a matter pertaining to criminal law, which falls under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

It would also likewise appear that any legislative action to further control the sale of ammunition has to be taken at the federal level. It's my understanding that a legal opinion is at this time being sought from the constitutional law section to see whether or not the province can pass any legislation at all in this area.

I just want to say that I endorse what the member said. I think we should do everything we can to stop this carnage in Ontario. If we have to get a program where we can get the arms so they can't be stolen, like an amnesty, we should do it. We should do what we can about the ammunition. We should do all we can in our power, and all parties, to make Ontario safe, to make our people safe and to take this frightful situation off the street.

In Canada, in Ontario, tragedies involving handguns continue, and we can't reduce that tragedy overnight, because most of the tragedies that happen are caused by unsafe usage of firearms, and we have statistics to support that.

But believe you me, I stand in my place supportive of any measure that we can do across non-partisan policies and positions to stop this sort of carnage that's happening in this wonderful province of Ontario that we all live in.

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): I would just like to indicate my full support for this particular piece of legislation. It is clear, as has been brought out numerous times, that when these tragedies in our communities occur many times they are as a result of the use of illegal guns, and certainly I support any measure which takes illegal guns off the streets.

But in all cases, the use of those illegal guns is with legally purchased ammunition. This is a piece of legislation which would go miles in terms of making certain that there is a restriction on who can purchase ammunition, and it is clear that the passage of this bill will make our communities safer.

I would implore all members of this Legislature to support this legislation as one which is in the best interests of our communities in making them safer and more secure.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I'm pleased to have a chance to place a few comments on the record about this bill today, An Act to control the Purchase and Sale of Ammunition, which has been brought before us for consideration by the member for Ottawa West. If passed, private member's Bill 151 would restrict the sale of ammunition to only those with a valid Outdoors Card, with the appropriate hunting licence or a valid firearms acquisition certificate.

What about the farmers out there, and the natives who don't have the Outdoors Card? What about the target shooters? What about the biathlon people who are involved in sports? While I support this bill in principle, I have some reservations with regard to the very intent and the purpose of the bill. I believe this bill was introduced as a knee-jerk reaction to the recent murder of a young woman in a Toronto restaurant, the recent drive-by killing of an innocent passerby in Ottawa and the recent slaying of a university student in Hamilton. The call for gun control is being led by the power media in these large urban communities. The responsible, gun-owning residents of small, rural communities are being swept up in the media-generated hype.

In a recent column in the Orillia Packet and Times, Jack Marshall, the former publisher of the Orillia daily newspaper, said, "Guns Are Toronto's Problems, Not Ours." Mr Marshall says: "Typically and predictably the only call the federal justice people are listening to is for more gun control. They are too frightened to contemplate greater penalties against criminals or greater police enforcement. So they go after the guns." Mr Marshall says, "We must send them to prison for long terms...."

In the articles I have read in the newspapers with regard to this bill, Mr Allan Rock, who is the Justice minister, indicates, "No Crime Crisis in Canada." This is the federal Liberal Justice minister saying that crime is not a problem, that society is still safe. Yet his own mother and father are telling him to do something about what they perceive as a less safe society.

The letter of the day in the Toronto Sun says, "The Honourable Allan Rock can enact the handgun prohibi-ition he favours and follow in the footsteps of Washington, DC, which banned the possession and sale of handguns in 1977." Yet in that very state there's been a 20% increase, and firearm robberies have increased by 96%. To say that to limit the amount of shells and people who can buy them is going to solve the problem will not do it.

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): Certainly violence and victims of crime are uppermost in everyone's mind today and have been for the last little while. This is a complex issue that we on all sides of the House must work together to address. It affects all of us.

Just last week, the mother of a murder victim spoke to a group of women in my city of Niagara Falls. For many years I have been involved with a feminist group in my city that is concerned about the causes of violence against women. One that they have been working on this past year is the effect of pornography. Certainly, there are a lot of factors contributing to this frightening violence that we are experiencing.

Attitudes of inequality are one of them. While women are unequal they will be victims. That's why such initiatives as employment equity, economic equality and political equality, having more women here in this House, will go towards that end.

Let me state the obvious: Women are victims of violence in our society and the use of guns is largely male. There are no easy answers, there are no quick solutions. Access to guns and ammunition is one avenue to pursue. That is why I will support this bill. We must look at the whole justice system. I am asking for justice for women. Our justice committee, which I sit on in this Legislature, has been working on a report over the last six months or more and some of the recommendations of that report are that victims be more aware of support services, that victims encounter long delays when being awarded compensation, that victims are not notified when offenders are released on parole and that victims do not have adequate counselling for court appearances. I could go on and on.

We must not use, as the Niagara Falls Review has said when speaking about the member for St Catharines, any opportunistic, political gamesmanship. This issue is far too serious. Our society in Ontario has been, and strives to be, a model to the whole world of living together with respect and tolerance. Our society is very precious to us.

I ask all members to look very carefully and to evaluate very carefully every possible solution to this complex problem. I want us to act here in this Legislature in a most responsible way, and I also want us to encourage and address the federal level. We know that they are involved, that we cannot do it alone, but we must do our part and we must lead the way.

One other item I might draw to your attention was in the Niagara Falls Review this past weekend, and it talks about a program called the victim-offender reconciliation program, in which the accused stands not only before a judge but stands before the victim to answer to the crime.

I ask all of us in this House to work together and to look at all avenues by which to address this very serious concern.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): I believe that the debate in the Legislature this morning on the bill that has been presented is an important debate. It is a part of the efforts of people in this Legislature over recent weeks to address what are very real concerns among people in our cities, people in communities across this province about the increased level of violence and their anxieties about the safety of our communities.

As we have raised these concerns in the Legislature repeatedly over recent weeks, I think we have all agreed that it is extremely important for legislators at all levels of government of all parties to be ready and willing to respond to the kinds of concerns and the kinds of anxieties that people in our communities are feeling.

We have asked the government if it would refer the issues of how we can deal more effectively with safety in our communities, with the safety of our streets, to the standing committee on justice issues so that we can indeed, as thoughtful and concerned legislators, discuss the issues, the many issues that have to be dealt with if we are going to provide that reassurance to people about the safety of our communities.

We would agree that this bill that is before the Legislature this morning is but one step in responding to what is a truly complex problem. But it is essential that we be prepared, clearly prepared, to act and to act in a way which is going to be effective, and that is why we present the bill in the Legislature this morning and that is why we urge the support of all parties for this bill, as one step in responding to those very legitimate concerns and very heightened anxieties that people are feeling right now.

This bill is but one step in dealing with a very complex problem. I was more than a little surprised to come into the House to speak to the bill and hear a member of the third party referring to it as a knee-jerk reaction. I simply don't think it's a knee-jerk reaction to be ready and willing to respond to varied concerns, very real concerns that people have.

Members of the third party are suggesting it's a Band-Aid reaction, and again, no one would pretend, would claim, that this one step is sufficient to address all the concerns that we have about violence and about crime. All of us would agree that it's a complex problem but that, again, we need to be prepared to take specific steps to respond to it.

We present this bill because we have discovered that as we talk about issues of gun control, as we talk about issues of dealing with the Young Offenders Act, there is absolutely no regulation, no restriction in the province of Ontario on who can buy bullets for guns. Under existing legislation, even somebody who is in possession of an illegal gun is able to buy ammunition legally, and that just simply does not make sense.

As we are more and more concerned about the incidence of gun-related crimes, as we recognize that greater gun control has to be one of the responses to the concern about gun-related crime, surely regulating the bullets that go into those guns has to be part of the action that we're prepared to take. It just does not make sense that people can use store-bought bullets in illegal guns, and this bill will limit the sale of ammunition to people who are legally entitled to own a firearm.

The bill clearly speaks to the ability to regulate this without a great additional bureaucracy, without costs, without difficulty to people who own legal firearms, because it would be possible to buy ammunition, for those who are legally able to own a firearm, by presenting a firearm certificate or an Outdoors Card. So this is relatively easy to implement.

Again I say that obviously the bill alone will not deal with the problem of violent crime, it will not deal with the proliferation of guns on our streets. We recognize that the problem with gun-related crime is indeed illegal weapons, illegal guns, and that there is going to have to be a very active effort to deal with the possession of illegal guns, with the smuggling of guns into the province and into the country. We also know that we're going to have to make a very concerted effort to deal not with just being tougher on crime after it has been committed, but to deal with crime prevention.

The member for Niagara Falls has spoken about a particular concern with increased violence that she brings, and that is violence against women. We share that as one of the concerns we have about increased violence in our communities. We have presented a number of very specific resolutions that we believe would be part of responding to the concern about increased violence against women.

We have urged that there be a regulation on the distribution and sale of killer cards. We have urged that this government take action to deal with the availability of slasher films, which we believe incite violence against women. We urged last week in the Legislature that there be action taken to put in place a central registry for dangerous offenders. We believe this would be one more step in ensuring that our communities and our streets are safer.

We all have to sit down and talk about all the responses that have to be made if we are in fact to do what is necessary to provide for greater safety in our communities.

I am gratified by the fact that the federal government clearly recognizes the urgency of this issue. I had an opportunity yesterday to meet with the federal Justice minister, and he is clearly prepared to take action on the issues of the Young Offenders Act and gun control and, as well, to go beyond that and talk about how at all levels of government we can work to bring about, in an integrated way, a focus on crime prevention, because he recognizes the need for a comprehensive approach. He is also prepared to look at whether or not there is a federal application of the bill which we present before the provincial Legislature today so that in fact it may be possible to regulate the sale of ammunition across the country. We believe that would also be a very positive step forward.

In the meantime, we have before us a piece of legislation which allows us as a provincial Legislature to take a clear and decisive step to assure people that we are ready to deal with their concerns. I would urge the members of this Legislature to recognize that this is a positive step, to be prepared to support it and to be prepared then to sit down in committee and discuss what more we can do to respond to what has clearly become an increased concern of people in communities across the province of Ontario.

We would urge that there be support for the legislation that's before the House today. We would urge that there be further discussion in committee as to how this legislation can be proceeded with as quickly as possible so that it can be enacted into law. We would urge as well that the government act very quickly on a referral of concerns for violence and for crime and for the safety of our communities to the standing committee on justice issues so that other steps can be considered and can be acted on very quickly.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The member for Grey-Owen Sound.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): Thank you, Mr Speaker, for the time to speak on this ill-conceived, Band-Aid approach by the Liberals on a very serious concern. This concern is great, I know, but the Liberals just have a Band-Aid approach to it. What they're really doing is hurting the citizens who are honest.

What they're doing is attacking rural Ontario. What they should be doing is getting tough on criminals, not worrying about a Band-Aid approach which won't solve anything. If they think this will stop the criminals from getting bullets, they're really misguided and don't know what they're talking about.

Also, I have a letter from our Tourism critic. "What about from the sports angle? Biathlon athletes who are under 18 years of age may have more difficulty in practising their sport because they won't be able to get bullets." They won't have an Outdoors Card. They won't have a hunting card; they don't hunt.

This is a really ill-conceived bill by the Liberals just to gain some publicity.

The Deputy Speaker: There are 19 seconds, member for Durham West.

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I rise simply to commend the member opposite for bringing forth this bill and to say that while it is important to bring up this discussion, I am very shocked to hear of the opposition to this issue. It's an important issue regarding violence in our community.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Scarborough North, you have 57 seconds.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): I want to add my support to this bill. It is of extreme importance. Take away the partisan point of view and talk about a community that needs to be safe for children, for families. As our leader, Lyn McLeod, stated, this is a start. Of course this is not going to resolve all the crime within our community; it's a start. It's extremely important that we lend support to this, and if it is short in some respects, that all members of the House add their support in respect to having a safe community. We are extremely concerned and we shall not play football with it. We just hope, for the safety of our children, our families, our wives, our husbands, whoever they are, that we proceed with this bill to have a safe community.

Mr Chiarelli: I was quite surprised at the response of the member for Leeds-Grenville. It was extremely partisan, and there seemed to be a tenor that the Progressive Conservative Party owns this issue. Well, the people of Canada and the people of Ontario own this issue, and they will be very angry with elected officials who try to make this a partisan issue and take ownership of it.

I respect the Conservative Party for having conducted its task force and for its bill of rights, but people don't want task forces any more, they don't want bills of rights any more. They want governments to act to make our communities safer.

I would encourage the third party, the Conservative Party, to take a more non-partisan tack with this particular bill. Indeed, if the member for Leeds-Grenville wants to put his name in place of mine or Mr Murphy's on the bill, let him be my guest, and we'll go and debate his bill. But action is required.

With respect to the member for Lanark-Renfrew, he talks about illegal import of arms. The association of hunters and anglers talks about the importation of illegal arms. They're absolutely right: The federal government has to take action in these particular areas.

But when they speak of this bill being a knee-jerk reaction, maybe there's a knee-jerk reaction on the other side. When anybody in Ontario wants to go for an X-ray or to visit a doctor, they have to show a card. All we're saying now is if they want to go and buy bullets, which can kill people and be put in illegal guns, we want them to show a card. Perhaps the knee-jerk reaction is the person who doesn't want to try to make our communities safer by identifying themselves and their weapons when they buy bullets.

TENANTS ON SOCIAL ASSISTANCE LOCATAIRES SUR L'AIDE SOCIALE

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): We will deal first with ballot item number 49, standing in the name of Mr Bisson. If any members are opposed to a vote on this ballot item, will they please rise?

Mr Bisson has moved private member's resolution number 38. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

AMMUNITION CONTROL ACT, 1994 LOI DE 1994 SUR LA RÉGLEMENTATION DES MUNITIONS

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): We will now deal with ballot item number 50, standing in the name of Mr Chiarelli. If any members are opposed to a vote on this ballot item, will they please rise?

Mr Chiarelli has moved second reading of Bill 151, An Act to control the Purchase and Sale of Ammunition.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

Pursuant to standing order 94(k), the bill is referred to the committee of the whole House.

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): Mr Speaker, I believe a majority of the members wish Bill 151 referred to the standing committee on administration of justice.

The Deputy Speaker: The standing committee on justice.

All those in favour will please rise.

All those opposed will please rise.

The majority of the House being in agreement with the request of the member for Ottawa West, this bill stands referred to the standing committee on justice.

All the private members' business issues have been debated. I will now leave the chair and the House will resume at 1:30 this afternoon.

The House recessed from 1207 to 1330.

NORTHERN HEALTH SERVICES

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming): Tuesday evening I attended a town hall meeting in Sudbury to discuss the crisis in health care in that city and in northeastern Ontario. The main problem seems to be that, while Sudbury is recognized as the health care centre for northeastern Ontario, the government doesn't seem to be willing to put the resources into Sudbury to get the job done.

There are several reasons this is happening. One is that the Ministry of Health is using inaccurate data to make these health care decisions. The ministry insists that Sudbury has 145 full-time, active general practitioners in the district. This would more than meet the established standards, but in actual fact there are only 79 GPs in Sudbury.

The ministry in its list lumps in specialists, full-time emergency doctors, retirees, part-timers, PG trainees and others. I find this incredible, but that is what the ministry has done. Therefore, there are from 8,000 to 12,000 people in the Sudbury region without a family physician.

Not only are waiting lists for doctors growing, but the doctors who are there are burning out and leaving at an alarming rate. Because of the inaccurate data, the ministry will not declare the Sudbury area an underserved area, which would provide incentives for more doctors to locate there.

There is also a shortage of specialists, and that is causing a six- to eight-month waiting time compared to 30 days in southern Ontario. The catch here is that the rules of the health travel program prevent a patient being referred to southern Ontario if there is the appropriate specialist in the north. Therefore, patients in northeastern Ontario are being denied timely access to specialized physicians.

This is a serious problem. It's not only affecting the people in Sudbury but those in all of northeastern Ontario, the 600,000 people who call northern Ontario their home.

EARTH DAY

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): Tomorrow communities across Ontario, Canada and 91 countries around the world will be celebrating Earth Day in their communities. Earth Day has become an opportunity for individuals and businesses to look at what they are doing for the environment and what steps could be taken to improve the situation.

Businesses normally are pointed at as major abusers of our environment. I am pleased to be able to announce that many of our corporate partners have acted in a proactive way to ensure that Ontarians are given an opportunity to help the environment and save our valuable resources.

The Ontario brewing industry has been committed to reuse since 1927 when it offered customers their first two-four of refillable beer bottles. Through the Beer Store, consumers are returning over 90% of their beverage containers for reuse.

The notable part of these initiatives is that the Ontario brewing industry has made these moves without government legislation or regulation. The people of Ontario have chosen to return their containers because of the cost advantage to do so and because it gives us an opportunity to do something positive for the environment, not because Big Brother will fine us or take away our right to drink beer.

Environmental initiatives such as the one initiated by the Ontario brewing industry work, and work well, because they are initiated by the industry, supported through positive advertising campaigns by the industry and supported by consumers. The old adage of, "You can lead a horse to water but you can't force him to drink," rings true when it comes to the government trying to force society to change in a way it is uncomfortable with.

ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I'd like to use my 90 seconds today to speak about the upcoming celebrations to recognize the 50th anniversary of D-Day. On June 6, 1944, the Allied Forces landed on the European mainland in one of the most brilliantly conceived and almost faultlessly executed offensives in the history of modern warfare.

Here in Toronto plans are in the process to recognize D-Day in an unforgettable manner. A parade featuring over 1,500 veterans will march from Nathan Phillips Square to Union Station where the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, His Honour Hal Jackman, and the Premier of the province of Ontario, the Honourable Bob Rae, will take the salute.

A fly-past of vintage aircraft and a drive-past of vintage military vehicles will also be part of these celebrations. The parade will culminate at Ontario Place at HMCS Haida, followed by a concert in the Forum at Ontario Place.

I urge all veterans watching today to keep Sunday, June 5, 1994, open on their calendar. I also encourage them to come to Toronto and be part of the celebrations. More details of this event will unfold nearer the day, and they will be announced in time to ensure the maximum participation by all.

EARTH DAY

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): I rise today to commemorate a very important occasion that is going to be taking place not only all this week but especially tomorrow. What I am speaking to is Earth Week, and tomorrow marks the 24th anniversary of Earth Day, an internationally recognized event which provides all of us with an opportunity to renew our commitment to protecting and preserving the natural environment today and for future generations.

To celebrate Earth Day thousands of people in Ontario will be taking part in a variety of events: tree planting activities, green marches and the cleanup of park areas.

Earth Day, and this Earth Week, is important. It is a time where we rededicate ourselves to the maintenance and improvement of our environment. Community groups, business groups, school children, all will be taking a vibrant and vital part in recognizing Earth Day through a myriad of exciting events.

Earth Day allows us to specifically recognize the importance of our environment but also to remember that our environment requires a commitment not only for one day of the year but indeed for every day of each year. It is a commitment that is shared by all. I would like to congratulate all who are going to be taking part in Earth Day tomorrow and celebrating this Earth Week.

OTTAWA-CARLETON LEGISLATION

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): Congratulations to the city of North York for launching the economic development campaign Open for Business. North York understands the need to work with the business community to create a favourable climate for economic growth, jobs and increased assessment.

The borough of East York has encouraged economic development and job creation by eliminating all planning and development charges for industrial and commercial development and renovation. The public demands government that is more efficient but less costly and less bureaucratic.

Therefore, it is with regret that I consider the municipalities of Ottawa-Carleton region, which with the passage of Bill 143 will lose the fundamental right to direct their economic development.

But this is not the only failure of this bill. It will take away local representation from the regional government, including the local mayors, thereby establishing a government structure susceptible to confrontation. It will cause the loss of community-based policing.

Most important, the government has provided no financial analysis or evidence to demonstrate that the new government and the new police structure will save money or use tax dollars more efficiently. Indeed, those who were permitted to speak, before closure silenced all voices, indicated their overwhelming concern that the government cost would escalate.

No pricetag, no answers. Welcome, Ottawa-Carleton, to Bob Rae's Ontario.

MEMBERS' HOCKEY GAME

Mr Mike Cooper (Kitchener-Wilmot): I rise today with an invitation for all members of this Legislature and all individuals who enjoy hockey and wish to support a worthy cause. Tonight the Ontario Legiskaters will play hockey against the Carpenters Union Local 27, with all proceeds going to the Children's Wish Foundation of Canada.

The Ontario Legiskaters is a non-partisan team that has travelled to various areas in this province to assist in fund-raising events. These games are thoroughly enjoyed by all individuals who attend. It provides communities with an opportunity to meet not only their local MPP but also MPPs from across the province. MPPs are also given the opportunity to travel into their colleagues' ridings.

I encourage all of my colleagues to come out and support a worthy cause and to have fun doing it. I extend this invitation to everyone in the Toronto and surrounding area, the members of the press gallery and individuals of the Legislative Assembly. We look forward to seeing all of you there.

I would like to take the opportunity to thank all of the individuals who have worked so hard to make this event such a success: Maggie Yen from the Carpenters Union Local 27 training centre and Barb Dolan from my office.

Speaker, I encourage you and everyone else to come out and join our fund-raising efforts this evening. We are fortunate that the Maple Leafs played and won last evening so we are not in competition with their game this evening. Rather than spending an evening without hockey, come out and enjoy our game. The game is being played tonight at 7 pm at St Michael's Arena, 1515 Bathurst Street at St Clair Avenue.

Thank you, Speaker. We'll see you at the game.

VIOLENCE

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): Yesterday in the House of Commons federal Justice minister Allan Rock tabled draft legislation to prohibit the sale and distribution of serial killer trading cards to children under the age of 18 years.

Let me tell you, Mr Speaker, it is a good thing that the federal Liberal government has taken action to protect the women and children of this province, because we certainly can't count on the Ontario government or the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to act on our behalf.

Members are aware that last July, almost one year ago, I introduced a private member's bill to ban the sale of these hideous cards to our children in Ontario. Since that time, the only thing we have heard from Minister Marilyn Churley is excuses as to why she can't take action. She told us she had no jurisdiction to control retail sales. Imagine this coming from a minister who had no authority to regulate casinos but did not hesitate to use that power.

The minister had the power to enact legislation on serial killer trading cards; she just didn't have the will. The minister could have taken jurisdiction, just like her government has done in countless other areas. Instead she chose to opt out of protecting the interests of the children of this province.

The issue of combating violence is too important to get sidetracked by intergovernmental disputes over who has jurisdiction. We must all work together and take responsibility. I urge the minister to take responsibility for combating violence against women and children in this province.

VOLUNTEERS

Mr Chris Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Last night I had the pleasure of attending a volunteer appreciation dinner at which the Victoria County Association for Community Living and Victoria County Community Care honoured some very special citizens from my riding.

These individuals have demonstrated their commitment to total community citizenship through the many caring tasks they perform for the good of others. Volunteers play a proactive role in assisting people with developmental handicaps, seniors and special-needs clients of all ages to participate fully in community life.

Volunteers from these two associations are responsible for numerous important tasks, including providing companionship to elderly in their homes, a diners' club, one-on-one support, recreation and leisure activities, providing transportation and delivering meals on wheels.

Volunteerism is not a job; it's a commitment. The people I saw being honoured last night do the work they do because they truly enjoy it and each and every one of them is committed to serving others.

In these difficult economic times, and especially with government funding becoming more and more scarce, it is encouraging to see people freely sharing their time, experience and patience with others.

I would also like to recognize the generosity of the Moose Lodge in Lindsay for donating 275 dinners for last night's celebration.

I'm happy to say that compassion and caring for others and community pride are all alive and well in the riding of Victoria-Haliburton.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr Donald Abel (Wentworth North): I rise today to speak about taming a killer. I am referring to the infamous killer highway, the stretch of Highway 6 between Highways 403 and 401. Since 1989, as a result of over 200 accidents, at least 21 people have died and dozens more have been injured in the 24-kilometre stretch of highway each year. During that five-year span, all 21 fatalities were caused by human error. Of course, speeding was the number one cause.

In the very near future photo-radar will become a reality on Ontario's 400-series highways. The project is designed to save lives, reduce injuries and cut the cost of collisions each year in this province. It has been proven to reduce speeding and fatalities in other jurisdictions around the world. In Australia, for example, fatalities had been reduced by 30% three years after the technology was introduced.

In an attempt to tame the killer, I ask the Minister of Transportation to consider extending the use of photo-radar to the deadly stretch of highway on Highway 6. The killer highway has carved its notoriety with a heavy hand. We have the tools to reduce the number of accidents and deaths. We have to act responsibly.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

HEALTH ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT WEEK

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): Today I'd like to tell the House about our second annual Health

Economic Development Week, which began on Monday. This is the week we spotlight one of the most promising sectors of the Ontario economy, our health industry sector, a sector that employs 40,000 Ontarians who manufacture and provide health care products and services.

The timing for Health Economic Development Week couldn't be better, because just last month the health industry's advisory committee submitted to me a sector development strategy. This strategy, called Healthy and Wealthy: A Growth Prescription for Ontario's Health Industries, outlines a plan for economic growth and job creation. I'm impressed with the strategy's forward-looking and creative attitude towards economic development and I can tell the House that my enthusiasm is shared by my cabinet colleagues.

That's why I'm happy to tell you today—and, I might add, in record time—that the government will be proceeding with many of the committee's recommendations. Growth and job creation in the health industries sector is a high priority for this government, and I will soon have other announcements to make on the specific details for implementing the advisory committee's strategy.

The members of the advisory committee contributed a great deal of time and effort to develop the health industries strategy. It's a joint effort of four industries: pharmaceutical, medical devices, biotechnology and private health services. In addition, labour, medical researchers, health care providers and health care consumers are on the committee.

I'd like to introduce to the House some of the members of the advisory committee who are here in the gallery today and allow members to thank them for their hard work.

Bill Blundell chaired the committee and is the former CEO and chairman of General Electric Canada and currently the chair of the Wellesley Hospital. Glenn Buchanan, national representative of the Communications, Energy and Paperworkers Union of Canada, represented labour. Gerry Turner of Mount Sinai Hospital, Ed Rygiel of MDS and Hans Kunov of the University of Toronto are also members of the committee. I'm sure members would want to acknowledge the work they've done for the province.

Applause.

Hon Mrs Grier: The advisory committee has many innovative initiatives. These include plans to increase Ontario exports. The global market for health sector products and services will be more than $500 million—$500 billion; I get my letters wrong—by the end of the decade. Ontario's share of this market is much too small and explains why Canada has a trade deficit in health products of more than $2 billion. We need and can do better and, as the report points out, there is no reason why we can't.

The companies that are taking part in Health Economic Development Week range in size from 25 employees to 5,900. To help kick off the week, on Monday I visited the headquarters of MDS Health Group Ltd. At MDS I untied a ribbon to celebrate its 25th anniversary. MDS is not only an exporter of medical supplies to more than 100 countries; it's also an important provider of venture capital to new companies and new technologies. And MDS employs 5,900 people.

I also visited Livingston Healthcare Services, where I saw an important new paperless system for reducing hospital inventory costs.

Tomorrow I'll be at three more companies: Astra Pharma, a growing brand-name pharmaceutical company; Unitron Industries of Kitchener, a hearing aid manufacturer; and Resource Management Consultants, a company with 25 years of experience in health strategy and facilities planning around the world. The health industries strategy addresses the needs of every size and type of company at every stage of development.

Our government is the first to recognize the importance of health industries to the health care system. The health industries sector contributes to the health of Ontarians by providing high-value-added jobs to our people.

A recent study found that physical and psychological stress associated with unemployment costs Canada $1 billion a year in extra health care costs. It's clear that our physical wellbeing depends on our economic and social wellbeing, and that's why job creation is a health issue as well as an economic development issue.

As the advisory committee's report says, "We must succeed in this endeavour because a society that fails to create good jobs for its people is not a healthy place to live." I hope that by raising public awareness of the importance of health industries, Health Economic Development Week will be a step towards building a healthier Ontario.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Responses?

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): Frankly, we had expected today an announcement with respect to the governance of the ambulance system, long-term care, capital infusion into the cancer system, dialysis infusion or perhaps even the emergency on-call situations that are faced in many communities across Ontario.

We have, however, a positive announcement with respect to Health Economic Development Week. I believe the advisory committee report was in fact well received. It certainly recognized that the underwriting of the manufacture of bedpans was not the way to go in terms of developing the health economic contribution to the general economy of Ontario.

The report also recognized that in this province we have the technological expertise and the technological development base to serve not only Ontarians and other Canadians but, as well, people in other jurisdictions and in fact be a tool for export development. We know there is a high value added in the health care sector that's significant in our own economy, and it's clear that value added can be substantially increased.

This announcement celebrates the naming of a week, but unfortunately we see no other indication of government action associated with the health economic recommendations that were placed by the committee. I suggest to the minister that she could look at the Orders and

Notices paper, at resolution 37, where I have called for the creation of an Ontario health research council as a crown agency that could coordinate health research and development activities in Ontario and lever public- and private-sector-coordinated dollars not only to do the clinical, basic and biomedical research but also to create an option for development that could move our products more quickly into an international market.

I ask the minister why there isn't a particular policy from the Ministry of Health whereby new developing technologies that are coming out of Ontario operations are given preference for capital purchase in, for example, our hospitals. It's very difficult, if one has developed a major new technology or device, to market that project to the Mayo if you can't even sell it to the Sunnybrook hospital or to the Toronto Hospital. That has to be a significant factor in the development of our economic health policies.

I also suggest to the minister that there are deep concerns in the pharmaceutical industry, among manufacturers, with respect to the government's approach to that sector. Many have indeed suggested that the government should have a look at the Australian initiatives which recognize the economic contribution to society as well as the development of the pharmaceutical products. That suggestion has been put forward, I know, to people in the ministry on more than one occasion. They also refer not only to the Australian initiatives but to the Quebec initiatives, and virtually every pharmaceutical manufacturer located in Ontario will tell me they don't feel awfully welcome here, particularly with this government, but they do feel awfully welcome in Quebec.

I also suggest that while the minister has recognized and visited MDS Health Group over the last couple of days, just to use one example, the recognition of that particular company's involvement in health innovation through venture capital funds is one to be admired and encouraged. Not only MDS, but other groups that have placed investment in biomedical research and technological development have added more to capital and economic development in the health care sector than this government itself has. The government should perhaps look at where and how it can assist the private sector, which is already taking extremely strong stands, to indeed increase those stands.

To encourage investment here, we must have consistent policies that show that Ontario welcomes the investment and will create the environment and the atmosphere for that investment to take place. We have seen over the past period of time with this government threats against the private sector's involvement in health care, from the home care to laboratory services to ambulance services to the nursing home sector, and frankly those examples turn business off rather than welcome it.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I'm pleased to spend a few minutes to respond to the minister's announcement.

I think we're seeing, and all members of the House should be aware that we're seeing, the great conversion on the road to Damascus. We have a government that has done everything it can to drive the private sector out of the delivery and development of health care in this province, everything it possibly could in its three and a half years in office. If you take the home care and the long-term care sector, they've stated time and time again their preference for the not-for-profit sector.

If they had their way—we know they did a study, but they found out it cost too much money, that they couldn't buy out the capital stock of nursing homes. Unfortunately for them and their ideology, they had to abandon that. Fortunately for the people of Ontario, we continue to have a choice in our long-term care sector, and when a Mike Harris government gets in, we're going to restore the balance between the private sector and the not-for-profit sector in this province.

We look at the pharmaceutical sector, and the minister, on her conversion road here today, finally talks about visiting some pharmaceutical manufacturers. Well, my party has visited with health officials in the province of Quebec. We've learned from them why they've been so successful in taking jobs from Ontario and in attracting jobs from around the world for the pharmaceutical industry.

Do you know what they did? There wasn't money exchanged. It was simply that the pharmaceutical industry asked the Quebec government for an understanding that health care must become part of the economic engine that drives the economy, and the Quebec government said: "Yes, we'll do that. And you know what we'll do for you so you'll have comfort and stability in locating and creating jobs in our province?" They said they would not pass any legislation or regulations or more red tape until they threw it by the pharmaceutical industry and asked how it impacted on their industry.

So today, in the honourable Russ Williams's riding around the city of Montreal, we have the development and the encouragement of the pharmaceutical manufacturing companies in this country. Ontario's got to get on the bandwagon with that and actually start dealing with economic development.

The minister heard me on Saturday talk about a new vision for hospitals, that rather than running around talking about closing hospitals, we should have a new vision for hospitals in this province. She heard me say it at the Catholic Health Association of Ontario. I've been saying it for three years. Hospitals shouldn't be closed: We should be taking that empty space, using the infrastructure that's in place and making complete health care centres out of those institutions, welcoming into those institutions independent health care facilities for dialysis, welcoming chiropractors and doctors to take up offices in those institutions; to pay rent and overhead to the hospital boards so we can keep those beds open.

This government has done everything to demoralize pharmacies and pharmacists in this province. Their smoking legislation will lead to bankruptcies, and soon, rather than developing health care in this province, they're going to find themselves in court with the pharmacies in this province.

The NDP ideology, when it brought out the Swimmer report, wanted to take over the ambulance sector in this province. If they had their way and if they had the money—and thank God they don't have the money in this case—they'd have taken over the private sector ambulance operators in this province.

I do want to thank the members of the health industry's advisory committee. I want to thank them for the work, and I have one message for them today: Stay alive till 1995, when a government that understands business and economic development in this province is elected and able to implement your very good recommendations in this report.

The minister mentions that she went out on Monday to MDS. Mike Harris and I were at MDS last year, the year before, and we were there again this year. We understand what companies like MDS want in this province, and we understand that this government has been nothing but a barrier to creating jobs in the health care field.

Our caucus has spoken to and had presentations from Dr Fraser Mustard, and if there's one lesson that all of us need to understand in this Legislature, it's that the best thing you can do for the health care of the people of this province is to give people the opportunity for employment in this province. Jobs are the best thing we could do. After three and a half years of doing everything they can to destroy jobs in this province, the minister finally recognizes that unemployment creates stress and that it has an effect on our health care budgets. It more than creates stress; it robs individuals of the only dignity a government should be trying to provide: the dignity that comes with a job.

Yes, Minister, health care should be an economic engine that drives this province. It should be part of your economic development strategy. You've got to get together with the Minister of Economic Development and Trade to create that strategy and respond to the recommendations in this report. You'd better do that, Minister, or more people are going to lose their jobs and more Ontarians are going to move south of the border.

Hon Elaine Ziemba (Minister of Citizenship): I believe there's unanimous agreement to make a statement on the occasion of the Order of Ontario investiture.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

ORDER OF ONTARIO

Hon Elaine Ziemba (Minister of Citizenship): The Order of Ontario is the highest and most prestigious award this province gives to its citizens. It recognizes people who have demonstrated excellence and achievement of the highest degree in any field of endeavour and whose contributions have enriched the lives of others and the betterment of their communities.

Last night, in an impressive and emotional ceremony, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor invested 16 outstanding Ontarians to the order this year. They were chosen from approximately 120 nominations by an advisory council comprising Mr Speaker Warner and the secretary of cabinet and clerk of the executive council, David Agnew. The advisory council is chaired by the Honourable Charles Dubin, the Chief Justice of Ontario.

It is with great pleasure that I read the names of the new inductees into the record. They are:

—Dr Prasanta Kumar Basu of Unionville, for his achievements in ophthalmic research at the University of Toronto, establishing Canada's first eye bank, and writing Bengali literature.

—Lorna de Blicquy of Dunrobin, for pioneering and significantly advancing the rights of women in the field of aviation.

—M. Joan Chalmers of Toronto, for supporting and bringing greater recognition to culture in Ontario, particularly crafts and the performing and fine arts.

—Martin Connell of Toronto, for his work as a businessman and philanthropist in Canada and developing countries.

—Elsie Cressman of Kitchener, for being a pioneer in midwifery in Canada and overseas, and for founding the St Jacob's Family Birthing Home.

—Selma Edystone of Toronto, for launching Interlink, a program that brings seniors and children together through words and music.

—Nicolas Goldschmidt of Toronto, for his achievements as a conductor, singer, teacher, pianist, administrator and musical entrepreneur.

—J. Conrad Lavigne of Timmins, for creating the Mid-Canada Television System and introducing French-language broadcasting to Ontario.

—Donald C. MacDonald of Toronto, for his 27 years as an MPP and building and leading the CCF and New Democratic parties into strong political entities.

—Ed Mirvish of Toronto, for extraordinary charitable contributions and entrepreneurial achievements in business and the entertainment industry.

—Phillip Nimmons of Thornhill, for being a leader in the Canadian jazz scene for more than 40 years and for being an inspiration to young musicians.

—K. George Pedersen of London, for an outstanding career as an educator and university administrator.

—Ronald Satok of Toronto, for founding the Satok School of the Arts, which enhances the lives of artists with disabilities and helps to bring public attention to their work.

—Dr Nelles Silverthorne of Toronto, for being a pioneer in preventive medicine and developing the first whooping cough vaccine and treatment for meningitis.

—Elizabeth Thorn of North Bay, for achievements as an educator at schools in northern Ontario, particularly native schools and the University of Nipissing.

—Dr Bryan Walls of Windsor, for his contributions to increasing public awareness of black Canadian history in Ontario.

Three other inductees, Martha Henry, Flora MacDonald and Ted Nolan, were unable to attend last night's ceremony and will be invested in the order at a later date.

On behalf of the government of Ontario, I certainly wish to offer my congratulations and sincere thanks to all the recipients for their contribution to Ontario society, ever building the fabric that makes up this wonderful province of ours.

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): I'd like to join with the minister on behalf of the Liberal caucus and my leader, Lyn McLeod, in congratulating the 16 wonderful Ontarians who were given the Order of Ontario last night.

I had the privilege and honour of attending the ceremony. It was a wonderful, moving experience. We were sitting down on the main floor looking up on the stairs as the people received their order. We were looking up at them, frankly, in all ways.

It's an incredible litany of accomplishment these 16 people have made to our province, and that set of accomplishments, rather than diminishing us in comparison, ennobles all of us and charges us with the responsibility of doing our job better.

I remember former Premier Bill Davis used to talk about politics as the art of the possible. In some ways, these 16 people have shown us the art of the impossible. It's an incredible set of things these people have done.

I don't want to single anyone out, but I will talk about three in particular as examples because they, I am proud to say, are constituents of the great riding of St George-St David. I wish the fact that three of them are from my riding reflected on the quality of the member, but I think they reflect instead on the quality of the people in the riding and in the province. I particularly want to note Joan Chalmers, Martin Connell and Ronald Satok just as examples of the kind of people we are honouring.

Joan Chalmers was a founding director of Harbourfront, founder of two Chalmers buildings, in fact, founder of numerous crafts councils, the Glenn Gould Foundation, Young People's Theatre and many others too numerous to mention.

Martin Connell, many people will know, president of Conwest, is also the founder of Calmeadow, which provides low-interest loans to aboriginal peoples, the Imagine campaign in the Canadian Centre for Philanthropy, a founding director of the Festival of Festivals, and is currently president of a program providing low-interest loans to Latin Americans.

Finally, Ronald Satok is an artist who in the middle of his life lost his eyesight, unfortunately, but used that to create an opportunity to start a school of art for people with disabilities and has had a tremendous career in doing so and has been a model for people.

These are but three of the 16 we honoured who have made a contribution to the life of this province that calls us to do a better job in this House, and I for one would say two words to them. Thank you very much.

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): I too am pleased to rise and join with the minister in the great celebration that takes place on an annual basis with the Order of Ontario awards. We single out excellence. We single out the best in giving to community, to neighbourhood, to province, the volunteerism of those who go beyond themselves and their families and immediacy to so many others.

I wanted particularly to have been there last night. Unfortunately, those in the Legislature know I was called home to a funeral yesterday in North Bay and had to cancel being at the ceremony last night.

Nothing epitomizes more what we want to celebrate than the individuals who were honoured on an annual basis and those who were honoured last night. Again, it's difficult to single out individuals, but it's hard for me not to mention a couple who have been friends over the years.

Certainly Conrad Lavigne, who has done so much throughout northeastern Ontario in broadcasting, is mentioned as a pioneer in French-language broadcasting. He was a pioneer in broadcasting in general, in bringing northeastern Ontario up to date, if you like, in television and in the media in both languages, with particular emphasis in the French language.

It's also hard for me not to mention Flora MacDonald, who blazed so many trails for so many politicians to follow, both women and men, probably, I think all would agree, in a spirit of non-partisanship that even today we can only envy of her and her time in politics.

I would be remiss, of course, if I didn't mention Elizabeth Thorn, who is acknowledged, I saw in one of the write-ups, in northern Ontario for the impact she has had in education. But indeed Elizabeth Thorn is far better known around the world than she is in North Bay, than she is in northern Ontario. She is far better known by academics, where she is constantly invited to speak and to lecture all over the world. In fact, she is one of those living examples where she is appreciated for her excellence and leadership around the world perhaps even more than at home, and is of particular interest to me because she happened to be one of my teachers a few years ago—maybe it's a good thing she isn't here because this dates her a tad—when I was in teachers' college. She was at the leading edge at that time as publisher, author and lecturer on early childhood education, particularly in the language arts.

On behalf of my caucus, but indeed—this is one of those non-partisan moments—on behalf of all Ontarians, let me offer congratulations to those awarded the Order of Ontario last night.

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): I would like to announce to the House that this is the last day our young pages are spending with us. They have been a dedicated crew. They've worked extremely hard, always with a beautiful smile. We are sorry to see you go, but we wish you all the best. Make sure that you study hard.

Join with me in giving them a warm round of applause.

Applause.

The Deputy Speaker: I would also like to thank you for your excellent cooperation yesterday in keeping your questions short and to the point, and your responses brief. Let's keep it up that way.

ORAL QUESTIONS

JOBS ONTARIO TRAINING

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My first question is to the Minister of Education and Training. Minister, once again there is new evidence that your $1-billion Jobs Ontario Training program is not working.

I know that you are probably concerned about the investigation of Jobs Ontario Training that W5 will be presenting tonight, but I want to talk to you today about a recent report at Metro council which showed that the program in Metropolitan Toronto has reached less than 30% of its target in finding jobs for unemployed men and women. In Metro Toronto, only 5,700 people have been placed in jobs and, Minister, this is clearly well short of the goal of 20,000 placements that you had set.

In fact, the chair of Metro's community social services committee, which oversees Metro's role in the Jobs Ontario Training program, has said: "This program has not created more work for unemployed people. It has created more work for bureaucrats."

Minister, now that the people who deliver the Jobs Ontario Training program for you are saying that it just doesn't work, will you finally admit that the program is a failure? Why are you continuing to put money into a program which is doing nothing to help people get back to work?

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): I can recall, just a couple of weeks ago, comments from Metro Toronto officials to Metro council indicating that the program was in fact showing very significant signs of success in Metropolitan Toronto, that it actually was having a substantial impact on the welfare costs here in Metropolitan Toronto. So I guess you can pick and choose what you want to quote.

The fact of the matter is that statistics still show that there have been tens of thousands of training positions and jobs created as a result of this program, that there are tens of thousands of people who have been assisted who were on social assistance but are now off social assistance.

No matter how many times the Leader of the Opposition tries to slam the program, the people who are participating in this program very much appreciate the opportunity to get into the workforce and get the type of training that you say they require and that is good for the province. But you speak differently depending on which day of the week it is. Do you want to help welfare recipients or don't you? Which audience are you speaking to today?

Mrs McLeod: There has been absolutely nothing inconsistent in our concerns with the Jobs Ontario Training program. There is nothing inconsistent in our saying that welfare rolls are at an all-time high in Metro, that what those people need is a chance to get into real work and that Jobs Ontario Training is not giving them that chance.

The original deadline for creating 100,000 jobs, this government's deadline, this government's target, was March 1994. By that time, by the time the deadline had expired, you had found jobs for only 29,000 people. You have enrolled 110,000 people in the program, all 110,000 people hoping you were going to find them a job, and 80,000 of those people are still waiting.

What's this government's response? This government's response is to extend the deadline for the program, to enrol more people, to lead more people on in the hope that this program is going to help them find a job. Minister, why do you simply extend the deadline for a program? Do you think that extending the deadline is going to fix a program full of broken promises?

Hon Mr Cooke: What I do know is that since the last time the Leader of the Opposition raised the question of Jobs Ontario Training—the statistics I'm going to talk about right now are a week out of date; they're as of April 15, so the numbers would be even higher—since the last time you raised the matter, up till April 15, 3,058 additional jobs have been created under the Jobs Ontario Training program, and there have been 3,035 individuals—again this is only up till April 15, so there's another week to add in there—over 3,000 people placed in jobs. If that is a failure, then I don't understand what the definition of success is in this province.

Mrs McLeod: My definition of a failed program is a program that has 80,000 people sitting on a waiting list, hoping for a job that this government led them to believe it was somehow going to find for them, 80,000 people who are still waiting.

Not only is this government giving people false hope, not just to the 80,000 people who are on the waiting list but to all the people who will now enrol as this government extends the deadline until next March, and not only are they extending the deadline to try and save face with this failed program; they're also advertising this program as a success when it is clearly a failure. The staff have admitted that they have already spent some $3 million advertising this failed program, and somehow maybe the minister thinks this kind of advertising will make people forget that the program has a failure rate of 75%.

Most sensible people would look at the failure of the Jobs Ontario program and would decide to cut their losses by scrapping the program instead of spending more money on advertising it. Why is this government's only response to a program which has clearly failed simply to extend the deadline to give false hope to more people and to spend more money on advertising?

Hon Mr Cooke: Nobody, when this program was announced, said that the Jobs Ontario Training program was the complete answer to all the unemployment problems in the province. That is absolute nonsense. It's the most simplistic, silly analysis of job creation that I've ever heard in my time in the Ontario Legislature—absolutely silly. This particular program has created jobs along with other Jobs Ontario programs that this government has announced in the past.

What I would ask the member once again is to go and talk to the business community in her own area. I wish she had come to the jobs fair that I went to Thunder Bay and talked to the business community about a few weeks ago. They had nothing but praise for this program. Those are people in the private sector, and I could list off the employers in her own riding that have praised this program and that have participated.

Get out there and talk to people in the real world. Talk to the welfare recipients who are back to work, talk to the employers who are taking advantage of this program, talk to people who have analysed this; not just the opposition mentality you bring to this place, but the real world.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The question's been answered. New question.

Mrs McLeod: It is the government that set a target of 100,000 jobs. It is the government that enrolled 110,000 people. It is the government that has left 80,000 people on that waiting list.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My second question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Over the last weeks, we in this Legislature have been spending a great deal of time talking about the increase in violent crime, the concerns that people have about the increase in violent crime and what we can do to try and stop it.

Today I want to turn to an issue that I believe is very much related to this, and that's the proliferation of material that promotes violence against women in our society. When you became the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations over three years ago, you said that this was a priority issue for you and you said, at that time, that you believed there was a link between pornography and violence against women and that you wanted to do something about it.

What I want to know, Minister, is when can we expect to see some action? Exactly what steps have you taken as minister over the last years to combat the proliferation of violent pornographic material?

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): In fact, I have done a lot on this issue, and the opposition just isn't listening. Today your member for Eglinton, I believe, stood up and slammed me for not doing anything, for instance, on killer trading cards. I was really shocked to hear her say that I have done nothing when they sat there and did nothing, knowing that it was a federal issue. I'm the one who sent the letters and made the phone calls and you did nothing, knowing it was federal jurisdiction.

Also, I'm shocked that she is applauding the move by Mr Rock to allow these cards to be sold to people over 18. The federal government already, within the Criminal Code, outlaws certain kinds of crime comics. It's not an issue of freedom of speech. This part of the Criminal Code could be amended to deal with that. What is he doing? It is his jurisdiction. He's standing there and saying, "We can't interfere with freedom of speech; therefore, we're just not going to allow it to people under 18." It is a disgrace and not to be applauded.

Mrs McLeod: We have raised two very specific issues that we believe require urgent action from this minister and from this government, and we have indeed called on this government in the past to restrict the sale of serial killer cards. In fact, I am pleased that the federal government is taking action, and in committee will be looking at what further steps can be taken to deal with this problem. I will congratulate the member for Eglinton for having raised this issue and pursued this issue with both the provincial and the federal levels of government.

The second issue that we have raised is the proliferation of slasher films and this is an issue which the Coalition for the Safety of Our Daughters has said is a very serious concern. It has now been close to a year since this House unanimously passed a resolution urging the government to take action to control access to these films.

That resolution called on you, under your jurisdiction, to review the operation of the Ontario Film Review Board, to strengthen the film rating system and to make sure the film review board is enforcing it, to hire inspectors to ensure that videos that are being sold or rented in Ontario stores have been classified and to implement a sticker program to warn consumers and retailers of the contents of the videos. Those were some of the specific steps that resolution called on you to take.

Minister, what specific actions have you taken to follow up on the recommendations of that resolution? I remind you that it was unanimously passed by this Legislature.

Hon Ms Churley: First of all, in direct answer to her question about what we have done, the OFRB has recently reviewed and revised its mandate. I think she is aware of that. The ministry has also reinforced the Theatres Act compliance section. We are reviewing a number of options for video-stickering programs, which can get very complex because we're dealing with two different issues here; that is, the adult-type film and the mainstream film. We should have an announcement about that shortly. Inspectors will be increased as well.

I want to come back to the issue of slasher films because I know it's an issue of great concern to all of us and it's been raised frequently in the House before. I have to say again that this is federal jurisdiction. The slasher films were around when you were in government and when they were in government. They predate the Theatres Act, and you know that. We have no jurisdiction.

Once again, I have written these letters and I have made phone calls to—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The question has been answered.

Mrs McLeod: As the minister well knows, the issue of whether or not the Criminal Code definition of obscenity has to be changed is not the issue we're raising with her today. The issues we're raising with her today are very directly under her jurisdiction and that's why we pursue them in this Legislature.

Having said that, if the minister believes there are other actions that need to be taken by the federal government, I would urge her to contact the current federal government, and my understanding from discussions with the federal minister is that this has not happened.

Minister, I come back to a letter that we know you have written to our member for Eglinton. You wrote that letter in December and you indicated that your staff were working on a proposal to establish a sticker program for videos so that people who are purchasing or renting videos are warned about the content of those videos. You said that you were also reviewing the regulations of the Theatres Act and that you would find a way to restrict access to explicit sex and violent materials.

This was the same thing you committed to doing in April. It was the same thing you said you believed was a priority when you became minister. You said it again in a letter this December. In the meantime, the material continues to proliferate and teenagers can get access to these kinds of films at local video stores.

I want to know very specifically what action we can expect you to take in the next weeks. When will your review of the Theatres Act regulation be finished? When will your stickers proposal be ready to implement? Do you have any intention of taking and will you assure us you will take action before the end of this sitting?

Hon Ms Churley: I've already stated what we are doing, and it will be done. I want to repeat what I've said in this House before. These are very complex issues with new, emerging technology.

I'm very worried, for instance, about the possibility of the federal government very soon allowing a channel for video games. Nobody consulted with us, this province, about that and it is very worrisome. We have to look at the whole range of technology that's out there right now and how in fact the provinces are going to grapple with that vis-à-vis what the federal government is doing. This is getting to be a difficult and emerging issue that we all have to deal with. It makes what the film review board does almost obsolete.

But the Leader of the Opposition knows quite well there is a Theatres Act and under the act there are certain kinds of scenes that are not allowed, and that is happening. For instance, sexual activity with violence is not allowed; sexual activity with children is not allowed.

Some kind of stickering program, I agree with her, is very important because one of the problems is that the inspectors have a hard time sorting out the films that go through the board from the illegal ones. I do agree that has to be done and we will be bringing forth something very soon.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My question is to the Minister of Health. Minister, yesterday the member for Simcoe West asked you about the litany of mismanagement, questionable accounting and unauthorized spending at Houselink Community Homes Inc to the tune of $2.5 million. We asked you to tell us specifically what steps you have taken to ensure this never happens again. We haven't heard an answer to that, and in addition to a couple of other things I want to know, I would invite the minister to respond some time today to that.

I specifically would like to know how much time passed from when the minister was aware that this report was in, because it was three and a half years before it became public. Why was this report kept from being public for three and a half years? What possible motive was there, even under the freedom of information act, to deny access to this report, to not releasing this report and making it public? Could you tell us that, Minister?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): No, I couldn't. There was no request for freedom of information to the Ministry of Health. Had anybody asked for the report, they could have obtained it.

Mr Harris: You sat on this report for over three and a half years; you refused to make it public. The reality is that this report is a litany of mismanagement, of no controls, of nobody knowing where the money is going. The reality today is that $376,000 of taxpayers' money will never be recovered.

One of the things we say that you can do now is to ensure that it doesn't happen again. As well as instituting tough guidelines for these agencies, you have to send a clear message that your government will not tolerate what appears to me, as I read it—and what I think appears to any objective observer who has read the information that has become available—is fraud.

Could you tell us, Minister, when over this period of time the police were called in to investigate what appears to me to be fraudulent misuse of taxpayers' dollars?

Hon Mrs Grier: The leader of the third party and I completely agree. The auditor's report was a litany of mismanagement by the previous government between 1988 and 1990 with respect to funding that was given to a transfer agency. But what to do about it? Let me point out to the leader of the third party that our government got an audit report, our government then worked to recover the funding that had been spent without approval and our government put in place procedures to make sure that the kind of mismanagement which was rife under the previous government would never happen again.

Mr Harris: I asked you when the police were called in; you didn't answer that. I'm going under the assumption that with what certainly appears to me to be fraud, even today the police have not been called in.

I wonder if you can answer two things for me. Jack Lakey, Queen's Park bureau, Toronto Star: "The Star requested the audit under Ontario's freedom of information law but was denied because the government said it contained 'third-party information...which would lead to harm, if released.'" I wonder if you can clarify your position that nobody asked for it. I wonder if you can clarify for me what you think would be harmful if this report was released. Will you today, even though it's four years later, call in the police to investigate what appears to us to be fraudulent action?

Hon Mrs Grier: A transfer agency is an independent organization with a board of directors responsible for the operation of that facility. It is our taxpayers' dollar and the ministry takes very seriously any allegation that money was misspent. The ministry sent in an auditor. The auditor did a report. The report identified that there had been expenditures that had not been approved. We went over them line by line. Some of them in fact turned out to be expenditures that would have been approved had approval been asked; that was $376,000 worth. The rest was funding that was in an account in the agency and which was recalled on behalf of the taxpayers of this province.

I'm not quite sure what the leader of the third party's problem is. There was no freedom of information request to the Ministry of Health for any report. Had there been a request, it would have been offered to anybody.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): New question.

Mr Harris: I guess the Star is wrong. But whether the Star is right or wrong, the fact is that you've covered up this report for three and a half years and you still haven't called in the police.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. New question.

Mr Harris: I don't know why you continue to cover up that mismanagement by the former administration. What are you covering up?

GUN CONTROL

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My second question is to the Solicitor General. Over a week ago, I put forward what I thought was a very constructive and non-partisan proposal. I asked you, Minister, to spearhead a guns-for-goods program. At that time, you said to me and to the media that you were willing to take a look at the proposal, which I sent to you the next morning.

Minister, one week later, your only response to this suggestion is to ask the House leaders to send the matter to the justice committee of the Legislature, along with other issues, for three weeks of study some time this spring.

Solicitor General, my question to you is this: The program is going ahead without you; it is going ahead on a limited basis even without your support. If you are not willing to head or endorse or support a guns-for-goods program, will you today tell us, what single possible reservation do you have to encouraging the spreading of this program to even more municipalities in Ontario than it's already started off with now?

Hon David Christopherson (Solicitor General): I find myself very perplexed at the question. I just spent, along with our House leader, a fair bit of time this morning talking about how an all-party committee might be able to deal with this particular issue. Now, maybe I assumed incorrectly, but I assumed that was something the honourable members wanted, and if they were not interested in having us do that, they should have said so and I would have gladly moved straight ahead and responded forthrightly.

Perhaps I'm misunderstanding the positioning that the honourable member is offering on this issue, and perhaps I need to hear a supplementary, because I'm very confused and perplexed by the framing of the initial question.

Mr Harris: Let me try and clean up some of the confusion. The Toronto Sun doesn't need three weeks. They don't need three weeks of committee study. The Toronto Sun immediately started a guns-for-goods program of their own last week. I asked you to endorse it and get it under way. I told you we don't need studies; we don't need committees; we don't need to look at it. The Toronto Sun program is under way. They don't need any more study.

As of yesterday, in conjunction with the Toronto police, they had collected 437 weapons. Yesterday 12 more guns were turned in at Ottawa.

It has worked in other jurisdictions. It doesn't need study to prove it works. All it simply needs is that you, on behalf of the government, endorse the program and encourage other police forces across the province to participate. Will you do this, Minister? Will you raise the profile of this issue, encourage others to participate, and let's get on with the program, spreading it around the province?

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Order. Please help me so that I can hear properly, because there's too much noise, honestly. Please. Minister.

Hon Mr Christopherson: I'm not sure what the game is here. The reality is that I have attempted and this government has attempted to respond to a very serious issue in an honourable way, to a suggestion I thought the honourable member was giving in a way that he meant to be honourable. If there's something wrong with the process, there's been ample opportunity to suggest that to me.

But to rise in the House here today and say that this issue doesn't matter, or that I have not followed on my responsibilities because I haven't bypassed the discussions that we're having, I find completely dishonourable and I don't know what the rules are that the honourable member is playing by.

Now, I hope that there is a clear misunderstanding—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I'm sure that you didn't intend to call the honourable member a dishonourable member. If you did, I would ask you to apologize.

Hon Mr Christopherson: Mr Speaker, I was referring to his actions, not the honourable member, but I suspect that is equally unacceptable and therefore I withdraw the unparliamentary comments.

I urge the member to please put this in a way that allows us to deal with this in an honourable, consistent fashion, which is what we have sought to do. I sincerely believe that there is some sort of miscommunication that is having this being raised in this fashion, and if so, I'm prepared to meet with the leader, with the whip, with the critic, with the House leader, and so will my House leader, I'm sure, to correct the matter if there's a misunderstanding.

But I have to confess I am very, very taken aback by this, particularly when it comes on the heels of a meeting we just had a few hours ago where we've been trying to deal with this in I think a very positive fashion.

Mr Harris: Let me be as constructive here as I can. Minister, I asked a week ago that you endorse the program, not a study, not get it tangled up in the ministries, and it doesn't need a committee of the Legislature. In fact, by three weeks' time the program will already be up and running in all of Ontario. All you have to do, and all I am asking you to do, is to not have more studies. I know you made a request today of the House leaders that it go to the committee and we study it for three weeks. I quite frankly don't think there's anything to study.

The Toronto police department is under way; Ottawa is under way; North Bay is under way. If you wish to have a committee study issues, New Directions, Volume Three has about 40 issues you could study. What I am asking you to do is this: Will you send a fax today to all police departments, the OPP and all police departments in Ontario, and will you also send a fax to all of the chambers of commerce saying that you, the Solicitor General, support and encourage this program? Will you do that today so we can get under way and have the blessing of the Solicitor General and the government? That's all I'm asking.

Hon Mr Christopherson: I would hope the honourable member has done more research than just reading one local newspaper in addition to the clippings that he did send to me and the correspondence he forwarded the next morning.

I have had some initial discussions with some of the police chiefs. As I have said at the discussions we've had with the House leaders, there are some questions that need to be addressed, that this is not simply a rubber-stamp matter but that I believe, and I say it again, that the honourable member's suggestion and that of the initiative here in Toronto has enough merit that we ought to pursue it; I really do. But if he thinks for a minute that it's strictly a rubber stamp and there's no other issue than, "This sounds really good, so why don't we do it?" he's mistaken. There are some issues that need to be answered, and there are some questions that need to be looked at.

If we're going to talk about the Ontario government playing a leadership role across the province in offering up this program, then it does require at least a little bit of thought and a little bit of research. If he's not interested in doing it in the fashion we've talked about, say so and I will deal with it directly. But I will say that I think the way that has been suggested previously is the most constructive.

CONSERVATION EASEMENTS

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food and other things. Rural development, I believe, is the other title that he has.

Interjections.

Mr Bradley: There's a lot of noise I'm trying to speak over, but the question is the following. This is Earth Week, Mr Speaker, as you would know, and one of the things that the NDP used to stand for when Stephen Lewis was the leader of the NDP was the preservation of prime agricultural land.

In the Niagara Peninsula, if you travel between St Catharines and Toronto today you will find that agricultural land is quickly disappearing, much of it because of the fact that the farmers are struggling.

I think for over three years now your government has promised conservation easements to farmers in the Niagara region to alleviate some of their financial problems. My question to the minister is this: Will you tell the House when you plan to implement that program which you promised over three years ago?

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): The member is quite accurate that this party and this government has long been committed to preserving the tender fruit land of the Niagara region, and we remain firmly committed to that. The Premier is committed, this government is committed to that, and we intend to honour that commitment.

Mr Bradley: I have a supplementary question to the minister. If you wish to save the farm land, you have to save the farmer. I have seen no evidence to this point in time that you are going to implement the conservation easement program, which would allow farmers to stay on the land and make a viable living out of it. Will you tell the House today whether you have been sidetracked by the Treasurer or other members of the cabinet, or whether, at long last, we can expect this announcement that will save the farm land which, if you observe with your eyes carefully, you will see is quickly disappearing in the Niagara Peninsula?

Hon Mr Buchanan: No, I don't intend to get sidetracked by anything. We intend to preserve the tender fruit land and we have made a commitment to preserving the tender fruit land. The Niagara easement program, which was worked on by a committee of farmers and others from the Niagara region, is a good program. I have supported it, the Premier and this government have supported it and we intend to honour that commitment.

However, the member mentions the farmer, who is obviously an important element in this equation. There are many other things that need to be done as well. Other ministries are in fact working with people in the region to look at value added further processing for peaches and other tender fruits. We intend to do more than just save the farm land; we are going to save the farmer as well.

HIV IN CORRECTIONAL FACILITIES

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): My question is for the Solicitor General and deals with an issue I raised about a week and a half ago related to Camp Dufferin, a young offenders facility, the concerns surrounding a young man who was arrested by the London police and who was a suspected HIV carrier.

Minister, your officials compiled a list of, I understand, 80 names of individuals who may have been in contact with this young man during his period of incarceration at Camp Dufferin, people who may have—I stress "may have"—picked up the HIV virus.

The average stay, we're told, at Camp Dufferin is around 36 days. There's significant movement in and out of the facility. What have you and your officials done to ensure that Camp Dufferin is a safe facility, that you and your ministry have no concerns about sending young offenders into that institution at this point in time; that it is not, in effect, a breeding ground for HIV?

Hon David Christopherson (Solicitor General and Minister of Correctional Services): I appreciate the question. As the honourable member knows, the information that was compiled by my ministry was forwarded to the provincial medical officer of health, who is of course responsible for making decisions and carrying out any actions vis-à-vis the contacting and dealing with allegations of diseases of this nature.

With regard to the specific question he asked at the time that these matters came forward, I asked ministry officials for a report on whether there were particular problems at the camp during that period or any subsequent period that I need to be concerned about, that I need to take action on. The preliminary finding, and I'm still waiting for a final report from my staff, is that there was nothing extraordinary about the situation at that time.

Obviously, if there were problems, we need to find out why they happened. But with regard to special problems or particular problems that stand out, at this point that doesn't seem to be the case. However, I reserve the right to modify that, pending receipt of the final report.

Mr Runciman: I'm sure I don't have to remind the minister that he has an obligation to maintain a safe institution. Your own officials identified 80 people who could have been in contact with this one individual. What about the people those 80 were in contact with during their time going in and out of Camp Dufferin? I think the significant question here is, does this facility constitute a health hazard?

The minister knows that he would have the ability, if this were a question of a venereal disease like syphilis, to go in and test. I think the concern that I'm expressing today is that we may indeed be gambling with young people's lives, sending them into this facility.

If you have not done anything, your officials have not done anything and if the Ministry of Health, through the chief medical officer of health, has done nothing whatsoever to ensure that this is indeed a safe facility, that it does not present a health hazard, if you have not done that or are not in the process of doing that, Minister, I suggest you're not carrying out your duties in a responsible fashion.

Hon Mr Christopherson: The Tories are having an interesting day in the House today. I think, I really believe I just said that I did respond to that very concern. It was a question that obviously occurred to me. I talked to the chief medical officer of my ministry about this issue. I talked to a number of senior officials and asked for an initial response. I've asked them to provide me with a report on that.

With regard to the specific question of, do I believe that the facility is being run in a proper fashion as it exists today, yes, I do. I believe that the facility is as safe as one can expect. I don't want to put any special protection around what that might mean, but I certainly do want to alleviate any concerns that you may have in your question as to whether or not this is an appropriate facility for us to be using. The answer to that question very clearly, very directly and without hesitancy is yes.

RACCOON RABIES

Mr Ron Hansen (Lincoln): My question is to the Minister of Natural Resources. As you all know, raccoon rabies has made its way from the southern United States to just a few kilometres from the Niagara River separating Ontario and the US. Predictions are that this disease, which is a threat to wild and domestic animals and humans, could spread like wildfire through southern Ontario this summer.

I recall reading a newspaper story last summer about a young girl from New York state who died after contracting rabies. The Niagara South Federation of Agriculture recently contacted me that something should be done about the threat of raccoon rabies before it gets out of control. Can the minister advise this House and my constituency of exactly what is being done to keep this disease from crossing the Niagara River into Ontario?

Hon Howard Hampton (Minister of Natural Resources): The member asks a very important question and one that I think is significant, certainly, for his part of Ontario, being from the Niagara Peninsula. Earlier today we announced in Niagara Falls that Ontario is putting in place a contingency plan to deal with and to prevent the spread of rabies from upstate New York into Ontario.

Raccoon rabies is a new strain of rabies. It originated originally in Florida in the 1940s and has gradually moved into the more northerly parts of the United States. It's within 20 miles of the Ontario-New York border now.

What we plan to do is to spend about $500,000 live-trapping raccoons between the Niagara River and the Welland Canal. After these raccoons are live-trapped, they are vaccinated and then released back into the wild. We will have established, in effect, a barrier of rabies-free raccoons in that area, which will prevent the further spread of rabies from New York state.

We are also going to conduct a large public information program to advise people to have their pets vaccinated, leave wild animals alone and, above all, educate their children about contacting wild or stray animals.

BUDGET CONSIDERATIONS

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): My question is to the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the budget which will be presented two weeks today. It really has to do with the basis on which you are preparing the budget. The minister will know that last year our Provincial Auditor, who is responsible for giving an independent view on the finances of the province, for the first time in the history of the province refused to give an unqualified opinion on the books. The minister's shaking his head, but that's the case. It's the first time in history that the auditor refused to give an unqualified opinion.

As a matter of fact, the auditor had something quite significant to say. He said, "Our general concern is that legislators and the public are not now being provided the financial information required to help them understand and assess the financial position and results of the operation of the government."

The auditor was saying that the way the books are reported does not give the public the information it needs to evaluate the budget. He made some very important recommendations indicating that the books should be prepared on the basis of his recommendations.

Can the Minister of Finance assure us that this budget will be prepared in accordance with the recommendations of the Provincial Auditor and that the books will reflect the Provincial Auditor's recommendations so we get an accurate reflection of the finances of the province?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): I want to assure the member for Scarborough-Agincourt, and the auditor if he's watching, that the budget presented on May 5 will be an accurate reflection of the finances of the province.

Not only that, but the financial statements, which are the more formal statements—I would categorize them as such anyway—the more formal financial statements of the province, which will be presented in the fall, not in the form of a budget but in the form of the actual financial statements, will be as close as is humanly possible to the requests of the Provincial Auditor. There's no question about that. The only question is to what extent the budget on May 5 will be presented in the same way.

I think the member for Scarborough-Agincourt would acknowledge—I believe the auditor will—that there was not adequate time to present this provincial budget, standing the entire system on its head and changing the way in which the budget is presented, which is more of a public document as opposed to a precise set of financial books.

Mr Phillips: I will interpret the answer the minister gave us. I gather what the minister is saying is no, it will not be prepared in accordance with what the auditor requested, and that we will not see those numbers until September 30, 1995. That's when the public accounts for the upcoming budget will be released. The public accounts for the 1994-95 budget will not be released until September 30, 1995.

The reason I raise all this is that the auditor has already indicated that the books do not reflect the finances of the province and has made specific recommendations. In fact he says here, among other things, "Thus, substantial amounts of what would normally be direct government expenditure, revenue and debt will now be recorded outside" what's called "the consolidated revenue fund" or the budget.

On another matter—I gather what the minister is saying is they will still plan to sell government buildings and record that as revenue—the auditor says this: "To the extent the real estate is not resold to third parties, in substance there will be no sale." Yet I gather what the minister is saying is that he will continue to show that as revenue.

The reason I raise all of this is that the public, when they see the numbers, will be expecting that the Provincial Auditor's recommendations will be reflected in it, but they will not be. That's what the minister said today.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Question.

Mr Phillips: My question is this: When you present your budget, how will the public be assured that these are the numbers that the Provincial Auditor believes should be reported, and how will we assure people in the province that this is a true reflection of the finances when the auditor has already said that, unless you do what he says, they will not be?

Hon Mr Laughren: First of all, you have my word that the budget that will be presented on May 5 will accurately reflect the finances of the province.

I wanted to clear up one area of misunderstanding—and I think it's a misunderstanding, not a deliberate attempt to alter the facts—that the Provincial Auditor requires that the financial statements be done according to his wishes. I don't disagree with that at all.

For the fiscal year that has just ended, 1993-94, those financial statements are presented. When all the numbers are in and all the reconciliations are done, those numbers are presented in the fall of each year. It always has been that way for as long as I can remember. Those numbers will be done exactly the way the Provincial Auditor wants—

Mr Phillips: That is what this is, September 30, 1995.

Hon Mr Laughren: No, in 1994; not 1995, 1994. The member for Scarborough-Agincourt is dead wrong when he says that. In 1994, this fall, the financial statements will be presented according to the wishes of the Provincial Auditor. That's exactly what I think the member for Scarborough-Agincourt want us to do, and I can assure him we're going to do as the Provincial Auditor has requested.

TENDERING PROCESS

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): My question is for the Minister of Natural Resources. A contract for 4.5 million trees was given to a company in Quebec. My question simply is: This contract accounts for one sixth of all the crown tenders for seedlings in Ontario. Why did you give it to a Quebec company?

Hon Howard Hampton (Minister of Natural Resources): Ontario has, for the last year and a half, decided to follow a policy whereby our contracts are eligible to people bidding from anywhere in Canada, and we do that because other provinces recognize our tree nurseries and allow our tree nurseries to bid on their contracts. For example, we will grow tree seedlings and we'll send them to British Columbia this year and we look forward to being able to negotiate contracts with other provinces.

There is one, so far, small glitch in the system, and that is an issue that this government has been trying to address. Quebec has had some restrictive practices in the past. We are trying to remove those restrictive practices. While we do that, we are trying to continue an open policy because we think that is the best for our growers in terms of their developing relationships with the forest industries elsewhere in Canada.

Mr Jordan: First of all, your ministry's tendering system gives Quebec producers an advantage in transportation costs. Second, the Quebec government subsidizes equipment costs for the Quebec companies. Would you agree to award Ontario's tenders to Ontario's companies until these differences are ironed out and we have a level playing field?

Hon Mr Hampton: I'm a bit perplexed. Yesterday the Conservative member sitting beside the member who just asked the question accused the government of bashing Quebec, and today the member stands up and says that we should be taking measures to exclude Quebec in this particular contract.

Ontario has led the way in trying to get interprovincial procurement contracts so that Ontario businesses can do business freely across Canada with other provinces. We expect that by the end of June we will have such an interprovincial procurement agreement which will be to the benefit of tree seedling producers in Ontario.

The policies that MNR has followed in terms of tendering are fair, they are open to anyone who wants to bid and there is no special benefit in it for anyone. We are getting the best prices for our tree seedlings than we've ever got. They will allow us to do more with the money we have available, and we expect that they will be to the long-term benefit of our own tree seedling producers here in Ontario.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Mrs Irene Mathysen (Middlesex): My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. I recently spent the day with members of the farm community in Middlesex. They and I would like to thank you, first of all, for the positive work that you've done to help farm families with regard to financing and farm programs as recommended in the Hayes report.

There are, however, still a number of very significant problems and concerns for Middlesex farmers. In particular, I'd like to raise the matter of the failure of Canada and the US to reach agreement on disputed farm trades. As you know, the US has threatened retaliation, and I'm concerned that this will have an impact on producers in my riding and across the province.

We've watched a very volatile situation. I assume that if you browsed through the Globe and Mail today, you'll understand what I mean by "volatile." The headline in the story says that US Senator Kent Conrad suggests that the United States nuke Canadians. At any rate, could the minister please provide information regarding the bilateral trade situation and tell this House what he's going to do to help Ontario farmers?

Hon Elmer Buchanan (Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs): I appreciate the member's concern about the farmers in Middlesex, and the opposition Liberals across the way should listen too because the federal government in Ottawa has the primary responsibility for negotiating trade deals. They said they were going to fix NAFTA and they've accepted NAFTA as it was.

Having said that, we do have a major problem in terms of wheat exports to the United States. That seems to be the main stumbling block, and our federal government and the US seem to be at an impasse. It's rather unfortunate that we have respected senators in the US making statements about nuking the Canucks. I don't think this is conducive to good negotiations. The US has said that it's going to have a deadline of tomorrow to tell us what action it's going to take vis-à-vis wheat exports.

What we've been doing is working with the wheat industry, farm groups and the processing sectors to make sure that we keep as much information at the hands of our federal counterparts as possible so that we can get the best possible deal.

Mrs Mathysen: Thank you, Minister. It seems that the bilateral negotiations have broken down and that there's real risk of an agricultural trade war breaking out with the Americans. Will the supply-managed dairy and poultry industries be drawn into this trade war?

Hon Mr Buchanan: Unfortunately, I don't have very good, up-to-date information. We do know that the federal minister, who had conversations with us before Christmas about our position on supply management—after the signing of the GATT deal, the supply management boards were told that they didn't have to worry, that we had tariff equivalents and they would be protected for a number of years. We are now not so sure.

We see that the US, in chicken and some of the other supply management commodities, are asking for major, major concessions. In fact they're saying they're not going to use GATT rules, they're going to use NAFTA rules on supply management, yet in the NAFTA agreement supply management was protected.

It causes us great alarm. We continue to work with the groups, including the processing sector, as I mentioned in the original question, to work with all those groups to make sure that we can assist the federal ministers of Agriculture and International Trade to get the best possible deal for Ontario.

GAMBLING

Mr Carman McClelland (Brampton North): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. On numerous occasions in the past and particularly during hearings on Bill 8, casino legislation, you were asked what you, as the minister responsible, together with your colleagues were going to do with respect to the issue of problem gambling, indeed addictive gambling, in the province of Ontario.

The question I have for you today is: What have you done, as a minister around the cabinet table, to ensure that there will be resources allocated and provided for the treatment of the inevitable problem of serious gambling addiction in the province of Ontario that will be accelerated and highlighted as a result of commercial casinos being brought into our jurisdiction? What have you done? How much money are you prepared to spend to solve the problem?

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): This question was asked before by the same member, and what I told him at the time is still true today: that past governments did nothing on this issue. When we looked in the cupboards to find any kind of information or research, there was nothing. So this government did a comprehensive study to see what could be done.

As you know, gambling in Ontario is already a $4-billion industry, between horse racing and lotteries and charitable gaming. We are adding one casino at this time to that mix. Certainly that one casino is acting as a catalyst only to have this government look at the problem.

We have given, I think it's $75,000, somewhere around that amount, to a group concerned with compulsive gambling. They are in Windsor now, working specifically there with social service groups, and we will be bringing forward a more comprehensive plan in the near future.

Mr McClelland: Madam Minister, it's all well and good to say that you will be bringing forward a more comprehensive plan in the near future. The fact of the matter is that it is probably going to be spinning out of control, given the response that you've given, if that's the best that you can do.

You know very well that to compare the horse racing industry and to compare charitable gaming, as it now exists, against commercial casino operations and the probability—I say the probability, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Premier—of video lottery terminals being advanced by your government—you know that the $75,000 is totally inadequate.

The member for Cambridge—I understand the member for Hamilton West is here today.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The question?

Mr McClelland: The Attorney General and others always railed against it. You know what they said in the past.

Minister, at conservative estimates, you're looking at a $5-million social cost in terms of problematic gambling. If $75,000 is the best you can do, you are in serious trouble. It's time you stood up and said what you are planning to do, instead of an esoteric "We're looking at it," some definitive plans on dealing with the problem.

Hon Ms Churley: I should think the member would be delighted and pleased to hear that this government is finally doing something about a problem that's been out there for some time, when your government was in power and when the Conservative government was in power.

We are doing something about it. We have committed for the short term the $75,000 in Windsor specifically, but we will be bringing forward a more comprehensive approach to the problem focusing specifically in the area of education and prevention. That's what needs to be done. We are gathering the kinds of information that you, when you were in government, didn't get, when this problem has been around for a long, long time. I'm happy to say we are dealing with it.

LAND USE PLANNING

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs concerning his new approach to land use planning. Minister, your policy treats individual property owners pursuing routine planning approvals the same way it treats large-scale developers: A property owner who requires a minor variance to build a deck near a woodlot will need to undertake an environment impact study. You've clearly made no progress in having all municipal infrastructure dealt with under the Planning Act and not the Environmental Assessment Act.

Will you overhaul your policy to ensure it does not shut down rural Ontario, recognizes the diversity of the province and will not seriously curtail meaningful public involvement and community decision-making with regard to your environmental impact study?

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): We're pursuing very vigorously a streamlining process that is the result of the Sewell consultations round 1, and our extra consultation that has now ended on Sewell 2, so to speak. We intend to be introducing, hopefully, as we work our way through the cabinet process, a series of changes that will streamline the whole planning process. I've been meeting with municipalities, at the township level, the county level, and at the various upper- and lower-tier levels. We will be bringing forward a set of proposals that will streamline the process, and it will protect the environment and also be quite acceptable to developers and builders as well as the municipalities.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): This is the end of oral questions.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I refer to standing orders of the Legislative Assembly, chapter 6, rules of debate. I turn directly to section 23(d). That refers to unnecessarily reading in, during the debate, reports from documents. I think we have certain traditions in this Legislature. We have certain traditions in the House of Commons. We have certain traditions in the mother Parliament in the House of Commons in London, England, that promote lively debate.

I bring to your attention from Hansard yesterday, page 5760, when the honourable member for Dufferin-Peel read at length from a Canadian Federation of Independent Business report. It's my contention that this type of debate is very uninteresting, very dull and it's not within the traditions of this House.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): I'd like to remind the honourable member that the debate took place yesterday. The point of order should have been made then. In any case, I think you've raised a very good point and perhaps the honourable members will listen to what you've just mentioned.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I listened attentively to what the member brought forward as a point of order. I find that quite strange, having listened to so many of his colleagues on the NDP benches reading verbatim—

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I have understood you. I think I've made the right clarification, and the member will understand that whenever there is a point of order, it should be raised immediately.

PETITIONS

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr D. James Henderson (Etobicoke-Humber): This is a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the British North America Act of 1867 supports the right of Catholic students to a Catholic education and the province of Ontario supports two educational systems from kindergarten to grade 12 OAC;

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board educates more than 103,000 students across Metropolitan Toronto, and whereas this is equivalent to 30% of all the students in the area;

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board is expected to provide the same programs and services as its public school counterpart and must do so by receiving $1,822 less for each elementary school student and

$2,542 less per secondary school student (based on 1993 estimates);

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to act now to ensure that Ontario's two principal education systems are fully and equally funded."

That petition is signed by about 500 residents of Etobicoke and by me.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Chris Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): I have a petition that's been signed by many of the residents from my riding and across Ontario.

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I sign my name to the attached petition.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Will Ferguson (Kitchener): I'd like to present a petition from the residents of my riding.

"To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and may include sadomasochism, paedophilia, bestiality etc, and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all such references should be removed from the code."

This is signed by residents of my riding, including Eva Becht of Willow Green Court, and I affix my signature.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): I have a petition sent to me by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters and signed by 141 persons. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I affix my signature to this petition.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards while not providing boards with the required funding to undertake those programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating costs of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local boards."

I support this petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I have a petition that reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the minister the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certification course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I have affixed my name to that petition as well.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): I have a petition I received last night at a town hall meeting.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a sacred union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy and his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no Progressive Conservative support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and future bills which would grant same-sex couples the right to marry, and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

Signed by a number of residents of the riding of Don Mills and of York East, and I affix my signature to it.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): I have a petition that was sent to me by the Victory Fellowship Baptist Church in Hanover, and they have quite a few signatures. It's to the Honourable Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all such references should be removed from the code.

"Therefore, we request that the House refrain from passing Bill 45."

FIREARMS SAFETY

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): I have a petition here signed by about 40 to 50 residents of the riding of Niagara South, which is actually not my riding. Basically, people are from Fort Erie, Port Colborne, Stevensville, Crystal Beach. These good folks of this area of Wainfleet, Crystal Beach, Port Colborne and Fort Erie have asked:

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I submit this to the Legislature.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): I have a number of petitions that have been sent to me by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, and the names come from my riding.

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I have a petition that I present to the Ontario Legislature today on behalf of over 700 citizens who live in my riding, in a community known as Wilmot Creek. The petition is addressed:

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord;"

I draw this to the attention of the Conservative Party, who've effectively blocked this bill. My constituents say:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows"—and listen up:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible with third reading of Bill 21."

This is vital to my community.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): I have a petition submitted by Drummond Hill Presbyterian Church in the city of Niagara Falls. There are approximately 40 to 50 signatures. They say:

"As concerned citizens of Ontario, we, the undersigned, wish to register our objection to Bill 55, An Act to amend the Human Rights Code. We do not wish to have sexual orientation added to the present legislation."

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Further petitions? The honourable member for Grey-Owen Sound.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): Thank you, Mr Speaker, and I'd like to inform you that I hope the member from Durham over there can listen to this one and be quiet while I'm presenting it, like we did with his.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a sacred union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy and his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of the NDP and Liberal majority, but with no PC support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on the administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

Thank you, Mr Speaker, and thank you to the member from Durham for keeping quiet this time.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario sent to me by the many, many hundreds of people of the Subway Mobile Home Park.

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes—their homes—"in land-lease communities; and"

Whereas a scurrilous attempt by the opposition Tories has delayed the passage of this bill; and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile homes by the action of this landlord,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible to interest those very people who have been so severely affected and to expeditiously pass third reading of Bill 21."

STANDING COMMITTEE ON THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Mr Hansen from the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly presented the committee's special report and moved the adoption of its recommendation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Mr Hansen, the member for Lincoln, has moved the report of the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly. Does the honourable member wish to make a statement?

Mr Ron Hansen (Lincoln): I would like to thank all the committee members for the two months that we've had interviews to interview the new Environmental Commissioner. Last night, we decided on whom we would be hiring.

There were a lot of difficult questions that we had. It had to cover the areas of business, farming, environment and the general public. With unanimous consent of all members, we did pick one in the end. I think this committee did a wonderful job and I'll be looking forward, as will the House and our Legislature, to working with the new Environmental Commissioner.

I move adjournment of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: Mr Hansen moves adjournment of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? The motion carries.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: With your indulgence and the indulgence of the House, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the members of the committee and to introduce the individual that the committee has unanimously recommended to the House to be appointed as the Environmental Commissioner, the first Environmental Commissioner in the history of Ontario, M Eva Ligeti, who is sitting in your gallery, Mr Speaker.

M Ligeti is currently the principal of Sheppard campus, Seneca College, and chair of the school of legal and public administration. She has been active as legal counsel in a number of areas, including having worked with the Canadian Environmental Law Association. Again I congratulate her and the committee for their work.

The Acting Speaker: It is not exactly a point of order, but it's a point of very important information. The member for Dufferin-Peel.

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I'd like to speak very briefly with respect to the point that was raised by the minister. He is right that the committee members were unanimous with respect to the appointment of this woman as the new commissioner for the Environmental Bill of Rights. I will say that we feel she is certainly qualified for the position. I look forward to hearing more work from the Board of Internal Economy, which will be dealing with respect to the budget and other remunerative matters with respect to this position.

I will say as well that I wish the new commissioner well in her endeavours, because certainly we on this side have expressed a great concern as to the financial implications of this whole process. The cost will be considerably higher than has been anticipated by the minister. I think he originally gave a quote of $4.5 million.

It is interesting of course that the Environmental Commissioner's office has already been established, notwithstanding the fact that I don't even think the bill has been proclaimed.

Hon Mr Wildman: It has been proclaimed.

Mr Tilson: It has been proclaimed? But it has the same address of course as the Minister of Environment and Energy. There have been a number of office staff that have been hired for a considerable period of time. They're in the provincial directory. There's at least half a dozen to a dozen people who have already been employed. This is even before the commissioner has taken her office.

The two issues that have remained throughout the debate on this legislation are the potential cost of the implementation and the resources of the provincial government, particularly the Ministry of Environment and Energy, to enforce it.

Although I certainly congratulate—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The Speaker can't hear the member.

Mr Tilson: Although we certainly agree with this appointment, our party still has a concern with respect to the ability of the government, particularly the Ministry of Environment and Energy, to enforce this legislation. We express grave concern that the cost will be similar to the cost of the commissioner for human rights and the great cost that has been put on that. This is another layer of bureaucracy which at this time of recession we express some concern about.

In the very near future the commissioner's office, we would submit, will be buried with requests for investigations in review. There will be a strain on all the various ministries with respect to the statements of environment that are going to be put out by the 14 ministries. This commissioner has her work cut out for her. She will be asking the Board of Internal Economy for more money, more money that this government doesn't have.

I wish her well in her endeavours, but again I repeat the concern that we always have, the analogy between the Ontario Human Rights Commission with respect to the backups and the speed of processing complaints. We feel there's a potential for a similar scenario arising at the Environmental Commissioner's office, and we feel that certainly exists.

The Acting Speaker: The point of order, please.

Mr Tilson: Yes, Mr Speaker, it's a point of order. It's a concern with respect to the minister announcing this appointment of this woman. Certainly, we speak in support of it, but we're concerned with the cost that's going to be with respect to this government and whether or not the commissioner's office will have the financial resources that it should have in operating. We express a grave concern with that.

Specifically, when you look at already—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: The member brings a point that has to do with the Board of Internal Economy and the cost. I do not believe it is within the purview of the Chair to allow this debate to continue.

Mr Wayne Lessard (Windsor-Walkerville): On the same point, Mr Speaker: I just wanted to point out that the minister omitted one important point, and that was that the person recommended is a graduate of the University of Windsor law school as well.

The Acting Speaker: That's not quite a point of order.

Mr Robert V. Callahan (Brampton South): In the interest of fairness, this has turned out to be unanimous consent and I think the Liberal Party should be able to offer its congratulations as well.

The Acting Speaker: I'm not sure we have unanimous consent, but you're on a point of order.

Mr Callahan: The environment of course is one of the most important issues to young people. I notice that the new commissioner has two young people up there, who I presume are progeny of hers. Certainly, those young people consider the environment to be a first-class, top priority for them. I think it's important that a commissioner—

The Acting Speaker: To the point of order, please, the honourable member.

Mr Callahan: I would like to congratulate, on behalf of my leader, Lyn McLeod, and our Liberal caucus, the new commissioner. I wish her well. I hope that she is given the tools and the opportunities to do something about the environment. Hopefully, she will not be hampered by the fact that there are not funds available. We would hope that it is a true job that she can do, as opposed to smoke and mirrors.

The Acting Speaker: I'm sure these points are very interesting, but I'm not sure any of them are points of order. We still have reports by committees.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

Mr Huget from the standing committee on resources development presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bill, as amended:

Bill 143, An Act to amend certain Acts related to The Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton and to amend the Education Act in respect of French-Language School Boards / Projet de loi 143, Loi modifiant certaines lois relatives à la municipalité régionale d'Ottawa-Carleton et la Loi sur l'Éducation en ce qui a trait aux conseils scolaires de langue française.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

Pursuant to the order of the House dated April 7, 1994, this bill is now ordered for third reading.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

COURTS OF JUSTICE

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT DES LOIS

EN CE QUI CONCERNE

LES TRIBUNAUX JUDICIAIRES

Mrs Boyd moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 136, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and to make related amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Justices of the Peace Act / Projet de loi 136, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et apportant des modifications corrélatives à la Loi sur l'accès à l'information et la protection de la vie privée et à la Loi sur les juges de paix.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Would you have some opening comments?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): I do. I'm very pleased to today to move second reading of the Courts of Justice Statute Law Amendment Act, Bill 136, which received first reading last December 14.

Bill 136 replaced a previous bill, Bill 68, which was first introduced in the spring session of 1993. This new bill reflects the changes that were agreed upon during consultations in the fall of 1993.

Bill 136 has been the subject of extensive consultation from its inception. We have had many discussions over the past two years with provincially and federally appointed judges, with representatives of the bar and with representatives of the broader community, as well as users of the court system.

I would also like to acknowledge and thank the honourable member for Willowdale and the honourable member for Ottawa West for the time they have taken to comment on this bill. I look forward to this debate and to the discussions which will take place in committee.

The provisions of the bill now include many of the excellent suggestions that were made to us during the consultation. The frank and detailed exchange of views has helped us to balance the competing concerns which arise with respect to these very important issues. I feel very positive about the intensity of the exchange between the ministry and the judiciary, the bar and the community, and I am grateful for the time and effort that were so generously devoted to the consultation process by all the groups that were involved in it.

I would like to remind the members of a number of important changes to Ontario's justice system which this legislation will bring about. The first matter is that of the judicial council. This bill will bring about significant reforms to the Ontario Judicial Council, which is the body responsible for investigating complaints against provincially appointed judges. These reforms are designed to respond to a number of concerns.

As we are all aware, there is increasing public pressure for openness and accountability of governments. The judiciary, as one branch of government, has come under increased public pressure and public scrutiny to be responsible to the community it serves. Measures to address these pressures, however, must be consistent with the independence of the judiciary. This is a fundamental democratic value and it is protected by Canada's Constitution.

The Ontario Judicial Council is an important vehicle for addressing some of these pressures in a manner which is consistent with the principle of judicial independence. However, the extent to which public confidence is enhanced by the current complaint process is limited in a number of ways. For example, public understanding of the nature of the judicial council process is limited and many are unaware that a complaints process exists at all. The council's proceedings are closed and, as a result, the public cannot satisfy itself that complaints have been handled appropriately. The existing process permits only a very limited range of dispositions in response to a complaint and this leads to the perception that only extremely serious misconduct can be addressed.

In addition, our provincial judges have expressed concern about the fairness of the council process and about what they see as an underrepresentation of members of their bench on the council which disciplines them. For the complaints process to be effective, it is very important that judges feel confident that complaints are adjudicated fairly and with a full understanding of the particular circumstances and pressures of their bench.

We have addressed these concerns by introducing reforms which will make the council more open, accountable, effective and fair while fully respecting judicial independence. This will help to reassure the public that complaints about judicial misconduct are handled appropriately. It will also ensure that judges themselves have confidence in the fairness of the complaints process.

Significant reforms include, first, increasing the number of public members on the council to enhance judicial accountability and public input into the handling of complaints. However, in accordance with constitutional guarantees of judicial independence, the judges will continue to hold a majority of votes on council.

Second, the proportion of provincial judges on the council has been increased relative to federally appointed judges, but the Chief Justice of Ontario, a federally appointed judge, will continue to chair proceedings in relation to complaints that are going to a hearing.

Third, public access to the council will be significantly enhanced. Toll-free telephone access and assistance in drafting complaints will be provided and public education about the council will be available in a number of languages. The council will also publish an annual report about its activities.

Fourth, for the first time the council will have a range of disciplinary options available to it. These choices will permit the council to respond to misconduct that does not warrant removal from the bench, conduct for which it currently has no remedies. This range of dispositions will allow the council to respond supportively, where it is appropriate to do so, and to work with judges to take preventive measures.

Fifth, the Chief Judge will be given the power to establish standards for judicial conduct, subject to the approval of the council.

Sixth, the Chief Judge will also be given the power to establish a program of judicial performance evaluations. These will be completely confidential and will permit a supportive system of feedback to the judges.

Finally, the Chief Judge will be required to develop a plan for continuing judicial education.

We believe that standards, an education plan and a program for evaluations can provide valuable supports for the judiciary and we also believe that making those standards and education plan available to the public will help to educate all of us about appropriate expectations of judicial conduct.

The next item that's dealt with in the bill is that of the Family Court. Bill 136 will also create on a phased-in basis a province-wide full-jurisdiction Family Court as a distinct unit within the Ontario Court (General Division).

The Unified Family Court in Hamilton-Wentworth was the first full-jurisdiction family court in Canada. That court has jurisdiction over divorces, annulments, custody of children, support of spouses and children, division of property between spouses, child protection, adoption and young offenders, known at the time that the court was established as juvenile delinquents. It was established as a pilot project in July 1977, with federal cooperation, for a three-year period, and that period was extended a further two years. A conciliation service was established as part of the court operation. The court was an unqualified success, as shown by an independent evaluation done in 1980 and another updated two years later.

1600

In 1982, the Unified Family Court was made a permanent part of Ontario's court system, but until now it has not been extended beyond Hamilton-Wentworth. Our government is very pleased and proud to be able to do so now, with the active support of the federal minister and the Department of Justice.

The new province-wide Unified Family Court will also have full powers over all areas of family law now dealt with by the General Division and the Provincial Division. Consolidation of the family law jurisdiction of these two courts will provide one-stop shopping for families experiencing legal problems and will make available a specialized judiciary for family disputes.

I know the members would like at this time to hear about our plans for the number and the locations of the new Family Court sites. We are still having discussions with the federal minister and the Department of Justice about the number of judicial appointments that will be made available in the first round of expansion, and until those discussions are completed, it will not be possible for me to announce locations. I want to assure members that we are looking carefully at every single county and district in Ontario as a possible new Family Court location in the first round of expansion.

Members will also be interested in the government's plans to provide social service resources, for example, supervised access or mediation resources, in connection with the new Family Court locations. Our government believes that a full-service Family Court should have a full range of social services associated with it if it is to assist families and their members in crisis.

It is for this reason that the bill provides for the establishment of community resource committees to advise the government and the other relevant authorities on the need for social services in any particular location. One of the other functions of these committees is to assist in the development of resources to fill needs in particular communities, with the assistance of the municipalities and the private sector as well as with the government's help.

We want the new Family Court locations to plug into and help augment existing community services wherever that is possible. My ministry will also make the addition of social services resources a priority in those new locations, within the confines of our current fiscal restraints.

Bill 136 also addresses changes in the Small Claims Court. The bill continues the existing model of Small Claims Court, operating with lawyers serving part-time as deputy judges. This model has proved highly effective in providing high-quality adjudication of smaller cases at relatively little cost to the taxpayer. The contribution of members of the legal profession as deputy judges is invaluable and is greatly appreciated by government and the public alike.

In addition, however, the bill will make it possible for parties to have their cases determined by a non-lawyer referee, but only with their consent. We plan to offer this service in a few selected locations, and we will evaluate the experience of those locations prior to any further expansion.

Bill 136 contains a new provision for a formal process to deal with complaints of misconduct by deputy judges. The vast majority of complaints about deputy judges do not in fact involve allegations of reviewable misconduct. However, we considered it advisable to provide for the possibility that such complaints might arise from time to time, as they do in relation to provincial judges or justices of the peace. We have received comments on the draft bill's provisions that indicated it would be desirable to have complaints against deputy judges dealt with on a local level, and I will be introducing an amendment to propose a process that will accomplish that end.

The Courts of Justice Act deals with many other matters. It was last amended in any significant way in 1989. Since that time, we have had the benefit of experience with the new court structure that was instituted at that time. As well, the justice system has evolved in ways that now require statutory adjustments to be made.

Accordingly, Bill 136 makes a number of other important amendments, such as changes in the management structure of the Ontario Court (Provincial Division) to create two associate chief justice positions and to revise the terms of office for regional senior judges.

The bill provides a clarification of the rights of parties who speak French to plead their cases in the courts in French in all areas now covered by the French Language Services Act.

The bill enshrines the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee process in legislation as it has developed over the course of the last five years.

The bill also enshrines a fair and independent process for determining the salaries and benefits of the provincial judiciary.

In addition, a number of technical improvements and adjustments have been made to the provisions of the existing act.

In conclusion, I want to say that Ontario has one of the best justice systems in the world. This government is committed to proceeding with changes to ensure that fairness, accessibility and equality for all individuals continue to be the hallmarks of justice in this province. Bill 136 represents changes to maintain and improve an inclusive justice system which is representative of and sensitive to the communities it serves. Our consultation process has achieved a balance between judicial accountability and judicial independence which will foster increased public acceptance and confidence.

I wish to thank again all those who have contributed to the development of this bill. Their thoughtful consideration of the issues has allowed us to advance and achieve another of the goals which this government had established as part of its social justice agenda. Bill 136 has been well received. It brings about some long-awaited improvements to the justice system.

We hope that the bill can be quickly scheduled for consideration by the standing committee on administration of justice and that it will receive final consideration by the House this spring. We accordingly hope that it will receive support in principle from the members today.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments? further debate?

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): First of all, we will be supporting the bill in principle. I also want to thank the minister and her deputy, George Thomson, for the cooperative effort with which they undertook this particular legislation. We certainly appreciate it. We met on several occasions with the critics, the minister and her deputy.

I know there was also extensive consultation with the judges and others in the legal profession. However, I'm not sure whether I should compliment or criticize the minister for that process because, as we know, the legislation was first introduced as Bill 68 last July and we are now here in April dealing with Bill 136. The reason that has come to pass is because there had to be extensive revisions. I'm wondering whether I should compliment the minister for incorporating those extensive revisions or perhaps criticize her for not listening properly in the first instance. In any case, we have a bill now that we can support, and we intend to do that.

As the minister indicated, the bill deals with five issues: reform of the Ontario Judicial Council, legislatively entrenching the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee, creation of the uniform Family Court, provisions for judicial compensation, and dealing with a number of technical amendments to the Courts of Justice Act.

I do want to comment on some of these provisions and, notwithstanding the fact that we will be voting in favour of the legislation in principle, we do want to express some concerns.

First of all, with respect to the Ontario Judicial Council, we agree with the provisions as they have come forward in final form in the legislation. However, we want to point out that as important as this particular provision is, we have in Ontario tens of thousands of clients in the civil litigation process in particular, and most of them do not have complaints with the judiciary. We have an excellent judiciary in this province. They're professional, they're independent, they're responsible, and I think they deserve all the compliments we can give them.

We have legislation. It's significant legislation. It impacts particularly on the internal workings of the judiciary and people who do have complaints, but this aspect of the legislation does not impact significantly in any way on how the justice system in the province is carried on, particularly some of the very critical issues. We compliment the minister and we support this particular provision, but the number of complaints is extremely small, so the general thrust of what's going on in the judicial system is not really impacted by this particular provision.

With respect to legislatively entrenching the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee, this committee was established by the Attorney General in the previous Liberal government, Mr Ian Scott. It is now being entrenched in legislation, and we certainly support that. We do wish to comment, however, that it's not only the structure and the legislation that is important, but it's how a government manages that particular structure.

The minister will be aware that we've had some significant criticism, particularly of one aspect of this committee, in the course of the last year and a half, and that is that the predecessor Attorney General, Mr Hampton, saw fit to have remain as chair of that committee a nominated federal New Democratic Party candidate from the Windsor area. That was raised in the Legislature and nothing was done at the time.

We took great exception to a committee that is supposed to be independent, that is supposed to be independently appointing our judiciary, being managed by a chair who was a nominated federal New Democratic Party candidate. We have some concerns about the management of the particular committee and the appointments that are made to that particular committee, not so much how the committee has operated itself or how it will operate.

I have some comments as well with respect to the uniform Family Court. The minister is aware, and certainly we are aware in our caucus, of the tremendous support from the family law lawyers across the province to extend the uniform Family Court. The Hamilton-Wentworth pilot project has worked extremely well.

We have had very strong lobbies come to Queen's Park from every part of the province demanding a uniform Family Court, because it is one of the few areas in the litigation process, particularly the civil litigation process, where the concept of alternative dispute resolution really works well, where we have the lawyers and professionals working and we have a streamlined legal procedure where we don't have to jump from one judge to another for different aspects of Family Court—an aspect, incidentally, which really brings the process of the justice system into disrepute in this province. The uniform Family Court concept will be very, very helpful in addressing that type of problem.

But the minister points out that we do need some federally appointed judges to expand this system across the province. What the minister is implying is that the expansion of these uniform Family Courts depends on the decisions that are made in Ottawa, the number of judges who will be appointed to handle these particular courts.

My information from the very highest level of the Department of Justice is that there are some concerns on the part of the federal Department of Justice in terms of the speed with which we expand the uniform Family Courts: that the federal government and indeed the people of Ontario need a commitment from this minister and this government that they will provide the infrastructure, the court space, the professionals and everything else that goes hand in hand in a uniform Family Court, as well as the appointment of federal judges. The federal government is not going to appoint federal judges to handle these courts unless there's a commitment from the province to provide the infrastructure, and that commitment from the province has not yet taken place, at least not publicly.

So I'm asking the minister to give a commitment to this House and to the federal Minister of Justice that she will immediately fast-track the infrastructure and all the internal dynamics that are necessary to establish the uniform Family Courts across this province. Quite frankly, it is long overdue, and this bill, while it entrenches and accepts the concept of a uniform Family Court, is merely saying, "We will install them in two or three more places across the province." That is not even justice for the people of this province, and in my opinion it's not acceptable.

If this minister is going to have priorities, this should be one of the top priorities. Even if you can't extract another dollar from your Minister of Finance, I encourage you to seek money internally, perhaps even to look at the fee structure of the uniform Family Court. But do whatever is within your means to get it up and running in every single part of this province because, in my opinion, it's a priority. In the opinion of the lawyers of this province, it's a priority. In the opinion of the social workers and the psychologists who work in the uniform Family Court in Hamilton-Wentworth, it should be a priority. Once again, I urge you to do this on a priority basis.

Several weeks ago there was a leaked cabinet document, and that leaked cabinet document indicated what the priorities for this government will be between two weeks ago and the next election. The priority focus is going to be on job creation and economic matters. There was even what some people have called a propaganda strategy in that document: what to say and what to do with all these other issues and all these other ministries to try to appease people.

What we see happening in the Ministry of the Attorney General is a process which is directly following that strategy of slowing everything else down and a policy of trying to make appeasement with people who are interested in and impacted by the justice system.

We have seen over the last number of years, including the whole term of this particular administration, very serious concern about the civil backlog in our courts. I received a call this morning, as a matter of fact, from one of the most prominent litigators in the province of Ontario expressing very serious concern about the backlog in the civil courts.

What we have is the minister setting up a pilot project for alternative dispute resolution, once again limited geographically so there's not evenhanded justice across the province, but it's a pilot project for two years. Our caucus and I have been demanding accelerated implementation of alternative dispute resolution processes to bring the justice system up to speed, and what we have is a pilot project. As far as pilot projects go, it's great. We have excellent people involved. Conceptually it's okay, but it's a pilot project, it's limited for two years and it doesn't impact on any other part of the province except Metropolitan Toronto.

That's not acceptable, when you know and your ministry has known for a long time the problem in the civil courts, the problem of backlog, and that it's a problem province-wide. I refer particularly to the eastern district and the Ottawa area, where there are severe problems. I know the ministry and the judges have been dancing around the subject, and they've been doing the best they can, with the means that are available, to improve the backlog, but it still has not made a significant dent. This government and this Attorney General have to be accountable for that.

We have the task force which is set up to look at the civil backlog in the courts, and again there are excellent people involved in that particular process. But the bureaucrats in the Ministry of the Attorney General know this problem has been nagging and gnawing for the whole life of this government.

Hon Mrs Boyd: Not to mention before.

Mr Chiarelli: And before. But you're there now and you're accountable now. We hear a lot of blaming of other people and other levels of jurisdiction, but you do have a certain measure of accountability for the period you have been in government.

What we have is a task force set up, involving the Joint Committee on Court Reform. You have had the joint committee report for over a year now, and a year later you're setting up a task force.

People want action. People demand action. People cannot afford to wait through the civil process, and lawyers who have to work in the system feel they cannot effect justice on behalf of their clients. I'll have more to say about that in a couple of minutes.

We have David Agnew setting the agenda for this government and excluding everything except the issues they think are really—

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I believe on this matter it would be appropriate if we had a quorum present to listen to the debate.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member is asking for a quorum call. Is there a quorum present?

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Ottawa West may resume his participation in the debate.

Mr Chiarelli: Just as an aside, Mr Speaker, I used to fondly refer to the previous Attorney General, Mr Hampton, as the Minister of Inertia. It seems now that as a result of this cabinet edict to set aside all the other agenda and to have a propaganda strategy to answer why nothing else is coming forward, we're going to have to refer to this minister as the Minister of Near Inertia, thanks to Mr David Agnew.

But getting back to my points of concern and what has not been addressed by this bill, particularly when the bill looks at the management of the court system, one of the most significant problems—as a matter of fact, it's a crisis right now across the province—is the matter of the family support plan, the system which automatically deducts support payments from one spouse and then sends it out to the receiving spouse.

There is no other issue in the justice system, as far as my caucus is concerned, because I've canvassed it, where there are more complaints from people across the province that the system is absolutely in chaos. On paper it looks great, particularly when the ministry sends out its regular statistics. I think they send out the statistics every quarter, and they show the number of people receiving payments.

Of course, what this government did was dump all the good payors into the system, when they ought not to be there. They slow up the process and they slow up the bureaucrats and the employees in the ministry from being able to address their time and attention to the people who are not paying. So we have people on both sides, the people who are paying support and the people who are receiving support, complaining by the thousands. Indeed, we have the director of the program even saying that it isn't working, and there are quotes here that I can give the minister, if she wants them, from media clippings. He has given briefings and comments to people in the legal profession admitting that the system isn't working.

When you're looking at reorganizing the judges, impacting the court system in certain ways, and you don't even touch this particular issue, in my opinion it's negligence. In the opinion of many people across the province it's negligence on the part of the government not to deal with this issue.

One of my colleagues will be addressing this issue in more detail, and I don't want to say too much more about it, other than Bill 136 could have incorporated some significant changes. The minister might even have considered involving the judges in some way in managing the system or overseeing the system, particularly when you're looking at setting up a uniform Family Court.

The family support system is intimately involved with the uniform Family Court, and you had every opportunity to take this legislative initiative to set up the uniform Family Court province-wide, eventually, and you could have incorporated some dimension of solving the problem with the family support problem. But you chose not to, and I'm sorry to say there are a lot of people in the province who will continue to suffer by reason of your inaction.

Just a very brief reference again on your agenda, or the agenda of the ministry: This bill affects a very small number of people, as I've indicated. There is no dealing with this ministry on any issue in a significant way with safe and secure communities, an issue which is very prominent. What concerns me and my caucus is that we're dealing with Bill 136 now, which probably will be the last legislative initiative of a justice nature by this government before the election, if we're to believe the cabinet document. So there will be precious little legislative initiative on the order of creating more secure communities so that people in Ontario can feel safe on the streets and in their communities.

Again, there's no action on the special investigations unit, the SIU, which has been an ongoing problem.

What I want to refer to, and they impact very significantly on some of the aspects of this legislation, are some survey results I have. A number of months ago, in my role as critic of the Attorney General, I sent out a survey to over 2,500 lawyers across the province. We received close to a 30% return, which was really amazing and surprised us tremendously. I guess, after thinking about it, we ought not to have been that surprised, given the nature of the problems, particularly given the nature of the results.

The survey was headed up "Issues Affecting Legal Practice in Ontario" and it said: "What priorities should lawyers, the Law Society of Upper Canada and/or the Ontario Ministry of the Attorney General be setting for the following issues: (please check one and explain, if desired)?"

It gave them basically four options. It listed 55 issues and then they were to check, "Not a problem; status quo is satisfactory." They could check, "Problem requiring high priority." They could check, "Problem to be dealt with in due course," and there was a provision for comments. There were 11 or 12 issues which impact very directly on the legal profession and the administration of justice, indeed, on the court system.

I want to refer to some of these. The ones I've picked out basically are the areas where they've indicated it's a problem requiring high priority. Very quickly, I want to touch on several of these. Some of them have to do very directly with the legal profession in the province of Ontario, and the minister will be aware that the legal profession in Ontario is a very unhappy profession. It's a profession with a lot of problems. The minister has done very little to solve the problems; indeed, the law society has done very little to solve some of the very significant problems in the legal profession.

Question 10 in the survey, "The number of lawyers admitted to the bar each year in Ontario," that's the issue: 40% indicate problem requiring high priority; 36% status quo is okay; 26% problem to be dealt with in due course. So we have 40% of the lawyers surveyed who responded to this survey indicating there's a problem with the number of lawyers. The minister will know that the medical profession—

Hon Mrs Boyd: Too many?

Mr Chiarelli: Yes, too many. Obviously too many.

This government deals with the problem of numbers of doctors in the province, and it negotiates up front and it restricts numbers in various ways. The legal profession is running rampant in terms of numbers. It is affecting the economic viability of the profession, and it is therefore impacting very directly on the level and quality of legal service which the people of Ontario are receiving.

Another question, "The economic/business aspects of private practice in Ontario" of lawyers: 48% of the lawyers who responded indicate it's a problem requiring high priority.

"The system of legal aid in Ontario": 67% of the lawyers, problem requiring high priority; 18% are satisfied with the status quo; 15% say it's a problem that should be dealt with in due course.

"The communication and public relations effectiveness of the legal profession in Ontario" doesn't directly affect the ministry, but it certainly goes to the very serious unhappiness of the lawyers in the province. It indicates 42% consider it a high-priority problem.

The next two are really directly on point in terms of the Courts of Justice Act and the types of initiatives which this minister has taken which do not go far enough. The issue is defined as, "The legal system's ability to effect justice for clients." Fully 58% of the lawyers who responded said it's a problem requiring high priority.

This bill does precious little and the ministry is doing precious little concrete action now. There are all kinds of task forces, plannings, pilot projects. The problem is on the ground now and the solutions are in the future, and that's not acceptable any more under the present circumstances.

The next issue defined in the survey is, "The administration of courts in Ontario." That's the issue that's set out or defined, and 66% of the lawyers across the province who responded indicated it's a problem requiring high priority.

The minister is setting up task forces, pilot projects, everything in time while the system crumbles. That's not an acceptable level of response and it's not an acceptable awareness on the part of the ministry of the urgency of a number of the problems that we have.

Another issue on the survey is defined as "Equal access to justice": 47% of the lawyers who responded said that it's a problem requiring high priority. There's also provision for write-in and this issue had so much response it was unbelievable, and it was a whole range. It had to do with legal aid, but surprisingly, what it had to do with was the inaccessible justice system to the average person, the middle-class person, who can't afford the system, can't afford to wait for the system, can't afford to upfront all the fees that are involved in the process.

What we have now is a whole class of people in the province of Ontario who are being excluded from the justice system because they don't qualify for legal aid. The system cannot respond to them today and they don't want to wait for task forces. You have all kinds of means of alternative dispute resolution which you could implement immediately in many aspects of the administration of justice. You can also give more power to the judges to straighten up the system and the backlog and make it more accessible to the middle class in the province, and you're not doing that.

Another issue, "Level of legal disbursements for court matters": 48% said it's a problem requiring high priority. The minister will know that her government significantly increased fees everywhere, in every ministry, and the Ministry of the Attorney General and the court system certainly was not excluded. So what these lawyers are saying—you can judge from their comments—is, who funds these fees and disbursements while they're waiting five years to get to trial?

There are so many people who had to settle improperly, not being able to make their claim, not getting equal justice, because they couldn't fund the system and they didn't qualify for legal aid. You have not set up a quick system for speedy justice in the province of Ontario. What, at best, has happened is you've stabilized it, the minister has stabilized it, at its present level while task forces go out and do their work.

There are a number of other areas which I won't go into at the present time, but I guess there are one or two I will touch on. It has to do again with the legal profession, keeping in mind it's the legal profession that the public has no choice but to rely on. If they want access to the justice system, they need a lawyer. So if the legal profession is not working properly, people are not getting proper justice.

The issue in this survey is defined as "Psychological and emotional rewards of practising law": 43% who responded said it's a problem requiring high priority. That comes from all kinds of matters, including the fact that they say here it's a high priority that they can't effect justice for their clients.

It's time that a lot of these issues have a much higher priority by this government and this minister.

One other point, and my last point, from this survey which went out to 2,500 lawyers across the province: The issue is defined as "Administrative effectiveness of Ministry of the Attorney General": 36%, over one third of the lawyers represented in this survey, said it's a problem requiring high priority. It's no wonder that the joint committee wants the judges more actively involved in the administration of the courts. It's because the Ministry of the Attorney General is a fat bureaucracy which is not responding, which sees issues in academic terms, which sets up task forces and studies and pilot projects till it's blue in the face, while the lawyers on the ground and the people on the ground who need access to justice aren't getting it.

In conclusion, I will say that we are supporting this bill. It impacts to a very limited extent on the people of this province. I only wish we were here voting on legislation which created more access to justice and a significantly better justice system in the province of Ontario. We haven't seen that legislation.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Robert V. Callahan (Brampton South): I'd like to comment on my colleague's presentation, particularly with reference to the question of the Unified Family Court.

It's interesting to note that many people who have to wait or be jockeyed around or take proceedings in two different courts are suffering from extreme emotional upset. It's a very trying time in their lives. It's probably more upsetting than civil proceedings themselves. The net result is that women particularly sometimes have to find ways to fund it. Sometimes, if they can find a lawyer who's prepared to carry them for a while—it goes on for a considerable period of time. I tell you, Minister, matrimonial situations are fraught with much more danger than criminal trials, and the longer they go on and the longer the parties are denied justice, the heat gets hotter.

We've seen one instance, a tragic instance in Toronto with a lawyer who was shot. I've heard of instances from colleagues of mine where in fact the police had to back them up; they had to come into court and actually protect the lawyers and the participants.

So I submit to you that the Unified Family Court will solve that in some respects. It will put all the eggs in one basket, as it were, and it will create justice for people in this particular area, which is an emotional trauma for anyone where there's a breakup of a marriage, custody of children, access to children and so on. The enlargement of this whole process so that it will eventually be a system that is not just a patchwork quilt—and that's not a criticism of you, Minister—but will in fact do a great deal, go a long way towards maintaining the friendship of these people when they do break up so that the children, who are the real sufferers in these particular situations, don't suffer that greatly.

Justice delayed is justice denied. That's an adage which is wholly true.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions or comments? The honourable Attorney General.

Hon Mrs Boyd: I'm not going to try to answer all of the comments of my colleague now but will tend to do that during the wrapup. I would remind him, however, that this is the Courts of Justice Act and many of the issues he's raised refer to such acts as the Family Support Plan Act, the Law Society Act, the Legal Aid Act and so on. This is a particular piece of legislation that is directly focused on some changes in the justice system that have been demanded over a long period of time and it's important for the member to understand that this particular piece will be part of the larger picture.

Many of the issues the member raised are issues that do not require legislative change; they require administrative change and management change. In terms of the whole issue of court management, I don't disagree with the issues the member raised about the problems, but the member also has to realize that we've entered into a great many changes in the court system that are meant to remedy those.

For example, our government has entered into the first formal arrangement ever with the Chief Judge of the province and the chief justices to give them the budget and the personal responsibility over their offices, and we're working together with them to reach mutually satisfactory arrangements for accountability and authority in those areas. The whole issue of alternative dispute mechanism is a good example. We are working with the judiciary to ensure that there's a buy-in by all those who work within the court system. We can only get alternative dispute mechanisms where there is that support and we're working together to build that support.

I'm confident that many of the issues the member raises are well in train and that in fact we will see the results before the end of this government.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions or comments? Seeing none, the honourable member for Ottawa West has two minutes in response.

Mr Chiarelli: I can accept a lot of the comments the minister has just made. However, I think the nature of the problems in the justice system are such that perhaps we could have had legislation initiated and brought forward which is a little more omnibus in nature, rather than isolated issues dealt with in legislation piecemeal.

I think the minister has to be made aware of the fact that some of these issues are so critical that they need to be fast-tracked and it cannot be business as usual in the Ministry of the Attorney General and in the justice system until we get things up to speed, because the problems get exacerbated probably more quickly than your ability to respond to them at the present time. As I've indicated in the past, what we see is the problems in the justice system developing in geometric progression yet the ministry's response on an arithmetic basis, and they're just getting farther and farther apart.

There are so many issues that need to be dealt with which are critical, and I think there are a lot of people who don't realize how fragile the justice system is becoming in the province. I think people have to be made aware of that, and I wish the minister and the Ministry of the Attorney General would acknowledge it and deal with some matters which are indeed at crisis proportions. They can't be dealt with as business as usual.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): It's indeed a pleasure to have the opportunity to debate a justice bill, because over the course of this government's life we've had very few of them before the Legislature. The bill that we have before us now, I agree with the Attorney General, is a very important and very significant piece of legislation.

I'd like to thank the Attorney General for providing us with briefings as the bill developed. I'd like to also thank her for pulling the predecessor of this bill, because, as my colleague from Ottawa mentioned and I reiterate, there were flaws in that bill.

We've had a number of bills from this government in a number of different areas, not just the Attorney General's ministry, where the bill ends up looking so different by the time it gets to committee and there are more and more amendments coming at you that you never really have an opportunity for debate on the bill that is originally presented.

I think the Attorney General has done us all a favour in providing us with a comprehensive package that is going to look, when it's passed, very much the way it looks today. I think that process has certainly been a good process and I appreciate her help and her advice in keeping us informed and involved in this.

It is an important bill. It's an important bill because it deals with a number of very significant areas. It deals with the Unified Family Court, it deals with judicial appointments, it deals with judicial discipline and a number of other housekeeping areas.

I want to try and make some comments about each of these areas, but I want to start at an area that everybody neglects in the justice system. I think it's probably the busiest court in the country, or pretty close to it, and that's the Small Claims Court in the province of Ontario.

The Small Claims Court is a court that is available to citizens in this province where they are encouraged to resolve disputes without necessarily having to incur the cost of a lawyer. Although somewhat of a formal process, it operates now with deputy judges, who are very much volunteers doing a judge's job for a day—I guess they're paid about $233 a day, less tax—and I am very concerned about how those volunteers, essentially, are being treated by this bill.

I am aware that the Attorney General wants to make sure that if judges misbehave, they are properly disciplined and that there is a process and procedure that is open, accessible, not intimidating, necessarily, to do that. But this bill deals with deputy judges in very much the same way it attempts to deal with other judges, and it creates a very formal process.

When I take a look at section 33 of the bill, it really lays out a procedure that I think is almost like shooting a fly with an elephant gun. It goes way too far. It sets up a Deputy Judges Council. It goes on to say who is on that council. Then it talks about the function of the Deputy Judges Council, "to review and approve standards of conduct for deputy judges...to review and approve a plan for the continuing education of deputy judges...to deal with complaints against deputy judges...." It has a subcommittee. It has an investigative procedure.

It really very much mirrors the discipline procedures for full-time judges. It also goes on to say that if a deputy judge misbehaves, his conduct is grounds for sanctions, and it sets out what those penalties can be. It can be a warning to the judge, a reprimand to the judge, an order that the deputy judge apologize, an order that the deputy judge take specified measures. It can deal with a suspension for up to 30 days—pretty tough when you're a per diem judge and you might do this once a week. It says that you must "inform the deputy judge that his or her appointment will not be renewed" or "direct that no judicial duties...be assigned to the deputy judge."

I don't think that's necessarily bad or wrong, but what concerns me is that you're losing sight of the fact that this court operates with judges who are essentially volunteers. It also, as a court, deals very much with cases at the low monetary end of disputes. A great many of these cases are $500 and less. It's significant that you know that cases that are $500 or less in the Small Claims Court are cases that proceed without a reporter. They are cases that are not appealable. I suspect that they are the bulk of the cases in terms of what the Small Claims Court does. In that setting, how can you have a process that is so formal to deal with judges who are there as volunteers?

If a judge gets into trouble at the Small Claims Court level, he's just going to turn around and say: "Look, I don't want to put up with this craziness of judicial reviews of my performance. I'm just going to walk away. You go find somebody else to do this job for $233 a day."

I would urge the Attorney General to take a look at these sections, back off and do what has been done up to now in the last few years. I understand that a complaint might be made to the Chief Justice. He refers it to a judge within the General Division who generally oversees what goes on in the Small Claims Court and he deals with the problem in an informal way, because remember, we're not dealing with full-time judges; we're dealing with volunteers. You can't do this to volunteers. It's too onerous.

So please, Attorney General, review that, and let's see some amendments. Let's see at least some common sense in this particular area. I think you've gone too far, and that's going to be detrimental.

Let me just for a moment deal with the judicial council. I don't deny that we need the judicial council and I really don't have any complaints about the form of the judicial council, the makeup of the judicial council and what the judicial council does in terms of a complaint against a judge, as set out in Bill 136. What I am concerned about, and what I think the Attorney General has to be cognizant of, is the fact that we're walking a very fine line when we try to deal with this particular issue of judicial conduct. The fine line we're walking is the line of an Attorney General overseeing judicial conduct by developing an act that suits the Attorney General of the day in terms of controlling a judicial process.

I know how difficult it is for the Attorney General to avoid the political fray and do the other aspect of the Attorney General's job, which is to look after legal affairs of the government. It's a very fine line that has to be walked, and it seems to me that the one fear we can have when we start to deal with formalizing this process to the degree we've now formalized it is that we might intrude on the independence of the judiciary.

I would like the Attorney General at some stage to comment on that aspect of these procedures. I'm not criticizing the Attorney General and alleging that she is in fact usurping the independence of the judiciary, but a statement from the Attorney General about her position in all of this and about turning over control to the judicial council for these matters is very, very important. I think judicial independence is something that everybody in this province cherishes but that we often take for granted.

That leads me to discuss the issue of performance evaluations of judges. I note that the careful wording of the bill says that the Chief Judge "may" implement performance evaluations of judges. I hope the Chief Judge of this province does not do that.

I don't have any objection to judges taking courses—maybe they're sensitivity courses, legal education courses; they might be courses in how to write better judgements or how to be aware of certain emerging issues of the day—but I really start to wonder about a judge's independence as an individual on the bench when other brother or sister judges are looking over that judge's shoulder. I have some real misgivings about that. I don't have problems with continuing education, but I do have problems with the implementation of performance evaluations.

The Deputy Attorney General's response, when I had a chance to discuss this with him for a few moments, was, "If a judge is doing something wrong and could get into trouble, we really should tell him." I would hope that would happen anyway, without any kind of formal evaluation procedure. That's why we have a Chief Judge and associate chief judges and senior regional judges.

I don't think it's in the guise of judicial evaluation that you warn or advise another judge that they may be on the road to some difficulty because of a quirk in their behaviour or a bias that they are perceived to maybe be showing. But I think you go too far when you start to deal with formal performance evaluations. When you cross that line, I believe judicial independence suffers.

I hope the Attorney General will scrap this aspect of the bill, and if she doesn't, I really hope the Chief Judge and all his or successors will never implement the performance evaluation aspect of this. I think it's wrong, and it's not an answer to say that no one can obtain those evaluations through freedom of information requests. I just think it's fundamentally the wrong thing to do. It gives too much power to the Chief Judge. It gives a power that the Chief Judge was never intended to have. As judges, they are all equals on the bench, and one cannot evaluate the performance of another. I think that's a very wrong concept.

I want to deal for a few moments with the Unified Family Court. I have some concerns about an issue my colleague raised earlier. That is with the infrastructure of the court. The act is completely silent about whether any infrastructure is going to be available. All the act says is that there will be a resource committee in the area where the court happens to be that will look at resources within the community to see how we can make use of those resources.

The Attorney General knows full well that the success of the Unified Family Court in Hamilton has been because that court has offered the human elements necessary to make decision-making in matrimonial issues possible. There's a certain humanity that exists in the Hamilton unified court because of the infrastructure that exists as a backup to the work that court does. There are social workers, there are mediators, there are facilitators. I don't see anything in this bill that is going to make the equivalent resources available as the Unified Family Court expands. I even have a fear that what is now existing in Hamilton will be taken away so that that court will look like all of the new unified courts as they're being set up.

I have some real concern about that, and I think the Attorney General owes it to those who are concerned about this issue to make a statement about that. What resources are going to be available, what budgeting is going to be available to give this court all the attributes that the successful Unified Family Court in Hamilton already has? It's a very, very important issue. I can tell you that those who work in this court or will be working in this court are very concerned about it.

There's another issue and it deals with the appointment of judges. As I understand it, many of the judges who will be appointed to the expanded Unified Family Court are now judges who are judges of provincial court status doing family law within the jurisdiction of the provincial courts. They are not allowed to deal with matters of divorce and they're not allowed to deal with matters of property division until they become section 96 superior court judges.

I understand that there will be a great number of provincial court judges who will become section 96 judges as the Unified Family Courts are expanded. Those judges, once they become section 96 judges, will now be paid by the federal government. There will be a net saving of probably $130,000 to $140,000, if that's close to the salary of a provincial court judge.

Hon Mrs Boyd: It's $124,000.

Mr Harnick: It's $124,000, the Attorney General tells me. I appreciate that. If there are 10 or 20 or 30 judges who are transferred from the provincial bench as provincial judges to superior court judges, the saving to the province will be $1 million, $2 million, $3 million, $4 million, $5 million potentially, depending on the number of judges who are transferred from provincial jurisdiction to superior court jurisdiction. I hope the Attorney General will ensure that every penny of that amount of money that is being saved by the provincial treasury will go back into the Unified Family Court system to provide extra infrastructure and resources and startup costs to make this project successful.

I know how many times the government makes savings or collects money from elsewhere and that money ends up going into general revenues, never to be seen again. Here we have what could be a significant sum of money. I think it is incumbent on the Attorney General to tell us that whatever money is going to stay in the provincial coffers, because the federal government is now going to be paying for these judges and not the provincial government, whatever money is saved is going to stay in the Unified Family Court for use in that court. I hope the Attorney General will at least consider what I'm saying and give us that assurance, because I think that could be potentially a significant amount of money once that court is operating in every jurisdiction in the province.

There are a couple of other concerns I have, dealing with the Unified Family Court, and they are probably less obvious than the ones I've discussed so far. One of the fears I have is that when you formalize another superior court you are formalizing a court that in people's minds costs more. Lawyers who do work in superior courts I think fancy the fact that they're working in a superior court somewhat more than they fancy the fact that they might be working in the provincial court on Jarvis Street.

I would hope the Attorney General will do everything possible to recognize that costs in superior courts tend to be much greater than costs in provincial courts, and that will have an impact on the legal aid plan if more work that traditionally was done in lower courts is now done in a superior court. Sometimes the cost of legal aid expands to deal with the level of court that the work is taking place in.

Far be it for me to ever criticize lawyers for earning too much money, but I think the public, in matrimonial cases, is very conscious of the cost of litigation. If you don't qualify for legal aid, the cost can be astronomical and the cost will rise exponentially with the fact that you're now moving into a superior court. If you don't have legal aid and you're now going to get a lawyer who traditionally does his work in the Supreme Court of Ontario, now called the Ontario Court of Justice, I would hope that costs to those litigants will not rise, particularly to those who are not able to qualify for legal aid, because matrimonial disputes have been known to break many a person. I have a concern about that.

I want to make a couple of brief comments about judicial appointments. I really don't have any objection whatsoever to judicial appointments being on the basis of a formalized, recognized committee that will set up the qualifications that it is looking for in judges, but the quality of the justice system is directly proportional to the quality of the judges who are serving in that system. As much as I believe it's proper for judges to reflect the makeup of the community and the people they serve, it's also every bit as important that merit, qualification and experience be the cornerstones in the way we choose judges. I don't think it's an area where political correctness should lead the way.

What we look for in judges are people of integrity, people of compassion, people who are wise in the ways of the practice of law and in their experience in that regard, and I would urge the judicial appointments committee to ensure that merit is the cornerstone of the way judges are chosen in this province in the future. I know that the Attorney General's department has striven to accomplish that over the last few years, and I'd like to publicly recognize that, but I think we have to be ever vigilant that it remains the case.

There are a couple of other issues that I wish to raise very briefly. The Attorney General, I think quite rightly, says that Ontario has one of the best justice systems in the world, and as a person who's had the opportunity to practice within the justice system, I would agree with that. I would agree with that, but I would also say that doesn't mean the justice system in this province does not have its problems. One of the problems I perceive, and I perceive it from the point of view of being a politician, is that so much of what goes on in the justice system is contrary to what the public would like to see.

I was disturbed when I asked the Attorney General a short time ago about her position on the Young Offenders Act. I was disturbed when the Attorney General was not prepared to recognize the work that my party had done in going across the province to ask people what they thought about certain justice issues that impact on community safety. At every single stop along the way, we were told that the Young Offenders Act was absolutely the most disgraceful piece of legislation that existed, in either provincial or federal books, anywhere, any time.

I recognize that it's a federal statute. The Attorney General of this province has ample opportunity to ask and to lobby the Minister of Justice in Ottawa to make significant changes to that bill. The Minister of Justice appears to be starting to do that, but I don't see any significant impact on the Minister of Justice from the Attorney General of the province of Ontario. I don't see any desire on the part of the Attorney General to go to Ottawa and reflect what members of the communities across Ontario are telling us. I'm disturbed about that.

I will tell you a story, and it's no secret that I still carry on a bit of a law practice. A client of mine was a student at Ryerson. This particular individual came here from Iran to make a better life for himself. He was working to put himself through school at a Mac's milk store and he was robbed one night at gunpoint. He was robbed, and in the course of the robbery, one of the perpetrators of the crime picked up a litre-and-a-half glass bottle of Coca-Cola and smacked him over the head. He will never work gainfully again. He was the epitome of the victim of crime.

We were able to get a small amount of money, considering the damages he suffered, from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, although the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board refused to pay him anything towards his future loss of income, coming to the conclusion that he would have only remained a Mac's milk store worker, and workers' comp was paying him that loss, in spite of the fact that he was a student at Ryerson and on his way to becoming an electrical engineer. That complaint is quite apart from the essence of what's important in this story.

This individual is brain-damaged and he's going to suffer for the rest of his life. I issued a statement of claim and I'm suing the people who injured him. I got a phone call recently from one of those individuals and he said to me, "I got this statement of claim." He was very polite. He said, "I plan to put in a defence, but I just want to let you know one thing." I said, "What's that?" He said, "When this happened, I was a young offender and as a young offender, because I was under 18 at the time that I was involved with this gentleman getting smacked over the head with a litre-and-a-half bottle of Coca-Cola, I bear no responsibility because I'm a young offender."

It struck me, not quite as hard as the bottle that struck my client, that that is the attitude of young offenders in the community today: "Because I'm a young offender, I bear no responsibility for the actions that I've taken and you can't do anything to me." That's what he told me. I can appreciate, as an Attorney General, you may hear stories about what goes on out on the streets, but I don't think you hear stories quite as close to home as that.

Attorney General, I am livid with your attitude in terms of the way the Young Offenders Act operates in the province of Ontario. I cannot and I will not abide by permitting this act to continue the way it does.

There are stories in the Ottawa Citizen. On April 4, I think it was, there was a story of a 14-year-old on the front page of the Ottawa Citizen. It was a kid talking; he was a student. He wasn't doing very well at school. He was frustrated by the school process and he just decided, "I don't care any more."

He and a few of his friends, for a couple of years, went on a binge of crime. They couldn't have cared less whether they were caught or not, because they only had to face the wrath of the Young Offenders Act. They, too, came to the conclusion that the Young Offenders Act meant that they bear no responsibility for what they do.

I'm going to ask people who are watching today, if you don't like the Young Offenders Act, write me a letter so I can carry them over to the Attorney General and tell her what people in this province are saying. People are concerned. If the Attorney General won't listen to them and won't take their concerns to Ottawa, then the system of justice in this province is breaking down, because the moment we stop listening to what people are saying about the justice system, that's the greatest fear we have.

I know from this bill that the Attorney General says we have to have a judicial council. We have to deal with complaints against judges. We have to have an open process. We have to have a process that is not intimidating. We have to have a process that people can use, that's aboveboard and that shows them that the justice system works. We have to listen to people. That's what people are telling us and that's why we're enacting this kind of a piece of legislation. I say to you, Attorney General, it's the same thing with the Young Offenders Act. It's the same thing. People are telling you and you're not listening. The result is that the justice system is breaking down.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): Oh my God, give me a break.

Mr Harnick: The member from Cochrane wants a break. He's asking me to give him a break. Do you know that I was in the town of Angus on Wednesday night? The town of Angus is a small hamlet close to Barrie. I was holding a crime forum with the member for Simcoe West. I was absolutely shocked when people there in this small hamlet talked about being afraid to walk on the streets after dark. I had to pinch myself to remind myself that I wasn't in a great big metropolitan area. This was Angus, Ontario.

In Angus, they are livid about the Young Offenders Act. In Thunder Bay, where I also held a crime forum, they're livid about the Young Offenders Act. They're livid about the Young Offenders Act in Metropolitan Toronto. They're livid about it in Cornwall. We've held crime forums there. We've been almost all over the province. We've been to London. They're livid about the Young Offenders Act, and when the Attorney General doesn't listen to those concerns, the system of justice breaks down.

I appreciate that the Attorney General—what's true is true—is very receptive to listening to what the public says about certain issues, and Bill 136 is one of them. I congratulate the Attorney General, but there's another side to it and you have to listen to the fears that people have, fears to live in their own communities, fears in Angus, Ontario, to walk out on the street after dark.

One young lady who was at this crime forum asked me a question. I really couldn't give her a very satisfactory answer, but this is Angus, Ontario, and she said: "We would like the right to carry pepper spray. Why can't we do that? I'd feel much more comfortable if I could carry a can of pepper spray so that if I were accosted, I could pull it out and protect myself." This is Angus, Ontario. I can appreciate the member from Cochrane doesn't like what I'm saying, but these are the concerns of the people of Ontario, and if the justice system is to prevail, then you have to listen to the concerns of the public.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): If there's anyone who would know the concerns of the public, it would be Charlie Harnick.

Mr Harnick: The member for Downsview says if there's anyone that would know the concerns of the public it would be Charlie Harnick. I appreciate the compliment, because I spend a lot of time going from community to community, going across my riding and listening to what people say. I think if my friends across the way, who only want to shout at me because I'm trying to debate Bill 136, did the same things I did, we might have a better justice system.

I also want to talk for a moment about court reorganization. The former Attorney General decided that we needed a single court, and he set up a huge bureaucracy and we now have that single court.

Hon Mrs Boyd: The Liberals.

Mr Harnick: That Liberal government. I'm sorry. I'm corrected quite properly by the Attorney General. I'm talking about Attorney General Ian Scott, the Liberal Attorney General.

It's very interesting to note that a short time after the creation of that new court that's now called the Ontario Court of Justice, which got rid of every county and district court and amalgamated all of those with the high court, the Supreme Court of Ontario, into the Ontario Court of Justice, the Attorney General has now announced the formation of a committee in conjunction with the Chief Justice to look at the way the civil courts work in the province of Ontario.

If ever there was an indictment of a court system, that's the indictment, because it only took four years or five years from the time that court was set up to already be looking at the fact that the civil aspect of that court is failing. Not only is the civil aspect failing because of cases that aren't proceeding as quickly as they should, and not enough courtrooms and not enough judges, but we also saw the failure of the criminal aspect of the creation of that court when we had 60,000 or 70,000 cases dismissed because of Askov.

I can appreciate, when I speak to the Attorney General about some of these bills that are brought forward, that the state of the justice system is not the fault of this government. They inherited a system gone amok, and they inherited the system gone amok because the Attorney General of the day, starting in 1985 and going through 1990, did not listen to what people in the legal community were telling him. I urge this Attorney General to listen to the people in the legal community and to listen to the public because, at the end of the day, the public knows best.

I tell you, Attorney General, from the time I spend around the courthouse, the conditions at 361 University Avenue have become appalling. I had the opportunity to tour the jury rooms. They're a disgrace. I've had the opportunity of watching claims being filed in room 110 at 361 University Avenue. The office is a disaster, and morale among the staff who work for the Attorney General is absolutely at the lowest ebb I have ever seen in my life. I have never seen people who have to be serving the public and running our courts who are so unhappy. It's a tragedy, and I hope the Attorney General will visit 361 University Avenue and talk to the people who work in her department and find out what the impact of a middle level of bureaucracy, as created by the Liberal Attorney General, has meant to the operation of a smooth justice system.

No, all the court managers in the world have not made the system work. That's why you're reviewing the civil courts. You're reviewing it because all the managers in the world, who have made the bureaucracy bigger and bigger and bigger, have caused the system to break down faster and faster and faster.

For the life of me, I could never figure out why we have a trial coordinator at 361 University Avenue with an office that runs in a very professional and competent manner in spite of the difficulties with the system, and we have someone on Bay Street who's supposed to be doing the same job. It doesn't make sense. The court system operated without court managers and regional managers for years and years, and it operated better then than it does now.

I can tell you there's nothing so appalling as walking into the Hamilton Court House and seeing a courtroom on the main floor that used to be a courtroom for the public to come to, to resolve their disputes, and a regional manager sitting in it with an office, and nobody knows what the regional manager does. For the life of me, I wish you would just take a look at what you're doing and go back to where you were and start over, because you're just watching the system grind to a halt.

At any rate, I've diverged from my discussion about Bill 136. I suppose it can all be tied back into the Courts of Justice Act, because that's the act that regulates the courts in the province of Ontario and regulates the way trials and disputes are resolved. I hope the Attorney General will listen to some of the suggestions I've made about Bill 136, I hope she'll listen to some of the tangential comments I have had the opportunity of making, and I hope we can get this bill in a form that will be acceptable to the judiciary, the public and the politicians, because if it will help the justice system work more effectively, it's a bill that I think is worth passing.

Mr Callahan: I want to address the question the honourable member raised about the reorganization of the courts. I agree that there's been an ever-increasing amount of work for judges in terms of the criminal bar as well as the civil bar, but the net result of that reorganization was to make judges available on a very much more available basis. We now have regions in which judges are available, rather than sitting in a particular county or sitting in Toronto or London, where the pre-existing Supreme Court judges sat. I think the purpose of it was to make justice as available as possible on a timely basis for the citizens of this province.

As in everything, this province is growing rapidly, the major urban centres are growing rapidly, and this of course has put tremendous pressure on the existing case load. I suggest that my friend's comments about the failure of this reorganization by the former Attorney General are most unfair. I suggest to you that the system itself makes sense, that it would make use of the judicial time as well as the crown attorneys' and the court facilities and so on on the best possible basis, but because of the growth of the community and the growth of crime and civil disputes in this province, that has not taken place; also because of the fact that significant further judges have not been appointed or facilities are not available.

The Attorney General came out to Brampton and opened a courthouse, or at least indicated that we will have a shovel in the ground—and I'm relying on you, Attorney—

Mr Harnick: How many more courtrooms are you going to have?

Mr Callahan: Well, it's not a significant amount, but the best thing, and it was something I always envisaged when we were in government, is that all the courts are brought together to enhance what the Attorney General started: an attempt to put all justice together so you get the best possible results from it.

Mr Bisson: I want to touch on the Young Offenders Act. It's an issue the member has every justification in raising as one of concern to the people of Ontario, and all of Canada, for that matter, but I think we need to clarify a little what the Young Offenders Act is and who in the end is responsible.

Yes, as provinces we administer the Young Offenders Act, but we are very much governed by the regulations as set out in the legislation under the federal government. I am speaking to comments that were made by the—excuse me. I thought the Speaker was about to say something.

Just to finish the point, I understand what the member is trying to say around the Young Offenders Act. There are a lot of concerns in terms of how people feel about how the Young Offenders Act works, or doesn't work, in certain circumstances, and the high level of frustration on the part of many people not only within the province of Ontario but all of Canada in regard to that act.

But in fairness, we need to point out that the Young Offenders Act is governed through the House of Commons. It is a federal piece of legislation that, yes, we as provinces administer, but we are very much constrained by how the legislation is written and what we find within the act itself.

I know the member is well aware that this government takes its responsibility in regard to the Young Offenders Act quite seriously and is actually working with the federal government because the federal government has indicated it is prepared to take a look at that issue and to move forward to address some of the concerns the member raises.

To leave the viewers of this debate with the impression that somehow the Attorney General of Ontario can snap her fingers and all of a sudden fix the Young Offenders Act is a very large leap of faith, because the member should know, as I know he does, that it's federal legislation. In the end, we have to have the changes at the federal level to be able to change the act to deal with the concerns he raises. I just wanted to clarify that point.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions or comments? Seeing none, the member for Willowdale has two minutes in response.

Mr Harnick: There is one matter I want to touch on and it arises out of what the member for Brampton South just said. It's interesting that he talks about the courts being busy and congested and that his government tried to address that issue. One of the ways they tried to address that issue, to tell you how off the mark they were, was that they decided they were going to get rid of all the masters of the Supreme Court of Ontario, and in fact this government is continuing on with that process.

The masters deal with interim procedural arguments as a lawsuit proceeds to the day it goes to trial. This government and the previous Liberal government decided to scrap all these masters who really do all this interlocutory work, this interim proceeding work in Toronto, London, Windsor and Ottawa.

What they've decided to do is get rid of the masters by attrition. As the masters retire, they don't replace them, but every day, at 145 Queen Street, in the city of Toronto, the masters look after some 200 matters every single day. When they're all gone, I want to know, who's going to look after these matters?

The judges are overworked now. There are not enough courtrooms to put them in and all of a sudden they're going to get 150 more issues every day than what they already have and nobody is addressing this problem. I hope that with this committee the Attorney General and the Chief Justice just set up they will look at the issue of masters and will wonder who's going to do this work if these people aren't here, because the judges sure don't have the time and the litigants are having to come back day after day just to get reached on the list because they don't complete the daily lists.

I hope the Attorney General will take note of that as well, and I thank you for the opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate on the second reading of Bill 136?

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): I should explain first off why it is I decided to participate in this debate. For those who are just joining us in the chamber or tuning into these proceedings by way of the parliamentary channel, I just make note that we're debating a rather innocuous, a rather insignificant piece of legislation, in the scheme of things, dealing with some reorganization of some things relating to what the people out there call provincial courts.

If I had to give a title to my speech, I would describe it as a speech about why this Legislature is so often an irrelevant body and why so often the people who elect us are so disappointed with what they hear from us and what we do, in particular in this Legislature. I think this bill, set in this context at this time, gives me an opportunity to make the point as best I can.

Let's just start with a summary of what this piece of legislation does. It amends the Courts of Justice Act. Oh, well, big deal. What does that mean? Firstly, the bill gives the Ontario Judicial Council expanded responsibility for dealing with complaints about provincial judges.

The bill gives the Ontario Judicial Council an opportunity to deal with the ever-increasing number of complaints against provincial judges. It's a very big problem in Ontario these days. People complain about provincial judges and their complaints seem to go nowhere. That's the first thing the bill does.

The second thing the bill does is, "The Chief Judge of the Provincial Division is given power to establish standards of conduct, a plan for continuing education and a program of performance evaluation for provincial judges."

That means that now we've got a Chief Judge of the Provincial Division who has legislative authority to make sure there's a continuing education program and standards of conduct. Again, read something into that, Mr Speaker, about what that means. The government says here, in this legislation, that the standard of conduct of our provincial judges is not sufficient and we want to embody, in the laws of this province, an opportunity for that Chief Judge to set standards of conduct.

Number 3, the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee, which is charged with screening for new judges, is put into law. We've had this committee for choosing judges for quite a long time. Attorney General Ian Scott set it up. It was a good body. The current minister has continued it and put it into law. That's no change at all; it's just that now it's in the law that it has to be and that's the statutory way of choosing judges, and isn't that great?

Next, number 4, "A framework is provided for the extension throughout Ontario of a Unified Family Court, to be known as the Family Court" of Ontario (General Division). Good stuff, that's fine. Family court matters were being taken care of and now we're going to have this system of Unified Family Courts all across the province, and that's some little bit of reasonable substance. But we don't really do it here; we just establish a framework for doing it as and when it's convenient to do.

Number 5, "A framework agreement dealing with provincial judges' remuneration" is put into the law. Oh, good. We're dealing with provincial judges' salaries here. Oh, great. This is a problem that people have phoned me about day and night. I get calls at 3 o'clock in the morning, "When are we going to have the law on provincial judges' salaries?" Oh, good. We finally got it here in the law.

Number 6, "A Deputy Judges Council is created to deal with complaints about deputy judges of the Small Claims Court." Oh, good. Now when there are complaints about deputy judges in the Small Claims Court, there's a statutory means by which we can deal with those complaints. More opportunity to complain about judges.

I want to tell my friends in this Legislature what the people in my riding and the people I talk to all across Ontario are complaining about: Not the salary of judges, not whether or not we can get our complaints about judges heard; they are complaining, they are worried, they are terrified about crime. You know it and you know it and you know it and you know it and I know it.

I'm not sure if every bit of that fear that is now gripping Ontario is based on reality, but I know that's what the people are talking to me about. They are worried. Yet when they tune into this Legislature or they come to hear us in the galleries, we're talking about judges' salaries and enhancing the ability of the average citizen to lodge an effective complaint against a judge.

The reason we are seeing this increase in crime in Ontario is certainly not because people don't have an effective way of complaining about the conduct of judges. I don't know what it is. I don't know what's going on out there. I don't know why the shooting in Just Desserts took place a week and two days ago at 11:15 at night. I don't know why that happened. But I know that for me and for so many people who have talked to me since that day, it was like a wake-up call. You listen to the radio and you listen particularly to the phone-in programs and that's what people are talking about.

There's a new fear there and I don't know what to do about it as a legislator. For two or three days after that murder I heard politicians on the radio and I heard people phoning in on the radio and I heard people saying to me, "We've got to do something about this." When I hear that, that's code for me as a politician. When I hear that, I know that's a call to me as a representative of the people to get busy. I know that because when people say to me, when people honestly ask me as a politician, "What are you going to do?" I haven't got an answer. I don't know.

I know that we have a rising crime rate. I know, as the federal Justice minister said today in Ottawa, that fundamentally the administration of justice is all right, but I know that in Ontario at least there is this dramatic increase in the use of firearms, that they have become prevalent in our society, that particularly among young people there is this attraction and allure to violence. We see it in every aspect of our society.

I say to the Attorney General, who is also the minister responsible for women's issues, that I had those responsibilities once and that I understand this increasing violence, not only against women and children but wantonly against someone who just happens to be there. I see it, you see it, we all see it, and yet we're not doing anything about it. We are talking about judges' salaries here.

The day after that murder in the Just Desserts, I went to my own caucus colleagues and I said, "We've got to do something, because we don't have the answers as a party." I don't think the government caucus has the answer. I don't think the Tories have the answer. I don't think the police commission has the answer. I don't think any of us have got a grip on this stuff yet.

I said to our leader, "Perhaps we could encourage the government to bring together a select committee so at least we could start talking about it in a public way," because often that kind of discussion does give rise to the breakthrough answers. Often it does get us going, at least, in the right direction. It gives people the opportunity to come before their elected representatives and, if not provide the answers, at least express on behalf of their neighbours and their friends and the people in their communities the extent of their fear.

I heard from people in St Catharines, for example, that they're not coming to Toronto any more—they're just not coming. They're not coming to baseball games. They're not coming to the Exhibition. They're not coming to the theatre here. They're not coming. That's not good.

I repeat that it was kind of like a wakeup call. I have my own children and they love to go into the city in the evenings for concerts and to meet their friends, and the extent of my fear and my worry is heightened.

So I suggested to our leader that we encourage the government to bring us all together in a sort of non-partisan way—a select committee we call it; what's that but a group of seven or eight or 10 of us in this Legislature—to hold some public hearings and raise the issue and start talking openly and honestly and consciously about the problems we have.

In fact, on Thursday, April 7, our leader put a question to the Solicitor General. She said, "I raise the issue because I believe we must make sure that as legislators we are doing everything we possibly can to respond to the fears and to the uncertainties that so many people are feeling today."

In her supplementary, she said as follows:

"I would like to ask whether you would refer this issue, the matter of what steps we can take to address this problem, to the standing committee on justice on an emergency basis so that all three parties can determine what indeed we, as legislators here in the province of Ontario, can do to help people feel safe in their homes and in their neighbourhoods. Will you agree to make the referral so that we can respond to the growing concerns about violent crime in our neighbourhoods?"

That was a week and a half ago. I don't know what's been going on since then. I ask, on a regular basis, my own House leader and anyone who meets in those councils as to what the agenda for us as legislators is going to be, whether we're going to have the committee. That's the one I want to be at. That's the one that I'm concerned about. That's the one where I, as a legislator and as a representative and a politician, would like to devote my energies and my time.

I don't know what the answer is, but I know we have a problem out there and I don't believe it's just better gun control measures and I don't believe that it's just amendments to the Young Offenders Act and I don't believe that it's just more judges and I'm not sure that it's just more police officers, but I think it might be.

I'm not sure what the answer is and the people in my riding are knocking at my door and calling my office and saying: "You have a responsibility to start to deal with this. That's the very kind of thing that is your duty as a legislator."

What are we doing here this afternoon? We're debating a bill that deals with judges' salaries and how to more effectively complain about provincial court judges' conduct, sets up a system so that the Chief Judge can create standards of conduct, and provides a framework to one day create unified courts all over Ontario.

I'm not so much criticizing the Attorney General for bringing this bill forward; I know these things work their way through the system. I'm just taking this opportunity to somehow plead, on behalf of the people who have been pleading to me, to get these issues dealt with quickly and get on with those other issues.

I've been saying: "Let's have a select committee. That's the way in which we deal with matters of urgent importance." I know that one more death, one more shooting, one more murder, isn't an emergency; that somehow those who accuse us of turning our back on the other murders, the murders that happen in domestic disputes and the murders that happen in the booze cans that operate all night long and the murders that happen on the edges of the drug deals—"How come you weren't concerned then? It's just because the café that your kids go to is the venue. That's why you're concerned." Well, I accept that criticism and I ask people to forgive me for the fact that we haven't raised it sooner.

But we are having gangs breaking into people's houses in the evening. It's not burglary any more. It's not sneaking in and taking when no one's home. It's rapping at the door and bursting in and humiliating and terrifying people. That's new and that's different and that's urgent, and we should be dealing with it, rather than judges' salaries.

So I'm using this debate on an issue dealing with judges' salaries to say, "Please, let us set up that forum," because, number one, it is important, and it becomes increasingly important. It's important for so many reasons.

I have this terrible concern that we are going to, in our society—because the accused in the Just Desserts café happened to be someone with a black skin, I know, in fact, that for thousands of people out there, they have now fixed in their head that crime in Toronto, in Ontario, is a black problem. We've got an obligation as legislators to make sure that those ideas do not take hold in the minds of the people of Ontario. We must do that.

We, as legislators, have an obligation to get the irrelevant stuff aside, get the judges' salaries stuff aside and get the standards of conduct stuff aside and get enhanced complaints about the provincial court judges aside, get rid of it—those are not priorities—and to get on with the priorities. Because if we don't, then those who say that what we talk about is irrelevant and what we do is insignificant and, "You people are so insulated from what is really happening in Ontario," those accusations hit home.

I don't know if we are ever going to have those hearings. My own suggestion to my leader was that if the Premier or the Attorney General or the Solicitor General did not want to create that kind of forum for discussion, we should do it ourselves as a party. I don't know if we're going to do it as a party. The Tories say they've already done it and they've got all their answers in their silly little brochures about setting a new course, or whatever it's called. That's the worst of all. When you say you've got all the answers, "You just have to read our book," that, to me, is closing your eyes to it.

If we have a frank discussion, we know that this is a problem. It's a serious problem, and we've got to get on with that discussion.

In order to direct our energies and the power of the Legislature and the power of a standing committee to the thing that for obvious reasons is gripping the people of Ontario, I simply tell my friend the Attorney General that I have no problem in voting for her bill. That's easy. I have real problems with the fact that in the face of the events of the past couple of weeks and the quantum increase in and very real concern about crime, we have yet to do anything here in this Legislature or in our committees or in government, for that matter, to respond. That's our real obligation, and I hope we might take up that challenge and fulfil those obligations.

It being five minutes to 6 of the clock and knowing that the business of the House has to be stated before we adjourn at 6 o'clock and knowing that there may be some questions and comments, I'll complete my remarks now.

Mr Callahan: I think my colleague elevates the debate on this to an issue that perhaps isn't directly related to the bill itself, but elevates it to the point where this is a very important issue. This is one of the most important issues in which this Legislature, as he has said and I would say, is to be looked upon as being an effective tool in trying to protect society, and there should in fact be a non-partisan committee. It's an opportunity for us to come together in a non-partisan way by a select committee. I would certainly want to serve on that, because this is a significant concern not just to people in Toronto but a significant concern to citizens throughout this province in terms of being able to walk the streets safely after dark, of being able, as my colleague said, to live safely in their homes. The old adage of England that your home is your castle doesn't seem to be the case any more.

We're seeing things such as drive-by shootings. It's amazing. I saw in the press recently where the press is going to police violence in their television programs and in their newspapers. Perhaps what we should be doing is turning off the television set when we get those wacko programs from the US or indications from the US of the things they're doing, the fact that you get shot if you happen to cut somebody off on the road. That's going to come to Ontario, because for some reason we have a great love affair with the United States, and everything we see there as being trendy we emulate. The young people emulate that in terms of the way they dress, in terms of the statements they're making.

I was at a conference the other day at Cardinal Leger high school which was on racism, and the panel was amazed to hear two young people come before them who had Iron Cross rings on which represent, for those of us who can remember the Second World War, the Holocaust and all sorts of other things. These kids did not think that. They were wearing it because it was cool jewellery. Well, whoever sold it to them knew what it was for. We've got to get to that issue, and I think that's what a select committee could do.

Mr Turnbull: The only reason I'm making any comments about the member for York Centre's debate is his closing comment where he referred to "our silly little book which claims to have all the answers." That is intellectual dishonesty. There has never, ever been any suggestion by our party that we have all the answers, but we have at least listened to the people. We have gone around the province and listened to literally hundreds of people who have expert knowledge, and also people who have suffered from crimes. They put forward their views, and we have come forward with a set of recommendations. We're not hiding behind what the polls are saying at the moment. What we are doing is that we're saying, practically, what we believe would improve the quality of life in this province.

When you talk about silly books, talk about the latest silly book the Liberals brought out, in which they said they were going to reduce half the red tape. They're not going to reduce all the red tape. Red tape, as far as I understood, was the unnecessary paperwork, not the essential, useful paperwork of government. But they're going to reduce half of the red tape. That's what the contribution of the Liberals is instead of talking about real, serious concerns that the electorate have and coming forward and having the guts to say what you would do, in the knowledge that you may have some people who don't like what you're saying.

But at least we're prepared to put a platform forward. I think that is the difference between the Liberals and the NDP and the Conservatives. At least the NDP and the Conservatives are prepared to say what they will do. They may not agree, and we may have different ways of achieving different things, but at least we are prepared to say what we will do. The Liberals look at the polls perpetually and come out with their silly little books after they see that somebody else is doing a job.

The Acting Speaker: Further questions or comments? The member for York Centre has two minutes in response.

Mr Sorbara: Very briefly, I want to remark to my friend the member for York Mills and I guess apologize for referring to it as a silly little book.

My problem was simply this: In the face of our call for a select committee of Parliament to look at the issue of crime, the response of the member for Nipissing, Mike Harris, the leader of the Conservative Party, simply suggested that there was no need for hearings, that that didn't have to be done. "All of the answers," he said, and went like that, "are right here in New Directions, Volume Three, and you just have to read that and you'll see what the solution is."

To me, that's making politics out of it, and that was wrong. Obviously, all the answers aren't there. We've all looked at it and there are some interesting ideas—I concede to my friend that there are some interesting ideas—but all the answers aren't there.

If we as legislators would get down to work and start to look at the issue, we wouldn't come up with all the answers either, but we might just come up with two or three initiatives we could implement and get ourselves on the road to safer and more secure communities. That's the plea of my speech today, sir. With that, I would move adjournment of the debate.

The Acting Speaker: It being 6 o'clock, would the government House leader have an outline for next week's legislative schedule?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On Thursday afternoon, we will continue second reading consideration of Bill 136, the courts of justice act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): As we close down the Legislature this afternoon, I want to thank our hardworking pages. Very dedicated they have been. They have just spent their last day here at the Legislature, and may they enjoy a safe return home and may they return to visit us again.

It being past 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday, April 25, at 1:30 pm.

The House adjourned at 1803.

ANNIVERSARY OF ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Oriole): Yesterday, April 24, marked the 79th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. On April 24, 1915, the Armenian intellectuals were deported and mass killings began. Over 1.5 million Armenian people died in the genocide.

Today I will share with this House a section of Rev Avak Avakian's memoirs which was read by Natalie Jigerjian at this year's genocide commemoration at the Armenian Community Centre in the riding of Oriole.

"The year was 1918. My entire existence on earth had not spanned more than a decade. In those 10 years, I had seen much death and destruction, horrific memories that would haunt me till my dying days.

"On the eve of the beginning phases of the genocide, all the men in my family had been murdered. Our family was left without resources, protection or dignity."

Rev Avakian continues to tell how at age 10 he became the breadwinner of his family. One day he had to find food for his dying sister. As he was assisting her, a group of Turkish soldiers swept her away. He followed the carriage which held his sister to the outskirts of the town.

"As I ran, the carriage began pulling further and further away from me, and finally in the distance, hidden amidst trees, it stopped. The soldiers began unloading the bodies.

"Soon after they left, I approached the pit. It was an unimaginable hell full of bodies—I could hear groans and meek cries for help but I was powerless to do anything. The pit was deep and dark. I tried to find my sister, at the same time trying to figure out how to pull her out, when all of a sudden I saw her. My heart jumped for I saw that she was looking at me and she stirred and tried to reach me....

"And now, 70 years later, as I try to recall the memories of those years, I'm haunted by my sister's eyes, her beautiful dark Armenian eyes."

On the anniversary of this tragedy in Armenian history, I rise in this House on behalf of my constituents to remember the people who lost their lives and grieve with their families who are dedicated to keeping their memories alive.

TRANSPORTATION STUDY

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): The NDP government has been fiscally irresponsible. A perfect example of frivolous government spending is the Ministry of Transportation's expenditures on the Wally Majesky report, the human resource planning audit of Ontario public transit.

When this unsolicited, untendered MTO contract was awarded in November 1991 to Wally Majesky of FP Labour Consultants, the firm on retainer with the Amalgamated Transit Union, it was billed as a 12-month project which would cost the taxpayers $160,000. The report was finally released last week, about a year and a half after the original deadline. The final cost of the project is not yet known, but for some strange reason the public is now being asked to foot the bill for the printing of the report, replete with anti-private-sector cartoons and photos of Wally and his son.

Ministry staff warned in 1991 that the Majesky report would duplicate existing information. This has proven to be correct. MTO staff also had to assist the consultant in writing the final report. It's absurd that Ontario taxpayers have paid almost $200,000 for the Majeskys to travel the province and then take remedial writing classes from MTO staff.

One of the key Majesky recommendations is for the province to convene a major transit industry symposium by the end of 1994. After two years touring transit facilities and meeting with stakeholders, it is unacceptable that the primary recommendation is to have another meeting.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): Tomorrow, Men Walking Against Male Violence will be coming to Niagara Falls. These men are walking from Windsor to Toronto with a message, a profound message. I quote:

"Male violence is a wide range of actions, both personal and institutional, which oppress women in order to maintain a world of gender privilege and power. Violence can be physical, emotional or verbal. It also includes economic and cultural violence which are institutionally maintained to deny women full human rights.

"Patriarchal privilege is a system of power relationships to endorse this oppression, and cuts across many cultures. Our maleness is so deeply based upon this domination that we are literally lost and threatened without it. It is only the changing of this system of power that will bring about the end of male violence.

"The walkers come from an activist tradition which has opposed war, apartheid, First World intervention in the Third World and oppression of aboriginal people. Within that tradition, we must walk against male violence."

I thank all the young people from St Michael's High School who will be involved in the walk on Wednesday morning, as I will, and also my local labour council in Niagara Falls for organizing this event. I want to encourage everyone to be involved.

ELECTIONS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): Today is the eve of South Africa's general election. It will end one of the most repressive situations in the world. Twenty-three million people will be given the opportunity of exercising their basic democratic right, the right to vote. Thousands of people have lost their lives, and even today people continue to lose their lives so that their basic necessities be addressed.

But before we start celebrating this great democratic achievement on April 29, the lives of those who were deprived will not be changed in any visible way.

The policy of apartheid which was established in 1913 was the crudest form of racism, and the damage it has done to the lives of millions of blacks will take years to repair.

We are all aware that slavery was abolished over a hundred years ago, and yet we continue to this day to make anti-discriminatory laws providing protection for those who have been shut out of the mainstream. Blacks today continue to feel the brunt of poverty and be denied the opportunity for fair access to employment because of the colour of their skin.

The atrocity of the Nazis in the Second World War ended 50 years ago and victims of this brutal era continue to be subjected to malicious attacks and abuses by individuals committed to hate crimes. Women in our society, although given the right to vote and to participate in our society, are often treated as second-class citizens.

Before we take the trumpets and bugles out, we must ask ourselves as Canadians, are we committed to assist and support the dreams and aspirations of the millions of South Africans who were denied for so long to exist as human beings?

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have stood in this House on many occasions and have asked the Minister of the Environment to reconsider his stand on refusing to study all the alternatives to the waste management problem.

The minister has blamed the federal government for not closing the border to the United States and for not implementing a garbage tax. He has said he is not responsible for decisions made by the Interim Waste Authority. Minister, you are responsible. Your government set up the Interim Waste Authority and gave it the dictatorial power it is now using against the residents of Caledon, Durham and Vaughan.

If the Minister of the Environment is so opposed to Ontario municipal waste going south, perhaps he can explain to members of the Legislature why he is issuing certificates of approval to municipalities that allow them to ship their waste to the United States and other Canadian provinces.

I have a copy of a certificate of approval issued by the Minister of the Environment last year that states, "Any waste requiring disposal shall only be disposed of at a ministry approved site in Ontario or at a United States or Canadian facility licensed or certified to accept such waste by the appropriate governmental agency."

The minister is saying one thing in this House and doing something else back at the office. It's time for the minister to deal with the reality that says that waste management is an issue that should not be clouded by ideological philosophy, but rather that there should be an informed debate and a decision based on the facts.

TOUCHSTONE YOUTH CENTRE

Mr Gary Malkowski (York East): The Touchstone Youth Centre, an emergency shelter for homeless youths in my riding, has been quite busy lately in its pursuit for meeting the needs of youth in York East.

Last Saturday I participated in a well-attended Monte Carlo night that was held at the York Banquet Hall. It was a very successful evening. One of the things the proceeds from this fund-raiser will help support is a recreational program that the centre is initiating.

The centre has long been aware of the need for a recreational program to provide physical activities and arts and crafts to the disadvantaged young people in our neighbourhoods. Their arts and crafts program will hold instructed workshops in the areas of painting, sewing, cooking and crafts on a weekly basis. The physical fitness program will include activities such as basketball, baseball, tennis, road hockey, badminton, soccer, volleyball, fitness, t'ai chi, yoga, table tennis and cycling.

I am pleased to announce that our government, through the Ministry of Culture, Tourism and Recreation, has provided a grant in the amount of $22,679 towards the startup costs of this recreational program. With our help, the centre feels confident that it is capable of becoming self-sufficient in the management of a long-term recreation program. I commend the Touchstone Youth Centre for this and many other achievements.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): I am rising to congratulate all those good people who joined in the fight to save the jobs of some 90 court officers, commissioners, who were threatened with expulsion from the courts at the hands of a rather cold-hearted New Democratic Party government.

As you will recall, these court officers, virtually all of them senior citizens from age 60 to 80, were going to be thrown out of work for some unknown reason. The expense was not a great expense. Their jobs were important and people really all over the greater Toronto area, under the leadership of a variety of people, including a couple of journalists, fought to have those jobs saved.

The good news isn't perfect news. Apparently those over 75 are going to be summarily dismissed, again for no apparent reason. The saving is not great. But those 65 to 75 have been, as the expression goes, grandfathered and will be allowed to stay in their jobs for another four years. This is just another example of where the power of the people, when it has good substance and can speak strongly, can overcome even the most arbitrary initiatives of government. I think it's incumbent upon us to congratulate them and to wonder publicly why ever the Attorney General of this province wanted to do those fellows out of their jobs.

ONTARIO FILM REVIEW BOARD

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): I call on the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to hold a review of the Theatres Act and a public inquiry into the Ontario Film Review Board.

Recently, the minister said the OFRB is almost obsolete because of new technologies that are beyond the province's control, such as video channels, computer games and virtual reality.

The minister may be unable to control the development of new technologies, but she can regulate many of them. For instance, as the member for Waterloo North proposed, the Ontario government could amend the Theatres Act to regulate not only films, but also computer and video games.

Recently, the OFRB has been the centre of controversy. For instance, last spring the board wanted to loosen its guidelines for adult sex films. Only after public outcry did the board back down.

I have called for a review of the OFRB and the Theatres Act many times. Now is an ideal time for a review, since the chair of the board has resigned and several members' terms are about to expire.

Minister, last week you said, about the new technology depicting violence and pornography, and I quote, "We'd better...start coming up with ways to deal with it before we do lose control of it." Exactly, Madam Minister. Get on with your job: Replace the Theatres Act and the Ontario Film Review Board.

SCHOOL FACILITIES

Mr Mark Morrow (Wentworth East): The people of Wentworth east, and specifically Stoney Creek Mountain, are hoping the Minister of Education and Training is going to announce funding for a new high school during this session.

In 1991, the Honourable Tony Silipo, then the Minister of Education, approved the purchase of land at the corner of Highway 20 and Highland Road. The Wentworth County Board of Education and the residents have been waiting since then for them to begin construction. They are still waiting.

With the cost of busing to the lower city and sending students to the Hamilton Board of Education schools, a new school would save Wentworth county taxpayers about $900,000 a year. With Saltfleet High School badly in need of repairs, at an estimated cost of between $8 million and $10 million, I think it would be more economical in the long run to build a high school on the proposed location.

We are not talking about a few things that need fixing in Saltfleet, but a major overhaul to repair plumbing and health-related issues. The community of Heritage Green sees a new high school as a resource for the whole neighbourhood, with its isolated nature and lack of community focus. A new high school could inject vitality into the area in which everyone could benefit under this government: lifelong training by people trying to enter the workforce for the first time and others who need upgrading to prepare for the year 2000, a major priority.

The residents of Heritage Green need a facility for this to take place. I implore the Minister of Education to approve the request by the Wentworth County Board of Education for a new high school in this community.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I invite all members to join me in welcoming to our chamber this afternoon, seated in the Speaker's gallery, Mr Maris Gailis, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of State Reform from Latvia. Welcome.

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I would also ask all members to join me in welcoming the 17th group of pages to serve in the third session of the 35th Parliament: Matthew Bassani, Lawrence; Brigid Brown, Perth; Jeremy Chambers, Norfolk; Michael Chicoine, Durham Centre; Benjamin Deacon, Cambridge; Michelle Drylie, Mississauga South; Dominik Ken, Ottawa East; Olivia Landry, Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings; Jason Leong, Fort York; Heidi Machina, Essex-Kent; Riley McComb, Sault Ste Marie; Dilhan Mills, Scarborough-Ellesmere; Erin Murch, Parry Sound; Marion Murphy, Windsor-Walkerville; Heather O'Keefe, Etobicoke-Lakeshore; Jonathan Quick, Eglinton; Bronwyn Rayfield, Carleton East; Joseph Reitano, Durham East; Ryan Shelly, Prescott and Russell; Benjamin Speers, Brant-Haldimand; Denise Stoter, Hastings-Peterborough; Lisa Walters, Oshawa; Melanie Winfield, Lake Nipigon; Matthew Wiper, Essex South. Please welcome our latest group of pages.

ORAL QUESTIONS

VIOLENCE

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): When I last left this Legislature on Thursday of last week, we were talking about law and order, crime and punishment. In the absence of the Premier, in the absence of the Solicitor General and in the absence of the Attorney General, I will ask the acting Premier or the acting minister of justice or the acting Solicitor General.

Interjections.

Mr Conway: Let me be clear. I am asking a deadly serious question. I have in my hands today the front pages of the Chatham Daily News and the Windsor Star. All of Ontario and certainly Chatham, Ontario, were shocked and horrified to awaken on Sunday to find out that a little boy of seven years of age was bludgeoned to death in that southwestern Ontario community.

I ask the government of Ontario, whomsoever chooses to act, can you tell us what you know about the circumstances of that horrible crime in southwestern Ontario last weekend?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Deputy Premier): I would be the last one to trivialize an issue like this or to treat it in a partisan nature in any way whatsoever. I would simply say to the acting leader of the official opposition that we do take these matters as seriously as any government should be expected to take them and do what we can to prevent these matters in the future.

I think the acting leader would know that there has been an offer by the government—it has already happened, I understand—to sit down with the House leaders of the other two parties to work out some of the details on an all-party committee that would help us wrestle with these very, very difficult and painful situations.

Mr Conway: If there is a concern evident in my voice it's because my constituents, and I've got to believe everyone's constituents, are increasingly horrified about what we hear on a daily basis. This crime in Chatham is among the most heinous that I have seen in my time in this place.

There has been a lot of debate. A few days ago, I was recommending on behalf of the Liberal Party some modest proposals as to what we might do: better control of ammunition, tougher sentencing, no plea-bargaining around gun-related offences.

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): That sounds like the Reform Party.

Mr Conway: I want to say to anybody who wants to interject, the people whom I represent, of all political parties, are concerned about safe and secure communities.

My question to the government is, what can you tell us today specifically is the plan of your government to deal with the growing concern across the province about the kind of crime that we saw again this weekend? What specifically can we expect and when by way of a government response to this kind of criminal activity and the growing concern across the province about it?

Hon Mr Laughren: Without in any sense being flippant in my response, I know the acting leader would understand that there are no instant solutions to a culture of violence that exists in some people. For us to snap our fingers and say, "This is the response and this is how we're going to solve the problem," would not convince the member opposite, nor should it.

I think what people want in the province is a reasoned response, one that crosses party lines, one that does not engage in any kind of partisanship or histrionics but simply asks the politicians at the federal and provincial level—I don't believe that on a matter like this the province or, as I heard someone suggest, even a city should act independently of the direction in which we should be moving.

I would hope that the all-party committee could come to grips with what it is it wants to deal with in terms of an agenda and the issues that we will wrestle with, that there will be a good working relationship, and I see no reason why not, with the federal government, which has a large responsibility in this area.

That's not a question of passing the buck to somebody else; it's a question of recognizing legitimate jurisdictional responsibilities that are there now and have been there for some time. I would hope that by sitting down together, both those of us in this assembly and with the federal government, and quite frankly with the municipalities as well, we're able to deal with some of the issues raised by the honourable member.

Mr Conway: Let me be clear. I accept what my friend is saying, that there are no magical cures to this systemic problem that apparently is seizing the nation. My colleagues, I think, would quickly agree that there is no magic solution.

But the people of Ontario, and let me tell you, today in Chatham and Windsor and elsewhere, the mothers and fathers of young people, want to know, what is the government's plan specifically? What do you propose to do, how do you propose to move forward and on the basis of what kind of timetable? Those are the questions that cry out for some response, and once again I put that to the minister.

Hon Mr Laughren: I'm a little uneasy with some of the language being used by the member for Renfrew North, and this once again is not meant to trivialize the enormity of the issue, but simply to imply that suddenly we have a new culture of violence that's sweeping the nation I think is not to put it in its proper perspective. The federal Minister of Justice I think stood back from the issue just last week and made what I thought were some reasoned and measured remarks on this matter.

I would simply say to the acting leader of the official opposition that we do want to work on this. Nobody can be anything but appalled when these incidents happen, and we all will be working together on it. I don't think any one government or any one minister has the answer to all of these issues, but I do think the answer will be coming together with the various levels of government. I very, very much hope, by the way, that the all-party committee in this assembly is able to reach an agreement on what the issues are with which we should be dealing.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): A new question to the Minister of Health, and it concerns Houselink, that happy world that has been audited, and with no thanks to the government of Ontario. Houselink, a community-based, not-for-profit housing organization here in Metropolitan Toronto, has been audited by the provincial government, and I've had the opportunity in recent days to look at the audit that was leaked to the public, again not to any credit of the minister.

To the Minister of Health: Having read this audit, what a swamp. What a swamp of inappropriate, unauthorized expenditures of scarce public dollars in the hundreds and millions of dollars: inappropriate expense claims, foreign trips, antique purchases—

1400

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): When did that happen?

Mr Conway: When did it happen?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation and Minister Responsible for Francophone Affairs): Go back. What was the year?

Mr Conway: This audit was ordered by the previous government in 1990. The audit was returned to the new government in the fall of 1990, and this government sat on this incredible report for years.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Why?

Mr Conway: And the question is why. But my first question is, Minister, can you tell us specifically how you have dealt with a number of the extraordinary and incredible maladministrations reported in this audit?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I'd be happy to, because, as the member has identified of course, the years in which this organization was behaving inappropriately were the years in which the party of which the member is a member was in office. Yes, the audit was ordered, but the audit in draft form was received in October 1990; the final audit was received in October 1991.

In the course of that period the ministry working with the agency identified surplus funds which had not been spent and identified expenditures which had been made which would have been approved had approval been sought as it ought to have been. As a result of that discussion and process, the ministry recovered $1,735,775.00.

Mr Conway: My information from reading this audit would suggest that hundreds of thousands of dollars is still outstanding, and the question is, what's happened to those moneys?

When you look at this audit and you see this incredible behaviour, you ask yourself the question, why were the police not called in to pursue at least the prospect of a police investigation and some charges? Because you have to believe that in this day and age, if any accountable public servant spent or caused money to be spent in this fashion, it would be of some real interest to police authorities. That was not done, apparently.

Is the Minister of Health aware that the legal counsel to this group called Houselink, this community-based organization that has been responsible for some of this outrageous and indefensible behaviour, is none other than the husband of her chief of staff, that Houselink's lawyer is a certain Mr Bruce Lewis, who is none other than the spouse of Mary Lewis, your chief of staff?

Hon Mrs Grier: I think it's important that we all be aware of the chronology of the events that are being discussed with respect to Houselink. The inappropriate allocation of funds occurred between 1988 and 1990. The audit finally was received in October 1991. The funds were recovered. The executive director ceased her employment with the organization; a new director was hired in March 1992. Since that time, yes, I am aware, that the legal firm and the lawyer is the spouse of my chief of staff.

I can assure the member that there is no conflict of interest. My chief of staff was not involved in any way prior to the time when in fact the events took place and has not discussed the matter with me since the matter came to my attention.

Mr Conway: The hard-pressed taxpayers of Ontario would read this audit and be left speechless. They would say to the—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Mr Conway: Let me be clear. I submit that any maladministration, any malfeasance, irrespective of when it occurred, should be pursued and, if necessary, prosecuted to the full extent.

Our government ordered this audit because of some concern. The audit came in and it paints a picture of incredible maladministration—

Hon Fred Wilson (Minister without Portfolio and Chief Government Whip): All under the Liberals.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Conway: —a swamp in which millions of dollars were inappropriately handled and hundreds of thousands of dollars are not yet accounted for.

Hon Mr Wilson: Well, you should have been worried then. You didn't seem to have been worried then.

Mr Conway: You say: "Why was there no stronger action? Why were the police not called in?" Quite frankly, I worry a lot about a situation—when faced with this kind of a report, we have a situation that the lawyer—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Sarnia.

Mr Conway: —for the group under scrutiny, under investigation, is married to the chief of staff of the minister who is one of the principal funding agencies.

In light of this revelation, will the minister immediately submit this matter to the public accounts committee so there can be a full and independent investigation into the circumstances that gave rise to this incredible maladministration and misappropriation of public funds?

Hon Mrs Grier: Let me point out to the member that the taxpayers of this province took action about the incredible maladministration of this and many other agencies: They changed the government.

Let me also remind him, as he sets up straw men and then attempts to pull them down, that what was found by the audit was the allegation that the agency had $2.1 million of unspent funds, which it recommended the ministry recover. The ministry sat down with the agency and identified that $1.7 million ought to be recovered; $440,000 was in fact appropriate to cover expenditures that had been made. So the ministry recovered $1.7 million; $1.7 million plus $400,000 equals $2.1 million, which was the amount of money the auditor found allegedly in an unspent fund.

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): I would like to follow up with the Ministry of Housing concerning this growing scandal at Houselink during the final two years of the previous Liberal government.

Minister, it is my understanding that both your ministry and the Ministry of Health have conducted special audits of Houselink's mismanagement and misuse of public funds. The audit prepared by the Ministry of Health was finally made public last week; not voluntarily, I might add, but it was finally made public.

Can you explain why you refused to release your internal audit done by your ministry when a reporter with the Toronto Star requested it?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): The request was made in February, I believe, and the recommendation that was made by the freedom of information coordinator at the Ministry of Housing was that the release of the audit report would put third-party interests at risk. For that reason, the ministry recommended non-release and informed the reporter that he might—in this case, a he—appeal that decision.

I learned of that decision last week and since then asked for a review of the decision not to release the report. The report will be released this afternoon.

Mr Harris: Clearly the only third parties, then, that might have been at risk were those who may have done something wrong. If nobody had anything to hide or cover up, there would be nobody at risk. We understand that.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Harris: First of all, it's downright embarrassing to the public of this province, to the members of the Legislature, that we have to probe question after question after question to get access to information that should be made public immediately. These reports are three and four years old.

I would like to ask the minister specifically, since she's obviously been following this case with interest a little bit from afar—now she's going to release the report; she must then have reviewed and know all of the information, since it's going to be public this afternoon—what two people went to Berlin, to Germany? Could you give us the names and the reason for that trip?

Hon Ms Gigantes: No, I cannot because I have not reviewed those reports intensively myself. They will be released because, in my view, this was an audit by government of a government contract and it is perfectly reasonable that it should be released publicly. I simply cannot give names. I'm sure in fact the member knows the names he's after. Maybe he'd like to bring the names out and have a discussion.

Mr Harris: You know, you sit here and you cover up and you cover up and you cover up. You refuse to table information. We tried to get the annual reports—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Durham East, come to order.

Mr Harris: We tried to get the annual reports of Houselink in the ministry and were told that your ministry does not keep the annual reports of Houselink. With all the controversy going on, will you as well ensure this afternoon that you release the annual reports of Houselink, which should be public information, which should be kept in your ministry files as well, should be made available certainly to the members of the opposition?

Will you do two things: In addition to releasing your report that you've kept hidden all this time, will you also make sure that the annual reports of Houselink to the ministry are released, and will you also release to this Legislature the entire involvement of Robin Sears's mother in this whole affair?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I can't answer in the affirmative because I simply don't know that such a relationship exists, frankly. When he asked for the release of the annual reports of a non-profit agency called Houselink, the Ministry of Housing doesn't run that non-profit corporation. Those will be available. I would assume that Houselink would provide them to the leader of the third party. Our obligation in the Ministry of Housing, which

I'm quite prepared to say is our obligation, is to provide the public with information about our relationship as a ministry with Houselink. There was a contractual obligation there. There was a contract between Houselink and the Ministry of Housing. The report that was undertaken is a report that I am quite prepared to release, and it will be released this afternoon.

If he has other questions, he'll have to be much more forthcoming about his purposes and his sources of information and who's related to whom and who likes whom and who goes on what trips—I don't know, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker: New question.

Mr Harris: If there is some other minister who is responsible for the misuse of these funds and the coverup, perhaps the minister could tell me who it is I'm supposed to ask.

The Speaker: Could the leader of the third party address his second question, please.

Interjection.

The Speaker: The member for Cochrane South, come to order.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Cochrane South is asked to come to order. New question, the leader of the third party.

CAMPING FEES

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My second question is to the Minister of Finance. Minister, can you confirm that in your desperate search for revenue, you intend this year, for the first time, to tax Boy Scouts and Girl Guides who want to camp at our provincial parks this summer?

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): The question takes me somewhat by surprise, and perhaps it would be—

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Always be prepared, Floyd.

Hon Mr Laughren: Perhaps part of the credo of being prepared is to wait for the supplementary.

Mr Harris: As the member from Etobicoke says, the motto is, always be prepared.

You ought not to be surprised, Minister, because you have sent out by way of edict to all political and non-political people affiliated with this government to try to figure out every possible way that you can wring every last nickel out of the public of Ontario. Boy Scouts and other six- to 17-year-old groups will now have to pay a new group camping fee, $14 per stay, plus $1 for every child, plus $2 for every supervisor, plus their reservation fee—all brand-new fees to go into our provincial parks and not use any of the water or facilities, but simply to pitch their tents.

This may not seem like a lot to you, Minister, but this is the first time in the history of this province that we've had to go after these kids, trying to teach them a little bit about conservation, a little bit about managing of our forests, that we've had to go into their pockets.

For parents sending their kids to campgrounds, for the kids who sell apples to raise money, it may mean the difference between going to a provincial park this year and not going to a provincial park. In fact, I had a letter from a troop leader in Coldwater saying just that, that this will prevent particularly the needy kids from being able to have that experience this year.

I know it costs money to run provincial parks, but instead of making six- to 17-year-olds help pay for your revenue shortfall, wouldn't it make more sense to ask these groups to help out around the park when they're there? Wouldn't that make more sense?

Hon Mr Laughren: I don't think the groups that go to the parks go there as a form of workfare. I think they go there for other reasons that are closely related to the organizations to which they belong.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. The member for Durham East, please come to order.

Hon Mr Laughren: Mr Speaker, if I could be serious about this, in the past there have been different groups pay different rates. Some groups didn't pay any fee at all in the provincial parks for group camping and other groups did. This will bring a standardized—I believe it's a half fare, 50% rate for groups. I don't think it's at all draconian and I don't think it will discourage the use of our provincial parks.

The leader of the third party is the first one on his feet at every opportunity, telling us that we've got to manage the store better and that we've got to get our deficit down and that we've got to get value for services received. I think that's simply what we're trying to do and I don't think it's imposing an unfair burden on groups that will use our very fine provincial parks.

Mr Harris: Roger White, one of the key members with Boy Scouts of Canada, believes that some Cubs and Brownies and Scouts and Guides will not have this educational experience because you plan across-the-board, brand-new fees for the first time for them to have that experience in our parks.

Treasurer, last year you introduced $240 million in new fees in your budget. In fact, since 1990 you have collected over $2 billion in what you pretend are non-tax revenues. You didn't hike all these; the Liberals did some of those. In fact, those Tories before, right back in those glory years of 42 years, had some fees. Some $2 billion last year, Treasurer, a lot of them you introduced, in non-tax revenues.

You have told taxpayers that we're at the wall, that we've reached the limit. There will be no, you say, significant tax increases in this budget. But what you haven't said is that you have asked everybody—every minister, your cabinet, all the bureaucracy—to find every last nickel that you can wring out of the Ontario population. That's the direction that you've given.

Will you commit today that just as there will be no tax increases in this budget, there will be no what you call "revenue enhancers," "user fees," "co-payments," all those things that you bring in? Will you also commit to that to the beleaguered taxpayer in this province, to the beleaguered families, and now, in addition, to the beleaguered children of Ontario?

Hon Mr Laughren: I wanted to assure the member for Nipissing, the leader of the third party, that we will not be introducing user fees in the health care system, as someone—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Laughren: That may upset the leader of the third party, but I did want to get that on the record. I don't think it's inappropriate to ask people to pay for some of the services that they receive to recapture some of the costs of delivering those services. I know that the leader of the third party is implying by his questions that these services should be provided free, all of them presumably, or perhaps he's going to pick and choose.

I thought that the Liberal opposition had cornered the market on trying to have it both ways in this province when it comes to deficits and taxation, but I see now that the Tories have moved into Liberal territory and are calling for no more revenues but lower deficits and keep your expenditures up as well.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): My question is to the Minister of Housing. Can the Minister of Housing confirm that Mr Bruce Lewis, legal counsel to the embattled Houselink, in fact made representations to her government that her government not release this damning auditor's report about the operations of Houselink, because such release of such a report could impair third-party interests, like the people over at Houselink? Can she confirm that Mr Bruce Lewis, legal counsel to Houselink, made those very representations to her government, that this damning report not be released, because it might injure or impair third-party interests?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): No, I cannot. I can confirm, as I said earlier, that when a freedom of information request was made of the Ministry of Housing for the release of the audit report, the coordinator of freedom of information felt it was a question where third-party interests were involved and sought clarification of that and confirmation of that with the representatives of the group, but I can't confirm who spoke to whom. All I can confirm, and I will confirm it for the third time today, is that this audit report will be released this afternoon, and that is as a result of my decision to have the decision not to release it, which was made in February and which I learned about last week, reviewed, and it now will be released.

Mr Conway: One reads this report and one understands how, if one were at Houselink, one would never want this report released. I'll tell you, this is a tale of abuse, of no accountability. I mean, the taxpayers, when they read this, are—

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy and Minister Responsible for Native Affairs): What it is a tale of is, the responsible minister decided to release the report.

Mr Conway: By and large, the people responsible at Houselink are what I would charitably describe as a nest of interconnected New Democrats.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation and Minister Responsible for Francophone Affairs): Oh, Mr Speaker.

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): You talk about low-lives, Sean.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. Order, the member for Lake Nipigon and the member for Chatham-Kent.

Mr Conway: I've got to tell you, you just take a look at this community-based organization. Meg Sears is not my mother.

The Speaker: Could the member place a question, please.

Mr Conway: I want to know from this government, given what this report says about inappropriate spending, foreign trips—

Hon Mr Wildman: Which government did this?

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): Which government?

Mr Conway: Our government ordered this, and it has been received. It was sat upon—

Interjections.

Mr Conway: Listen, let me be clear. The taxpayers want some accountability. The taxpayers want and deserve some accountability.

The Speaker: Could the member please place a question.

Mr Conway: I want to know from the Minister of Housing what specifically she is prepared to do to ensure that the kind of wanton unaccountability, the kind of crazy spending on unvouchered expenditures—

The Speaker: Would the member please complete his question.

Mr Conway: —unapproved landscaping, foreign travel and much more—will the Minister of Housing, recognizing the gravity of this report, unlike her colleague the Minister of Health, immediately refer this report to the public accounts committee of this Legislature so there can be an immediate and full examination of all that went on here and so the public can know who is responsible—

The Speaker: The question's been asked. Would the member please take his seat.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Out of all that, I guess the real question is, when did this happen, how did it happen, who was responsible? The question can be answered thus: He's quite correct in identifying that the previous Liberal government realized that there was something wrong in the situation of the contract with Houselink. That government initiated an audit report—

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): You suppressed the report because you knew it was a slam against non-profit housing.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —which in fact was presented to the government once we had been elected.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): And you buried it.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Following on that report, steps were taken—I can't speak for the Ministry of Health, but I can certainly speak for the Ministry of Housing—to recover moneys that go back as far as 1986. That means that there was a long period of time when the contractual relationship between Houselink and the Ministry of Housing was inadequately supervised. That's what the audit shows. We are releasing that audit.

TENDERING PROCESS

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Ontario's open tendering process for roadbuilding contracts was developed in the 1950s. It was developed to ensure that there was no fraud or collusion in the awarding of roadbuilding contracts.

You and the Premier, Minister, sold this process of a consortium on 407 on the basis that you needed a consortium in order for them to have the financial strength to be able to raise the private sector funding to build 407. We now know that the private sector funding is out the window. We don't know whether the bid on the 407 was the lowest bid. Will you now restore confidence in the public sector, restore integrity and open up the 407 to bids from all companies?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): Thank you, to the member opposite. The 407 is indeed, one more time, the largest highway project in North America, well above $1 billion. Very early, at the beginning of the tendering process—which included participation from two giant, major consortia made up of several companies and monitored by Price Waterhouse: due diligence, due process of all members of each consortium involved.

Using the corporation as a facilitator to make it happen in a period of six years, in lieu of a period of 25 to 30 years—I'm referring here specifically to construction—very early in the tendering process, at the beginning, strict instructions to stay away from lobbying towards elected members, any member, specifically any member of cabinet, "Don't even have a cup of coffee with those people." In lieu of that, appoint four deputy ministers, put in place a foolproof system.

What are the gains? Value engineering, saving $200 million to $300 million, and the possibility to take this turnkey operation and market the project all over the world, putting Ontario engineers to work. Those are two key elements, and 20,000 jobs, build the project within six years in lieu of 25 to 30 years.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the minister conclude his response.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Suffice it to say, a success story.

1430

Mr Turnbull: What a load of bunk. You know that if the private sector had known this was going to be funded by the public sector, a lot more companies could have bid on it. You know that, sir. In June 1993, when you were asked if the whole bidding process and eventual awarding of contracts for 407 would be open for the closest public scrutiny and for intense examination by the Legislature, you said: "Absolutely. We have an obligation to make sure that everything is aboveboard." Will you make good on that promise, sir, and table all the details of both the winning and the losing bid in the Legislature immediately?

Hon Mr Pouliot: There were many, many companies involved. We are still in negotiations, and the member will pardon me in not wishing—

Mr Turnbull: You've already chosen a company. What's the use of negotiating?

Hon Mr Pouliot: —to jeopardize the integrity of the project or the negotiation.

Mr Turnbull: Have you ever negotiated a contract in your life?

The Speaker: The member for York Mills, please come to order.

Hon Mr Pouliot: The savings, because of economy of scale and for reasons specifically explained before, are obvious to all. Why? They have to deliver on time and at a fixed price. This is no repeat Ontario Hydro or Sky-Dome spectacle. The price is guaranteed. It's not a cost-plus operation. Yet we recognize the ability of government to borrow at a cheaper price, 50 to 75 basis points lower. And who benefits when you can borrow money at a cheaper price? You have the answer: The users, the people who have to pay a toll fee, won't be paying as much as originally planned. There again, in terms of financing, in terms of construction, the process has proven to be flawless and of benefit to all.

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Pouliot: I wish the member would rally to the success story. Otherwise, he risks being left in the dark in some distant and remote place and not be able to share in the official opening and the success story.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr Donald Abel (Wentworth North): My question is also to the Minister of Transportation. Last week I rose in the Legislature and spoke about taming a killer. I was making reference to the infamous killer highway, that stretch of Highway 6 between Highways 403 and 401.

Over the last five years, at least 21 people have died and dozens more have been injured on this 24-kilometre stretch of highway. Speeding was the number one cause. In the very near future, photo-radar will become a reality in this province, and as it begins—

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): "Please put it on Highway 6."

Mr Abel: You can interject all you want. This happens to be a very important question.

The project was designed to save lives and to reduce speed and fatalities, and it's been proven—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Mr Abel: —in jurisdictions around the world that it works.

The Speaker: Could the member place a question, please.

Mr Abel: The killer highway has carved its notoriety with a heavy hand. If we have the tools to reduce the number of accidents and deaths, we have the responsibility to act. In an attempt to tame the killer, Minister, will you consider extending the use of photo-radar to the 24-kilometre stretch of the killer highway?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): We appreciate the concern of the member regarding the tragic accidents, some of which are directly the result of excessive speed. Of course we share in the sorrow.

Our motto at Transportation is to make the roads of Ontario the safest in North America. Photo-radar is part of our safety initiatives. We have graduated driver's licences. We're building roads and we're making them safer with improved engineering. Photo-radar is one of the important components. The OPP will decide which stretch of highway is most deserving during the pilot project. Will it be, in this instance, Highway 6? Will it be the 401 and the 403? They, in their wisdom, since they're the foot soldiers, will decide where is the best application of that deterrent which is photo-radar.

PARAMEDIC SERVICES

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Ottawa South): My question is for the Minister of Health. The minister will know that for the people of Ottawa-Carleton paramedics are a very, very important issue. Our community knows we have one of the lowest survival rates in North America for our heart attack victims, and we've been working to change that. We've worked extremely hard to get you to give us paramedics like those you fund in Toronto, Hamilton and Oshawa.

In January of this year you said you would give us paramedics through a study, so in January we stopped collecting petition cards. I'm now going to turn over to you the petitions we collected, and I ask that a page come here. I'm going to turn over this box, together with 11 others, containing 55,000 individually signed petition cards, and I ask that they be laid at the minister's feet. I'll give the pages a moment to place the petitions there.

Minister, we in Ottawa-Carleton are concerned that you're not honouring your commitment to give us paramedics. Since January, no money has been made available and training hasn't started. When will we see paramedics on the streets of Ottawa-Carleton?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I'm very well aware, having spoken to the member from Ottawa and having been there myself, of the enormous interest in Ottawa-Carleton for having paramedics. I'm also very well aware of the enormous progress that has been made in Ottawa-Carleton with respect to dealing with emergencies, since as a result of my commitment that we would work through an evaluation of the value of paramedics has occurred—there has been $400,000 committed to defibrillation, which is a precondition of having paramedics on the street. There have been extraordinary efforts made to teach cardiopulmonary resuscitation even in the schools in Ottawa-Carleton, another prerequisite to having paramedics be effective. It doesn't make any difference whether a paramedic gets there if they don't get there till 20 minutes after the emergency has occurred, so I welcome the cooperation of Ottawa-Carleton.

In response to the specific question, the very rigorous evaluation and scientifically designed program to evaluate the benefit of paramedics that I committed myself to earlier this year is proceeding, is on track. There is no reason for all of these people in Ottawa-Carleton to share the member's concern that they will not have paramedics on their streets.

Mr McGuinty: Perhaps I can encourage the minister to be a bit more specific. On January 14 of this year, your cabinet colleague the member for Ottawa Centre announced with great fanfare that Ottawa-Carleton would be part of a study on paramedics. In her press release she specifically said, "The advanced life support training should be completed by the end of this year and fully trained paramedics should be working in ambulances early in 1995."

We have the Ontario minister with special responsibilities for Ottawa-Carleton specifically saying that training would be completed by the end of this year and paramedics would be on our streets early in 1995. Now, that's not what I hear you say now. As a result of this minister's word, as a result of her solemn commitment on a matter of the utmost gravity to the people of Ottawa-Carleton, we stopped pressuring you. We only collected 55,000 petitions.

If the minister is now reneging on her colleague's solemn commitment, we can only conclude it was never a true commitment and only made for the shallowest, most cynical of political purposes: just to shut us up. I want to give the minister the opportunity now to confirm that this is not the case. Will the minister now confirm that training for Ottawa-Carleton paramedics will be completed by the end of this year and that they will be on the streets in early 1995?

Hon Mrs Grier: That was what the member for Ottawa Centre said in January, that is what I'm saying, and nothing that has happened since then has done anything to change the situation. In fact, just a week ago I received a unanimous consensus report from the research group that is designing the research. The training and the investment in the defibrillators and in CPR has begun. I have every reason to believe that Ottawa will be one of the first places, as part of this study, where paramedics are on the streets, and I have every reason to believe that the optimistic timetable my colleague announced in January will in fact be lived up to.

All I can say to the member is, relax. Don't go collecting petitions. Put your efforts into making sure that when we make this major investment in an expansion of services in Ottawa-Carleton, we are sure we get the results that all of us devoutly hope for.

SKILLS TRAINING

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): My question is for the Minister of Education and Training, who seems to have disappeared.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy and Minister Responsible for Native Affairs): No, he's there.

Mrs Cunningham: Oh, sorry. I'll welcome him back to the province of Ontario and to his seat, and then I will ask him a question about OTAB, the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board.

This morning we met with the two co-chairs of OTAB, Mr Donald Green and Mr Glenn Pattinson, who have a tremendous responsibility, and Mr Tim Millard, the interim chief executive officer. They showed us their mission statement, which was an equitable system of training and adjustment programs and services in Ontario.

I think everybody agrees we need a partnership with our secondary schools so that students can participate in programs. We've had the SWAP programs, we've had some modified apprenticeship programs—I'll refer to them as MAP—and some articulation programs with our community colleges. Some of these have met with success, but there's far too much red tape, there's a lack of support in changes in legislation and regulations, and there is a lack of will to make these things happen.

Are you aware of these concerns, and what are you going to do about it?

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): I am aware that there is a long history of the lack of coordination between our elementary-secondary education system, our post-secondary education system and our training system. That's one of the reasons the government has brought those three ministries together and has set up the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board, so there can be a much more coordinated approach to develop an education and training system in the province.

It will take some time to do that. Progress is being made, but it can't happen overnight. We've got a lot of years when there wasn't much attention paid to this whole system that we have to make up for, and we're trying to do that as quickly as we can.

Mrs Cunningham: I'm glad to see that the minister isn't as impatient as others in this province.

This is People and Skills in the New Global Economy, the former Premier's Council report. It states that in Ontario the average age of apprenticeship is 26 years. In the highly successful West German system, apprenticeship is actually part of the secondary school system. We've spent lots of money over the years—and you well know that—sending teachers over there. They've been coming back for 20 years to tell us to change it. The average age of apprenticeship there is 16.

This is my question: Did you know that we have a dropout rate right now of 50% in our apprenticeship programs? Did you know also that if you want to stay in school beyond the age of 21 in our secondary schools, you have to pay fees?

We're looking at major changes to make these systems work, and I ask you if you would look at the legislation with regard not only to my former request in the former question but to the exit age of 21, just so we can start making this system work. If we don't, we will not get the kind of compliance and the kind of enthusiasm for apprenticeship training programs in our secondary schools. Will you look at the exit age barrier?

Hon Mr Cooke: I would just caution the member about taking a look at some of the other systems in the about taking a look at some of the other systems in the world and saying they are systems that should automatically be put in place in Ontario.

Mrs Cunningham: That's not what I said. That's what this report said.

Hon Mr Cooke: I had an opportunity to speak to some folks from other jurisdictions in western Europe last week, and I can tell you, I'm not sure we'd want to take the German system and apply it here, where they stream off thousands and thousands of students early on in education and put them off into technological education and therefore they have no opportunities to go on to other forms of education.

Part of the recommendation from the Premier's report, which I think the member's referring to, was the establishment of the Ontario Training and Adjustment Board, and in fact we've acted on that recommendation.

It's interesting that the member selectively endorses some of the recommendations. She didn't support OTAB, and I think that was the major step that needed to be taking place in this province to once and for all get our training programs in order.

TENANTS ON SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Ms Christel Haeck (St Catharines-Brock): My question is to the Minister of Community and Social Services. A common complaint I get from landlords is that they are often left with a returned rent cheque, or no cheque at all, when they rent to people who are receiving government assistance such as general welfare or family benefits. Landlords suggest to me that the government should allow the social services department to automatically forward the rent cheque to the landlord each month, as is the practice in other jurisdictions. This way, landlords will not be left out of pocket and social assistance recipients will not be discriminated against when they look for rental housing.

I have to admit, personally it's something I hold very strongly, that such a system should be created so that well-meaning landlords who have rented to social assistance recipients and have sometimes been left thousands of dollars in debt because their tenant has failed to pay the rent—I've also seen social assistance recipients who cannot find decent rental accommodation because of the reputation of a few irresponsible tenants who have not met their obligations.

Minister, could you advise me whether your ministry is looking at implementing some sort of rent-directed system here in Ontario?

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): I thank the member for her concern in this area. I can just say to her, in brief, that this is an issue we are looking at. I have certainly received many of the same letters and concerns the member has addressed. I know that last week this Legislature passed a resolution that was presented by the member for Cochrane South on this very issue, and we are looking at what we can do.

We believe very fundamentally, as I believe the member for St Catharines-Brock does, that the vast majority of people on social assistance are able to and fulfil their obligations with respect to paying rent in a very responsible fashion. In anything we do, we want to make sure we maintain that approach. But we are looking at what we can do, and whether it's this form of directing the rent or other things we can do, we are taking a look at that and will be doing some work together with our colleagues in the Ministry of Housing around that issue.

Ms Haeck: I'd like to thank the minister for those remarks because, like him, I do see the fact that many of our social assistance recipients are very responsible in their actions. But I also know from comments made, even in my local newspaper as recently as 10 days ago, that there are those folk who have very serious concerns on behalf of welfare recipients or social assistance recipients that we would be controlling how they spend their money. I ask to what degree your ministry would be ensuring that the rights of social assistance recipients will still be kept uppermost in your mind.

Hon Mr Silipo: As I said, we would want to proceed in this area in a way that shows very much that we respect the reality that the vast majority of people who are on social assistance are carrying out their responsibilities in a very straightforward fashion, and that we believe very fundamentally in supporting the dignity of individuals who are on social assistance to have control over how they use the funds they receive in benefits. As we proceed to take a look at what we can do to deal with the few issues that are problems relative to the overall system, we will keep that very much in mind, so as we work out the details I'm quite confident we can address both of those aspects in the way they need to be.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a question for the Minister of Education and Training. The minister will be aware that a number of school boards in the province are extremely concerned about a bombshell which was dropped on them last week, that bombshell being the news that in some cases they are required to raise substantially more money than they had anticipated.

The Hamilton-Wentworth board of education has a difference of $5 million, the Lincoln County Board of Education about $2 million. All were shocked, because they have to go to their local area municipal council to put forward what they believe will be their levy for this coming fiscal year.

My question to the minister is, why did you wait so late to tell all these boards of education about this news and not allow them to make adjustments within their budgetary system to accommodate it?

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): I am actually quite happy that the member raised this particular issue, and specifically with the Hamilton Board of Education, which has been making a big fuss about what it claims to be $5 million.

I asked the ministry last week, when I first saw this in the paper, to do some analysis. The fact of the matter is that the $5 million they're referring to has very little to do with the GLG announcement. The only change in the GLGs was a slight adjustment to the spending ceiling, which is done quite often, regularly, by governments. It switch from high assessment boards to low assessment boards; in other words, wealthy boards to poor boards.

The vast majority of the money that the Hamilton Board of Education is referring to are items like a transitional assistance fund, which was a one-time payment it got last year which it knew it wouldn't get this year, that its student enrollment declined by 750—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Cooke: All those were factors they were aware of months ago, and they cannot now blame the provincial government. It might be a great political tactic of theirs, but it's not accurate, not fair and not true.

Mr Bradley: The minister has been in the House a long time and knew enough to pick the right part of the question to answer.

My supplementary question to the minister, very briefly, is why did you wait so long to provide this information to a number of boards—I know you've chosen the Hamilton-Wentworth board, but the Lincoln County Board of Education, for instance—when you know that by the end of this month they have to have their levy requests to the local councils, that they have negotiated their contracts and that they have made certain financial commitments, and then, at the last minute, you drop this bombshell on them? Why is that?

Hon Mr Cooke: That is simply not accurate. What I told the member was that every factor I've referred to, except for the general legislative grants and the one factor of the change in the spending ceiling, everything else, the boards knew about before we announced the GLGs.

Those factors were well known and the board is using the one factor, the general legislative grants, as an excuse to deal with a whole bunch of other matters and blame everything on the provincial government. It happens every year at this time and it happens even more when there's a municipal election coming on.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I move that notwithstanding standing order 96(h), the requirement for notice be waived with respect to ballot item number 55.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

PETITIONS

VIOLENCE

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): I have 196 petitions here, which represent over 2,000 signatures, and I would like to read it into the record.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas serial killer trading cards are being imported into and distributed throughout Ontario and the rest of Canada;

"Whereas these trading cards feature the crimes of serial killers, mass murderers and gangsters;

"Whereas we abhor crimes of violence against persons and believe that serial killer trading cards offer nothing positive for either children or adults to admire or emulate, but rather contribute to the tolerance and desensitization of violence; and

"Whereas we as a society agree that the protection of our children is paramount;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Ontario government enact legislation to ensure that the sale of these serial killer trading cards is restricted to people over the age of 18 years and that substantial and appropriate penalties be imposed on retailers who sell serial killer trading cards to minors."

Mr Speaker, I have affixed my signature, and I would like to let you know that this now comes to 5,225 people who have signed these petitions in 55 cities and towns throughout Ontario.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local boards while not providing boards with the funding required to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating cost of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high as a legacy of the Liberal government;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

It's signed by approximately 20 of my constituents.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I have a petition sent to me by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters and it reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the House refrain from passing Bills 45 and 56 and that sexual orientation not be added to the Ontario Human Rights Code.

"While in principle we agree with the intent of Bill 56—our creed teaches us to love and respect our neighbour—we are concerned over the government's intent to legislate morality and at the same time eliminate definitions of standards as proposed in Bill 45.

"Bill 56 in its proposed form, without parameters of standards, opens the way to reverse discrimination. For example, it is our concern that it will become a tool to require schools to teach other sexual orientations as natural or normal, which is unnatural to the majority and contrary to the beliefs of many.

"We recommend that the government not proceed with these bills in their present proposed form."

I have affixed my signature.

HAEMODIALYSIS

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas several patients from the town of New Tecumseth are forced to travel great distances under treacherous road conditions to receive necessary haemodialysis treatments in Orillia or Toronto;

"Whereas the government has done nothing to discourage a patchwork dialysis treatment system whereby some patients receive haemodialysis in-home and others travel long distances for treatment;

"Whereas there are currently two dialysis machines serving only two people in New Tecumseth and one patient is forced to pay for her own nurse;

"Whereas the government continues to insist they are studying the problem, even though they have known about it for two years; and

"Whereas the Legislature passed Simcoe West MPP Jim Wilson's private member's resolution which called for the establishment of dialysis satellites in New Tecumseth and Collingwood,

"We demand the government establish a dialysis satellite immediately in the town of New Tecumseth."

I have signed that petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae,

Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

This petition is signed by about 260 people from all over Ontario.

HAEMODIALYSIS

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas several patients from the Collingwood area are forced to travel great distances under treacherous road conditions to receive necessary haemodialysis treatments;

"Whereas the government has done nothing to discourage a patchwork dialysis treatment system whereby some patients receive haemodialysis in-home and others travel long distances for treatment;

"Whereas there are currently two dialysis machines serving only two people in the Collingwood area;

"Whereas the government continues to insist they are studying the problem, even though they have known about it for two years; and

"Whereas the Legislature passed Simcoe West MPP Jim Wilson's private member's resolution which called for the establishment of dialysis satellites in Alliston and Collingwood;

"We demand the government establish a dialysis satellite immediately in the town of Collingwood."

I've signed that petition and want members of the public to know that currently an all-party committee of the Legislature is preparing recommendations to force this government, or certainly to urge this government, to establish dialysis satellites outside of Metro Toronto where they're certainly needed.

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Robert Frankford (Scarborough East): I have a petition from many residents of Scarborough, including some of your constituents, no doubt.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the British North America Act of 1867 supports the right of Catholic students to a Catholic education, and the province of Ontario supports two educational systems from kindergarten to grade 12/OAC;

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board educates more than 103,000 students across Metropolitan Toronto, and whereas this is equivalent to 30% of all of the students in the area;

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board is expected to provide the same programs and services as its public school counterpart, and must do so by receiving $1,822 less for each elementary school student and $2,542 less per secondary school student (based on 1993 estimates);

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly to act now to ensure that Ontario's two principal education systems are funded fully and equally."

I'm pleased to add my signature.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): I have another petition, this time from the Brighton Bible Church, members there, and it's to the Honourable Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, but since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all such references should be removed from the code."

I've signed the petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Noble Villeneuve (S-D-G & East Grenville): I too have a petition to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, signed by some 208 constituents and also hunters who come from out of province.

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to the government decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, therefore, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I agree and have signed this petition.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I've got a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 will provide needed protection to owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and modular homes in land-lease communities, like Sutton-by-the-Lake; and

"Whereas many of the owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible on third reading of Bill 21."

I had a call just before I came in here from Muriel McDermott asking me to present this petition today.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition that has come to me from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Premier of Ontario, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I endorse this petition as well.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): I have petitions here that were forwarded to me by R.G. Morgan, the executive vice-president of the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. These petitions are similar to ones that the member for Wellington just read in and many other members read in concerned about the firearms course certificate etc. I would submit that now on behalf of the federation.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): I have another petition from 36 people from the riding of Northumberland expressing again their opposition to Bill 45. They are requesting that the House refrain from passing Bill 45. I have signed the petition.

EMERGENCY SERVICE

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I have a petition that reads as follows:

"Four Counties General Hospital in Newbury, Ontario, provides 24-hour emergency services to an area that covers the four neighbouring corners of Middlesex, Elgin, Kent and Lambton counties. Approximately 16,000 people live in small towns, villages and rural sections of this area.

"Due to the shortage of doctors in the area, the hospital has had difficulty in providing medical coverage for its emergency room on a 24-hour, seven-days-a-week basis.

"If the hospital cannot get enough doctors to cover, it will have to close its emergency department for part of the 24-hour period. The nearest emergency departments are 40 to 60 minutes' driving distance away.

"We, the residents of the hospital's service area, need 24-hour emergency coverage and want the Ministry of Health and the Ontario Medical Association to resolve the critical issue of medical coverage of rural emergency departments immediately."

I've signed that petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Paul Klopp (Huron): I have a petition sent to me by Rick Morgan, the executive vice-president of the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. This petition has been signed by residents of the riding of Huron, and it reads:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own,

"I/we, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I so agree, and I so have signed.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPOSITION DES CORPORATIONS

Mr Sutherland, on behalf of Mr Laughren, moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 146, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act / Projet de loi 146, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'imposition des corporations.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): This bill will put into place the changes to the Corporations Tax Act that were introduced in the 1992 and 1993 Ontario budgets. The changes include enhancements to the instalment base and the electronic filing of returns, the introduction of a corporate minimum tax and changes that will parallel amendments to the federal Income Tax Act.

The corporate minimum tax will ensure that large, profitable firms will pay at least a minimum amount of corporate income tax. The tax will apply to corporations or companies and associated groups with total assets of more than $5 million or a gross revenue over $10 million. Only corporations over these limits currently paying little or no regular income tax will be required to pay the corporate minimum tax.

The small business income tax rate will be reduced from 10% to 9.5%. The income tax rate for manufacturing and processing, mining, farming, logging and fishing will be 13.5%, down from 14.5%. Corporations which issue flow-through shares and renounce exploration and development expenses incurred in Canadian mineral exploration to individual shareholders will be entitled to a reduction in their paid-up capital.

Other measures being introduced will close corporate tax loopholes and improve tax fairness. The goodwill allowance previously allowed as a deduction from paid-up capital will be eliminated and all debt, whether secured or unsecured, will be included in paid-up capital.

The bill will introduce specific rules regarding the distribution of assets prior to a corporation's year-end. As well, associations registered under the Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act will be considered insurance companies for the purposes of the insurance premium tax.

Finally, this bill also introduces an additional tax on life insurance corporations and imposes an 18-month temporary income surtax of 10% on banks as well as an increase in the capital tax paid by banks from 1% to 1.12%.

This bill addresses the major inequities in the act through the introduction of a corporate minimum tax and the closure of many loopholes which have benefited a few corporations at the expense of all taxpayers.

Speaker, let me say a few more words. I'm pleased that we have finally reached the point where we are having a debate about the minimum corporate tax. This government, as you know, made a commitment in the last election, in the 1990 election, to bring in a minimum corporate tax. We believe that was an important measure to bring in terms of tax fairness.

The good people of the province of Ontario are obviously paying their share of taxes, as all of them will attest, and certainly, if they haven't finished doing their returns, they'll be doing them in the next week or so. But it's important too that corporations pay their fair share. Let me say, many corporations, and I would suggest to you particularly many small businesses, have been paying their fair share for quite a long time. I think those people who do pay their fair share of taxes would also be supportive of us bringing in this minimum corporate tax.

As I say, it was election policy from the 1990 campaign. We're moving forward on that, retaining that commitment to the people of the province of Ontario, and let me say there are some tax increases in here; we all recognize that. But in terms of the main focus of it, it's the Corporations Tax Act and I believe, and I hope many other people will believe, it is about tax fairness, which is something this government has talked about a lot, talked about a lot when it was in opposition and has tried to bring about as a government in ensuring a fair tax system.

We believe a fairer tax system is one that's more progressive. If you look at what we tried to do in terms of tax increases—and we certainly understand no one likes to pay more tax; that's very clear—but in terms of making the very difficult decisions we had to make to get a handle on the deficit, Speaker, if I could just spend a minute reviewing them in terms of the action we took in last year's budget to ensure that the deficit didn't go up to close to $17 billion, which was totally unacceptable, the government undertook a three-pronged approach, as you will remember.

We implemented the expenditure control plan, which was reductions in government expenditures, and the vast majority of the amount on an expenditure control plan was specifically the provincial government. There were some reductions to some of our transfer agencies as well as a result of that, but most of that money came out of the government's direct spending.

We also had the social contract, which is in place, and we found another $2 billion worth of savings in there. We asked those people who worked for the government and in the public sector to contribute to getting a handle on the deficit, and those people have certainly made a contribution.

As well, we implemented tax increases and non-tax revenue increases close to another $2 billion to make up the rest of it. We asked everybody to contribute. As part of that, we said that the corporations should contribute as well. Those profitable corporations which are making money out of the province of Ontario need to contribute back to help pay for the services that all Ontarians benefit from, and I would say too that those corporations benefit as well. We believe that bringing in this minimum corporate tax and some of the other tax initiatives here does relate to the question of tax fairness.

I'm sure when the opposition is up, they're going to rail against this bill because they're going to say any tax increase is a negative thing. I know the Liberals are going to get up and say this is awful. They're not going to present many other alternatives, of course, if we remember what their leader said. She said we didn't cut enough: "Cut more. Cut extra billions." She didn't say how to do that. She said: "Don't do the social contract but cut more. Don't reduce to your transfer partners but cut more." They have lots of general ideas.

At any rate, I look forward to some of the comments that will be coming out, but I do just want to say that I hope people see this as part of the government's initiative for tax fairness to ensure that everyone, not only individuals but corporations, is paying their fair share.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Questions or comments?

Mr W. Donald Cousens (Markham): There's no such thing as a fair tax, Kim. The whole world we're into right now: Everything's got to be fair, this has got to be fair so you hit the big guy. Your government has taken the view that you're pro-employee and you have a feeling of anti-employer. If you start thinking of the way in which your government has developed this logic and this thinking, it's saying, "We want to develop anything that's going to be pro the employee."

What you have to work out in our society is a balance between both the employer and the employee so that all sides win. It's not a matter of just saying us and them; we're in it together. If you can have the employers creating opportunities and getting jobs for people, then the employee is going to be the beneficiary. We as people in government have to look at ways of not building walls between ourselves and the real world but building bridges of friendship and building relationships that allow us to work through into the future.

When you start talking about fairness, I wonder if this could be anything like some of the other taxes you've brought in where now you're having to come back and rethink it. The tragedy is that I don't think anyone's going to come back and cancel a tax. I have to speak on this bill shortly. I'm not going to make any guarantee that we'd roll it back, but we are in a society where I wish you'd understand as a government you've got to stop adding to the costs of government.

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): You wouldn't cancel a tax, but we do cancel taxes, Don.

Mr Cousens: You'll have a chance. I've got 30 seconds left, and Drummond, you can say all you want for 90 seconds. That's the way it works around here. But I'm always glad to listen to you when you speak in turn.

So here we go again. It's a battle that just won't end. I'm not prepared to sit back and have you say, "We've got another fair tax for the people of Ontario." You even had a commission that went out there and called itself the Fair Tax—and changing the world—the Fair Tax Commission. You put all the words around it. Talk about artists in wordsmithing. That's what you are.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions or comments? Two minutes in reply.

Mr Sutherland: I appreciate the input from the member for Markham. I'm sure he's going to elaborate far more in his opportunity to make remarks on the bill about his definition of fair taxation. We know what the Tories' definition of fair taxation is. We saw for nine years under the federal Tories how they changed the tax system and what they feel a fairer tax system is.

Mr Cousens: I'll get into that. Great.

Mr Sutherland: Let's talk about this.

Mr Cousens: They went and reduced income tax; the provincial Liberals increased it. So you better understand it.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Markham, you had your turn. Please.

Mr Cousens: I apologize. Give him an extra two minutes.

Mr Sutherland: Let me just say I think all of us in this House have seen very clearly what they feel a fair tax system is, and we know that in the past they certainly have had no problems granting many exemptions to all kinds of corporations. I want to say there's a difference between granting exemptions etc and some of the initiatives that are put on to generate certain types of economic activity.

The member for Markham also indicated this being pro-employee and anti-employer. It's not a question of being anti-employer. It's a question of saying that, legitimately in the province of Ontario, we have many public services that many people benefit from; let me say, not only individuals but corporations. There is an expectation that everyone should contribute to pay for those public services.

Individuals contribute on a regular basis. Everyone believes that the corporate sector should be contributing as well and should be paying its fair share. There are some corporations that aren't, and we believe through the introduction of the minimum corporate tax, which will impact about 3% to 4% of companies in the province, we will be making the system fair.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Oriole): I rise today to debate Bill 146, which is entitled An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act. However, it's also an opportunity for us to discuss the fiscal policy of the government. Bill 146 is just a part of the overall taxation strategy of Bob Rae and the NDP government.

To begin, as I have with other pieces of tax legislation that have been before us in the last few days, I'd like to point out that Bill 146 is a bill that, while it had first reading in March 1994, in fact much of the provisions of this legislation resulted from the previous budget.

In fact, Mr Speaker, do you want to know why people believe that the NDP government is so incompetent? This bill is passing a two-year-old tax provision, and that provision has in fact already expired.

Now, what that means, in simple, plain language for people who are watching, is that because it is the tradition for taxing in this province that the tax takes effect when the Treasurer announces it, it is then followed, usually shortly thereafter, by a piece of legislation enacting the tax.

This Bill 146 contains a temporary capital tax surcharge on banks that was announced in the 1992 budget, clearly two full years ago. That tax, the temporary capital surcharge on banks, was a tax that came into effect on April 30, 1992, and expired on November 1, 1993.

Here we are, the end of April 1994, and the government is bringing in this retroactive legislation to legalize a tax which has already been implemented, been collected and expired. To me that is the height of incompetence. It's also why people lose confidence and feel so cynical about governments.

I'd like to make that point as we begin this debate, because Bill 146 is a piece of legislation that was announced during the last budget. Today is April 25, 1994. We know that the new budget for this coming year is going to be tabled in this House on May 5.

It's upsetting to people watching this debate to realize that we are standing here today debating tax bills that are implementing provisions which are not only two years old and have expired and implementing provisions which were announced in the budget of last year, but we know that within the next few days we're going to have a new budget.

That is not competent management, in my view. It is also not the right message to the people of the province that's going to instil confidence either from the private sector or from consumers, who we know are the people who will be leading economic recovery, hopefully economic recovery, in the province of Ontario.

It's distressing, to say the least, that here we stand a full year after the announcement of these provisions. I listened very carefully to the parliamentary assistant as he referred to the fact that the announcement of a corporate minimum tax is not just one year old; he said that this was part of the Agenda for People and this was a campaign commitment from the election of the summer of 1990. I would say to him that that's no reason for bringing this forward now.

I don't want to go through the lists and I know that this is a debate about tax policy, but I remember auto insurance. I remember all the promises that you made in the Agenda for People. When you became the government, you realized that those commitments that you made in the Agenda for People were rhetoric of an opposition party that never expected to govern. You found yourself in government and you jettisoned many of those policies, because you knew that they were not going to be acceptable to the people of the province of Ontario.

In fact one of the things that I find most interesting about the minimum corporate tax that we're discussing today is that so many people told you not to do it. It wasn't just the chambers of commerce and the boards of trade that you would expect, but the corporate minimum tax was one of the very first things that the NDP government referred to its tax commission. They called it the Fair Tax Commission, and in a few minutes I'm going to go on about how they've contaminated the word "fair" and what that really means in NDP Ontario.

But they set up this tax commission and they asked it to expeditiously look at their campaign promise, which was a corporate minimum tax. The tax commission said, "Don't do it." They said, as my children sometimes say to me when I give them an answer that's different than the one that they expected, "Oh, gee, we're really sorry we asked you that question; could you forget we ever asked?" and then proceed to do exactly what they wanted to do in the first place.

That's really what Bob Rae and the NDP have done. They made a promise in the last election campaign. They then asked for expert advice on whether or not they should proceed with that promise. They were told, "Don't proceed; it really is not a good idea for Ontario at this time," and they're doing it anyway.

I'd like to make a very clear statement about why I'm not going to be supporting Bill 146. I believe that Bill 146 will result in higher taxes. It will result in more government red tape. Particularly, it will result in fewer jobs for individual Ontarians. I say that with a heavy heart, because I've been saying it time and again as we discuss tax bills and fiscal policy in the province of Ontario.

This is going to sound a little repetitious, but I think it does bear repeating: Now is not the time to raise additional tax revenues. The province of Ontario has undergone a devastating recession. People are suffering. People who thought they had secure jobs have lost their jobs. People are worried today that they may lose their job tomorrow. One of things that we know from economists and others is that for every $40,000 that you take out of the economy in additional taxes, you kill one job. That's the ratio. It's very easy to understand.

We know that the result of last year's budget was to slow the economy. We know part of the reason that the recovery has been as sluggish and as slow as it's been has been because of the taxation policies of the New Democrats. Bill 146 is yet another example of taking additional dollars out of the economy.

Now, the parliamentary assistant refers to tax fairness, and I want to spend just a couple of minutes on this notion of "fair." A good case can be made for everyone paying their fair share of taxes. I have been a proponent of the kind of tax reforms that would ensure that everyone pays their fair share. While you may have debates from time to time about how to achieve tax fairness, the reality is that everyone in a democracy, I think, when put to the test, would say, "Yes, I believe that everyone should pay their fair share."

But just as the Fair Tax Commission, established by Bob Rae and the New Democrats, stopped being called the Fair Tax Commission when it issued its report—which was not that it was going to see taxes redistributed or greater fairness, but in fact the end result of the Fair Tax Commission's findings was going to result in more taxes and higher taxes—in the name of fairness and fair share, Bill 146 is going to result in more taxes, not fair taxes. Bill 146 does not reallocate or shift or lower a tax on one side to move it to another sector, where some might argue there hasn't been a fair share in the payment of taxes. That's not what Bill 146 does. What Bill 146 does is raise the tax rate for private sector corporations that have been investing in jobs in the province of Ontario.

Mr Sutherland: And banks and insurance companies.

Mrs Caplan: Yes, Bill 146 also has a negative impact on banks and insurance companies, but it doesn't mean greater fairness. I'm sick and tired of seeing Bob Rae and parliamentary assistants and members of the NDP caucus stand up and use the word "fair" when what they mean is something other than fair, or fair in their eyes. Often when I hear Bob Rae say "fair," what I know he means is "same." If everybody isn't the same, then it isn't fair.

As I look around my riding, the riding of Oriole, I know that Ontario is a province of great diversity, where not everyone is the same, where a policy that would be appropriate for Metropolitan Toronto would not necessarily be appropriate for North Bay, would not necessarily be appropriate for Kitchener-Waterloo or Guelph. The notion that the NDP has that fairness means sameness in my view is wrong.

What we need is the kind of flexibility in public policy that allows local communities to have more say, that allows local communities to find the solutions to the problems facing those local communities. When you have big government at Queen's Park demanding sameness in the name of fairness, that is terribly, terribly unfair.

So as we debate Bill 146, there are a few points that I would like to make.

Higher taxes are not the way to economic prosperity. At a time of economic recession, higher taxes, taking more money out of the economy, reduces economic activity. I'm trying to find new and different ways of saying that, ways that perhaps the government will understand. I admit that I'm getting very frustrated.

The parliamentary assistant says, "What are your alternatives?" I want to tell him very clearly that on tax policy, Lyn McLeod and the Ontario Liberals have promised a 5% tax reduction over a five-year period. We believe that would result in stimulating both business investment and job creation opportunities in the private sector in the province of Ontario.

One of the things we have seen in each year of this NDP government in its fiscal plan and in its taxing plan is that each year we have seen it increase taxes. Do you know what the result has been? The result has been less tax revenue. So you're raising taxes and you're collecting fewer taxes. Wake up. This is telling you something. The fewer people who are employed, the less personal income tax they pay. The more companies that go into bankruptcy, the less taxes they're going to pay. It is extremely important that at times of recession, at times of a sluggish economy, we understand the negative impact that tax increases can have on the economy.

Having said that, I think it is only fair for me to put that in context of the other side of the coin. There is a time to raise taxes. The time to raise taxes is when the economy is booming, when wages are going up in the private sector and public sector employees say, legitimately, that they also deserve wage increases. That's at a time of economic prosperity. That's a lesson that the NDP has not learned. You cannot raise wages, you cannot increase spending, you cannot raise your taxes at a time of economic recession. Frankly, at a time when wages in the private sector are being reduced, you cannot increase public sector wages.

Mr Jim Wiseman (Durham West): Wages in the private sector outdistanced the public sector in the last quarter.

Mrs Caplan: Mr Speaker, an interjection from the member for Durham who is, as always, an active contributor in heckling in this House, and I'm not going to pay any attention to him.

One of the things that we know is that you cannot spend your way out of a recession and you cannot tax your way out of a recession. How do we know that? Because Bob Rae and the NDP tried both and they failed miserably. Unfortunately, the result of their failure is pain, anguish and job loss for the people of the province of Ontario.

I remember listening to the parliamentary assistant as he talked about the Agenda for People and I remember, during that summer campaign, realizing how desperate that agenda seemed. It was so unrealistic. Those of us who were campaigning during that summer knew that every bit of rhetoric, every promise that could be put out to appeal to people, was put forth in that Agenda for People. I think that there is justice in the world, to see the NDP trying to govern with that Agenda for People staring them in the face and people saying, "Yes, but what happened to your Agenda for People?"

That was at the time when you said you all of those simple answers to all of these complex problems. They've had almost four years to govern, and we've seen what has happened to those folks who had all the simple answers in the summer of 1990. What do we see? We see higher taxes; we see a deficit that has brought shame to the province of Ontario.

I would like, if I could, as I participate in this debate on Bill 146, to remind people who are watching this debate that after 15 years of Progressive Conservative government deficits—there were 15 consecutive years of deficit financing by the Conservatives—the Provincial Auditor has attested to the fact that the very first fully balanced budget was the Liberal government budget of 1989-90.

I was proud to serve in that government. I was proud of our fiscal responsibility. We know that there was a fully balanced operating budget from 1987 on, and that was no small achievement. We had to work very hard to do that. We made some very difficult decisions.

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): How come when we took over we were $3 billion short? The books were being cooked.

Mrs Caplan: There were people who said that we were not spending enough. As I hear those opposite, I can't remember anyone in those years, from 1985 to 1990, who ever said that we were spending too much. In hindsight, those were very good years. The economy was booming, 700,000 jobs were created in the province of Ontario and, yes, those were times that people would like to look back on and people would like to remember economic prosperity.

At the same time, I'll say that during those years, no, we were not perfect. Certainly I learned a lot about governing and government. But I can tell you that when I look at the taxation policies of the NDP as we come out of this recession, I think to myself, "My, how times have really changed."

We have today an anti-business, anti-private-sector government, and the provisions of Bill 146 are actually very stark when it comes to that. One of the things that Bill 146 does that maybe some people think is a good idea but I think is mean-spirited more than anything else, especially since it's don't-do-as-I-do, do-as-I-say kind of legislation: Bill 146 cuts the private sector's entertainment deduction to 50% from previously 80%. What that means is that when businesses were out entertaining or using the restaurants in the province of Ontario, they were able to deduct 80% of those expenses as a business expense. This legislation cuts that to 50%.

What I find particularly interesting is that when civil servants who work for the government of Ontario go out, they are able to deduct a full 100%. They hand in the entire check. We've seen expense accounts from the deputy ministers, Mr Decter and others, and we have seen huge expense accounts. No one on the provincial government benches ever suggested that maybe only 50% of those should be eligible expense accounts. In fact, some would suggest that to reduce the private sector expense accounts is not inappropriate and others, I think, would say that it is quite mean-spirited.

Some of those who are quite upset by it are the restaurant industry in the province of Ontario, because this really is going to have a serious impact on the tourism and entertainment restaurant industry in Ontario. The reduction from 80% to 50% is a tax increase in disguise.

Let me tell those who are watching how this really works. What happens is, if a business is able to write off the expense, they take the chit from dinner, or whatever, and the business pays for it and then the business, as a business expense, is able to reduce their taxable portion by—it used to be 80%; now it is 50% of what the actual cost of the meal was.

What that means is that now the taxable benefit, or the taxable portion of the business and the requirement is higher. In fact, what this says is that the business has to pay tax on a higher amount because they're unable to deduct what had been considered previously legitimate expenses.

Whether or not we're going to get into a full debate on the benefits and the pros and the cons of a corporate tax at this point, I really don't think it's as significant as the tax itself at this point and also the fact that there have been numerous organizations that have looked at the minimum corporate tax and have given their advice to the government.

One of the organizations that looked at the whole issue of minimum corporate tax was the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario. I'm not going to read into the record all of their report, but in fact the bottom line of their report, which was submitted to the Treasurer—and this is from the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario—says: "In light of this"—that's their report—"we recommend that the government not proceed with a corporate minimum tax." Did the government listen to the Institute of Chartered Accountants? The answer's no.

One of the things we know is that in order to have economic prosperity and activity in the private sector you need to have a corporate business private sector that is feeling good, that has confidence, that is willing to invest in Ontario. When I see headlines such as this one from the Ottawa Citizen of May 20, 1993—this was following the announcement of the corporate minimum tax in the budget—we have: "Corporate Tax Enrages Business." That's the headline from the Ottawa Citizen.

When the corporate sector and the private sector react in that way, when they are feeling anger and when they are enraged or when you get that sense of unfairness or unreality that the government would continue to raise taxes at this time, yet again you have a climate and an environment which is not conducive to job creation, which we all know is so important.

I would like to quote just a couple of small comments from the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario. They had a working group on the retail sales tax and the goods and services tax. I would like to quote from page 10, because under "Corporate Taxation," they say, "There is fairly good evidence to suggest that the corporate income tax is, through shifting, paid mainly by customers, suppliers and employees of the corporation and that very little of the corporate tax actually falls on the corporate owners, except with small, closely held companies."

Then they say: "We are not in favour of the Ontario government's decision to proceed with implementing a corporate minimum tax. A corporate minimum tax which gives bona fide recognition to items like loss carry-forwards and exempts intercorporate dividends will of course raise little revenue, so its main advantage is, increasingly, people's perception of fairness in the tax system."

I think that's extremely important, and I have said I was going to be discussing "fair" and Bob Rae's notion of fairness. We heard the parliamentary assistant refer to this tax as being one which would bring greater fairness, and what I've just read from the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario is saying that these sorts of moves bring a perception of fairness when in reality they do not bring fairness at all. I think it's important for us to listen to organizations such as the institute and others who would give the government advice about what is good and what is not good tax policy.

I have a notation from one of the major accounting organizations in the province. This was sent out at the end of the year, December 1993, and it really is a warning to their clients that says: "The Ontario corporate minimum tax proposals begin a new era of corporate taxation. Even so, and despite the stated objectives of simplicity and ease of administration, the corporate minimum tax proposals will impose additional administrative burden on affected corporations."

I said that Bill 146 would increase red tape and I've presented some evidence saying exactly that. If I could digress for just a minute, because this is about taxes and alternatives to taxation, one of the things the parliamentary assistant has said was, "What are some of your solutions?" I've tabled in the House before and I've read into the record recommendations from the Liberal minority report and also recommendations from the job task force, and I'm not going to do that again today. It's available and it's on the record, and I'm very proud of the responsible alternatives that have been provided by Lyn McLeod and the Ontario Liberal caucus to the economic and fiscal folly of the NDP.

But I would like to tell you about an incident that happened to me recently. I had my wallet stolen, and in my wallet was every piece of personal identification I carried, my driver's licence, my social insurance number, my health card, my birth certificate, all my credit cards—every piece of personal identification. What I had to do on the Monday morning following that loss was fill out numerous forms, each one different, each one requesting identical information, and each one sent or hand-delivered to a different kiosk or office of government.

I understand why people are fed up. I understand why people don't have confidence in government. I understand why people don't like civil servants very much. I know why they don't like politicians very much. I also know the frustration of dealing with government. I know why people don't want to pay taxes and why the underground economy is growing. That is happening because of the frustration people have when they have contact with the government.

The story I would like to tell is about trying to get a driver's licence, a health card and a birth certificate. I'm going to tell the story of the health card first, because that's one that I have direct experience with.

As it happened, after I had lost my card I had need to go and have some blood tests done. It was the middle of winter, 22 degrees below, when I went to a downtown Toronto teaching hospital. Before I went, I called the ministry and said: "I've lost my health card. I want to make sure I do the right thing, that there's no hassle, so what should I do?" They said: "You go directly to the hospital. They'll give you a form. You fill out the form and you will have access to the services you need."

Well, I got to the hospital, I went to the patient registration, I told them my plight, and they said, "I'm sorry, but you can't have access without having your version code number." It was 22 degrees below, and they said, "You have to go to the second floor of the building across the road and get a new number." So there I went, across the road, 22 below, freezing cold, and I went in and they said to me when I got there: "You didn't have to come here. Here is the form. The hospital should have given you this form. If you just fill this form out, you can have access, get the services you need and everything is looked after."

I said to them: "Give me the form so I can take it back and give it to the hospital. Obviously, there was a miscommunication." They gave me an envelope filled with the new forms. I went back across the road to the hospital and I said to them at the patient registration: "Here is an envelope filled with the forms. If anyone else should happen to come to the hospital and tell you they've lost their card, this is the form I was referring to. All they have to do is fill it in."

Well, they gave me such an argument: "We don't do it that way. That's not our process and procedure." I thought to myself, this is a government-funded agency, a service the taxpayers in the province of Ontario are paying for, and here you have a situation where the needs of a patient were not being responded to because of some paperwork.

But the thing that really got to me was when an individual at the patient registry said, "I'm sorry, but our hospital is a private institution and we don't have to follow any of the procedures or guidelines as set out by the ministry." I thought to myself, this is a problem, if in the province of Ontario a taxpayer is trying to access a service and they're being told, "It doesn't matter to us, the provider, what the rules and the regulations are."

I was a little frustrated that day but everything turned out just fine, but it's my understanding that not much has happened or changed and that if anybody goes to that particular hospital and has had their health card lost or stolen, in fact they are hassled.

Then I had to go for a driver's licence. I decided to go for my driver's licence and my birth certificate at the same time. When I arrived—and I know exactly when it was because I was on committee that day. When I went into the Macdonald Block, into the room where you get your birth certificate, it was exactly 2 o'clock or shortly thereafter. I took my number and then I saw the big, long lineup, so I went across to the other side of the building and down a flight of stairs, because the two services are not next door to each other. When I went in to get my driver's licence, it was quite efficient and I was in and out in a matter of 10 minutes, and I thought, this is a very good way for people to be able to get their service from government.

But when I went back to get my birth certificate, I got my number at five minutes past 2 but was actually not seen until 10 to 4, almost two full hours. When I did actually get to the kiosk, I spent exactly three minutes, maybe less, with a very nice person who took the information from me, said yes, I was in the computer, and I would have my birth certificate mailed to me in short order. I received the certificate in the mail within the week, but I was very frustrated at having to wait in line for almost two hours.

I happened to mention this when I got to the committee I was sitting on. I mentioned it to the deputy minister of the treasury board. I am the critic for the treasury board. I said to him: "I just had this terrible experience going to get a birth certificate. I really wish you would take a look at doing that, because I would like to tell a better story when I'm in the House one day discussing tax bills."

I'm pleased to report today that the response from the deputy minister responsible for the birth registry department here at Queen's Park and the departments looked into the matter, and I think the situation has improved considerably.

It's an important story to tell here in the House because, as a member of the Legislature, I can make those complaints and something gets done. I have the opportunity to say to a deputy minister, "I don't like the service I'm getting." I understand why taxpayers are frustrated and I know why people don't want to pay their taxes and why they are engaging in tax evasion and tax avoidance in unprecedented numbers. It's because they feel they're not getting value for money from government. It's that simple.

I have the opportunity that very few Ontarians have.

The opportunity I have is to stand here in the House in public to tell these stories on television so that people hear, and they'll nod their heads and say: "Yes, that happened to me. I was equally frustrated and there was nothing I could do about it."

Mr Mills: You're almost encouraging people to cheat. That's what you're doing. That is disgraceful.

Mrs Caplan: The member from Durham across is suggesting—what is it that you're saying? That people should cheat? I don't think they should at all.

Mr Mills: You're suggesting it's in order to cheat. Cheating is good, you said. It's the government's fault.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. There's a period for questions and comments. The member for Durham East, you'll have an opportunity to voice your opinion after the member for Oriole has terminated her debate.

Mrs Caplan: The reason I'm pointing this out during this important tax debate and the reason I'm telling these stories is because I have the opportunity as a member of the Legislature to stand in my place and tell the government some of the things that are irritating taxpayers in this province. I have the opportunity to stand here and tell the government some of the things it's doing wrong and some of the things it's doing right.

I also have the opportunity to tell people who are watching this debate that a member of the official opposition can be very effective in getting things changed. I felt very proud of the fact that the response I received from ministry officials was positive.

Many of the barriers and much of the red tape we see is because of legislation that comes from ministers of the crown, like the Minister of Finance. We know that Bill 146 adds additional red tape just at a time when everyone is saying: "Eliminate unnecessary regulation, eliminate red tape, streamline the operation of government. Give both consumers and the business sector the feeling that they are getting value for their tax dollars."

As I wind up this debate today on Bill 146, I would like to leave the government with that message. As you talk about fairness, as you talk about the need for everyone paying their fair share, I would say to you that no one objects to paying their fair share if they feel they're getting fair value, and whether or not you understand that the people of Ontario today do not feel they're getting fair value is extremely important, because your policies are not reflecting the reality that exists in Ontario today.

I don't believe people want to cheat. I believe people want to pay their fair share, but people want to get value for their tax dollar. I believe corporations are willing to pay their fair share, but when you bring in these kinds of rules, which are seen to be mean-spirited or anti-business or anti-private sector, then the energies of the people of the province go into legitimate tax avoidance or illegitimate tax evasion.

Only by renewing the confidence in government, only by renewing the confidence of investors, only by renewing the confidence of consumers, only by doing those things which will tell the taxpayers that you understand how they're feeling, will you be able to create a climate where Ontario will once again prosper and flourish.

I will not be supporting Bill 146, because I don't think it achieves any of those objectives and I believe it will result in further job loss and further instability and insecurity in the province of Ontario, and what we need right now more than anything is a climate of confidence, a climate of security, a climate of stability and a climate of hope. Bill 146 will not achieve that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Questions or comments?

Mr Cousens: I would like to know how the member for Oriole can explain the actions of her government when they were in power and the number of tax increases that were brought in. The member for Durham East was just saying it was 33 tax increases we had. I know, but it's a fact the New Democrats are aware of as well.

The words you say today have a ring of authority and truth, as you always have, but it has an inconsistency that goes back to—people say, "Oh the federal Conservatives did so much damage." One thing people have forgotten is that there was a stage there, and I forget the year, when the Finance minister for Canada decreased the federal income tax for Ontario taxpayers, and that year, as soon as it was to become effective, the provincial Liberals, the government of the day, took that tax away from Ontario taxpayers.

Everybody says, "The federal government did nothing for us," and may they rest in peace, the ones who were there. I realize a lot of history's gone on since October 25. But people don't remember—or know. They never saw the difference in their pocketbooks when the federal government actually reduced the federal income tax and, at the same time, coincident with that tax coming in, your government, the David Peterson Liberals and the Treasurer at the time, Mr Robert Nixon, came back and took away all the money the federal government had given to Ontario taxpayers of the time. Could you explain how your government did that with what you have just been telling us in the House?

Mr Mills: I would just like to say that the comments coming from the member for Oriole suggested to me that she was living in some sort of fantasy land somewhere or in a time warp of yesteryear.

How someone can get up in this Legislature and stand in his or her place and go through—I was going to say something—the litany of losing a handbag and then moan and groan and say: "I went to the Minister of Health and he said fill in this form. It was 22 degrees. I was freezing to death. I didn't have a hat."

How can anyone stand up, in their right mind, and go through this litany to suggest that through the tremendous demands on the Ministry of Health, through the tremendous demands on the Ministry of Transportation etc—we have more people using the facilities—how anyone can stand up and say that the delay in getting the new health card, which incidentally was the minister's birth child, how she can stand there and say she's got some problem getting her driver's licence and keep a straight face is beyond me, but then to add something irritates me.

I like to think that most Ontarians, law-abiding, upright citizens want to pay their fair share, want to play the game with the government of the day. How she can get up and parlay that into some excuse whereby the citizens of Ontario should cheat on their taxes or withhold payment because they're not getting the service is perhaps the most ludicrous thing that I've ever heard said in this House, and I've heard a few things, and I've heard a few things coming from the member for Oriole. Does she somehow think that this has just happened now?

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): It's always really an educational experience to sit in the House and listen to the former cabinet ministers of the previous government speak. It's particularly interesting this afternoon because this member and I were both elected at the same time in 1985. I sat in the government for six weeks and then they, her party, the Liberals, promptly climbed into bed under the sheets with the NDP and formed the famous accord.

So any criticism that this current government has of the former government, they have only themselves to thank. It was the fact that the NDP was willing to get into bed with the Liberals and vice versa that gave us the famous 33 tax increases which have been referred to this afternoon.

It was that coalition, that accord, that gave us the Liberal government in the first place, and we do have both of these parties to thank for the situation that we're in today because, frankly, the people of Ontario were not fooled. They were not fooled by Premier Peterson in 1990, when he had 94 seats in this House, calling that election after three years and dropping instantly to 36 seats.

I think what the Speaker should remember is that the people of this province have had it. They have hit the wall in terms of taxes and taxation. Any government today in this province and this country who doesn't realize that will also be voted out of office, and that will be, I predict, the future of this current government in Ontario also.

The Acting Speaker: We can accommodate one final participant. The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance and member for Oxford.

Mr Sutherland: I want to agree with the member for Mississauga South about the member for Oriole's comments about tax increases. It's almost like listening to the Tory party talk about mismanagement at the Workers' Compensation Board or Ontario Hydro being out of control.

I also want to respond to a few other comments the member for Oriole mentioned. She mentioned that their alternative is to do a 5% reduction. She didn't quite clarify whether that's 5% reduction on all taxes. Does that mean they're going to give out $5 billion of revenue on the sales tax, dropping that from 8% to 3%? Does that mean they're going to drop income taxes 5% every year? I would be interested to hear in more detail how these new economics are going to be working from the Liberal Party of Ontario.

The member for Oriole also talked about meals and entertainment expenses being reduced and compared that entertainment expenses being reduced and compared that to what goes on within the provincial government in terms of employees being reimbursed. Let me say two things regarding that.

First of all, in terms of the reductions in expenditures that the expenditure control plan has brought in and the government has brought in in the last couple of years, the vast majority of that is controlling those types of expenditures: travel, meals, all those things. Those budgets have been reduced dramatically. We know about expenditures for travel and hotels that were carried out by the previous Liberal government; they've been reduced. The second point is, when they're submitted, they're not allowed to be a tax deduction. They're just submitted and they are reimbursed.

Let me just again emphasize about the question of fairness. I still didn't get a clear definition, though, of what the Liberals thought tax fairness was. Again, that's like most of their other statements on things: vague, fuzzy, very broad, that it can mean anything to any situation.

The Acting Speaker: This completes questions or comments. The honourable member for Oriole has two minutes in response.

Mrs Caplan: I'd say to the member from Mississauga that I'm really sorry that Peterson called that election in the summer of 1990. If you want a public statement, I'm happy to make it.

The facts speak for themselves, however. While I say that nobody is perfect, I'm very proud of the fiscal record of the Liberal government from 1985 to 1990; an AAA credit rating is what the NDP inherited. Ontario led the western world in economic prosperity and growth during those years, and 700,000 jobs were created.

After 15 years of consecutive deficit budgeting by the Conservative government, the Provincial Auditor attested to the fact that the Liberals had the first fully balanced budget in 20 years. We had balanced operating budgets continuously from 1987 right on and the last balanced operating budget in this province was when the NDP, try as hard as they could—and they ran the deficit up to $3 billion, but there was still an operating surplus in that year.

I mentioned the different forms that were out there. I believe so strongly that we can streamline things and have one form for government licensing instead of a dozen different forms for a dozen different ministries. We can provide alternative suggestions and ideas to this government on how it can simplify governing and government and give taxpayers better value for money and less frustration.

I know that members in the House don't want to remember the positive such as the elimination of OHIP premiums and the fact that we had the kind of prosperity in Ontario that we would only dream to see return to Ontario.

As we end this debate, I know that the word "fair" hopefully will ring true as opposed to the contaminated version we hear from the NDP.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The time allotted has now elapsed. Further debate?

Mr Cousens: I wonder why it is I was allowed to ask in my 90-second clip—and I asked the member for Oriole how could you justify what you just said based on your own Liberal record. Did you notice—

Hon Marilyn Churley (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): With a deficit.

Mr Cousens: It's a skill-testing question, Marilyn, and to all honourable members. Did you notice—

Interjection.

Mr Cousens: I don't blame them.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. Would the honourable member address the Chair.

Mr Cousens: Yes, I will. The only thing is—

Mrs Marland: Excuse me, I have a point of order, Mr Speaker: I think that the comments the member for Markham is about to begin should be heard by more than nine members in this House.

The Acting Speaker: Are you requesting a quorum?

Mrs Marland: Yes. There are nine members here.

The Acting Speaker: Could the clerk please check if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

1620

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Halton North on a point of order.

Mr Noel Duignan (Halton North): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Seeing that there is now a quorum, shouldn't there be a member of the official opposition, the Liberal Party, present in the chamber to make up that quorum?

The Acting Speaker: It's not a point of order. The total number is what counts. We do now have sufficient numbers and we proceed. The honourable member for Markham.

Mr Cousens: Before I deal with the bill, I just want to refer briefly to the remarks by the previous member. It's not often that you have a chance to follow on from the Liberals when they've just had the floor.

I specifically asked the member for Oriole, the former Minister of Health of the David Peterson government, how they could rationalize her own tax policies during the Peterson years with what she is saying today about the tax policies of this government. I also asked how the honourable member from Oriole could rationalize the way in which the one time when the federal Conservatives did a favour to people which they could see in their pocketbook, when the federal Conservatives reduced the income tax, at the date that was to become effective, David Peterson's Liberals took it all away.

You can come along and say, "We want to do something about taxation policy in the province of Ontario," but when your history is one where you have added to the taxes and you have built on it, without really putting it into perspective—then the closing remarks from the honourable member from Oriole said, “We had a balanced budget.” They had a balanced budget the year they had $800 million come back from the federal government. They didn’t even know it was coming. That’s what really allowed them to balance the budget. What a boondoggle that was, and so the books looked good. Why? Because federal transfer payments came down and helped the province. We could use a few today, but there isn’t any government rich enough to pay for Ontario’s overspending.

There’s no doubt that Ontario is digging a bigger and bigger hole for itself right now, and in fact we are digging a hole to the extent of almost $1 billion a month that we’re overspending. One billion dollars a month is about the right number, and that is just unforgivable. As soon as you have the kind of deficit that you have for Ontario, building as it is—and I went into it the other day so I’m not repeating that speech. But the point stands: This government is spending beyond our means, it’s spending beyond our children’s means, it’s spending beyond what we’re capable of living and affording.

We have a problem and the problem has to do with the whole fiscal policy of Bob Rae’s government—Floyd Laughren, the whole bunch of them. What they’ve done is forced Ontario into a whole new state of emergency by virtue of the fact that in the last three years we have seen Ontario’s credit rating go down three times, and it’s probably going to be faced with another kind of review.

In fact this time of year, prior to the budget and around budget time, is when the international agencies look at a jurisdiction’s rating. If we don’t do something to fight the deficit and to get our financial house in order, we are going to be in more serious trouble than we’ve been in for the last several years.

We are coming out of the recession. We are moving into a stronger time. There is a new confidence beginning to develop. But I don’t see a long-term solution in sight when someone says, “We’re going to reduce taxes by 5% over five years.” That doesn’t even keep up with inflation. It doesn’t keep up with the cost-of-living index increases.

We have to come along and have a review of what is needed, what is important, what is urgent, what is a priority, to get rid of the waste in Ontario, trim down government. Bob Rae’s government never did anything about the huge hiring policies that the previous Liberal government had. The previous Liberals added about 10,000 more public servants to the payroll during their five years, and I haven’t got the numbers from the New Democrats, but there were 10,000 added, and how many of that 10,000 have been removed? We can’t afford to have such a large bureaucracy, such a duplication of different levels of government as is going on today. We in Ontario are paying the piper. It’s costing us too much.

The issue now, today, is the intent and the purpose of this bill before the House. It’s called Bill 146, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, brought out March 30, 1994. It was the combining of two bills, Bill 66 and Bill 133, into one bill.

I’m fascinated. When this bill was originally presented to the House on December 8, 1993, the honourable Minister of Finance, a good friend of mine but of a different political philosophy, came through, and I just want to put his statement on the record and take a moment to tell you what I think of what he said.

This is Mr Laughren. He says, “Later this afternoon I will table a bill....With this legislation, we are acting on a promise made in the budget that I presented last May. At that time we pledged”—here’s what he said—“that large profitable firms in Ontario will pay at least some minimum amount of corporate income tax.”

I would like to explode the lie in that one, “that large profitable firms....” It’s the New Democrats coming out right at the beginning declaring war on businesses that make a profit. What we should be doing in government is creating a climate where business will make a profit, rather than coming along and saying anyone who does is almost a criminal and, “We’ll tax it back, we’ll take it back, we’ll claw it back.” So what they’re really saying is that large profit, that’s bad as far as they’re concerned; if you’re small and poor, that’s what’s good.

I wish I could remember the joke that was out a few years ago: How do you get a small company going? What you do is buy a large one and let the province just tax you to death, and then you’ll have a small one.

We are in a state known as Ontario where the large profitable firms have already been hit many times over. It may not just be in the tax structure; it is in the employment equity, in pay equity, in labour legislation, in Bill 40, in numerous other ways, all forms of compliance that they have to have: extra levies that they all have to pay for workers’ compensation, the extra costs for employee health tax, the extra costs for all the other taxes that are being laid upon them. You’ve got municipal taxes. You’ve got taxes that are laid on them to do business.

Now Mr Floyd Laughren, Minister of Finance, says, “Now we’re going to do something about those large profitable firms in Ontario.” I’ll tell you, if you’re an outsider looking in on Ontario—we’re very fortunate that some are still looking at Ontario, and I want them to come here, because certainly at the end of this government’s tenure we’ll try to establish a better environment for business. We must have a better environment for business. You can’t just come along and say you’re pro-employee. You’ve got to be both pro-employee and pro-employer and have balance in the development of your policies that allow the two to work in harmony.

John Bulloch, who is with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, talks about this. He says it’s probably the only jurisdiction in western society in which you have a government pledged to work for the employee and which has little, if any, understanding for the employer. That’s the balance that’s been missing for so long with this government.

Again, when Mr Laughren announced what he was going to be doing—go after large, go after profitable—they are the ones they’re going after. When he described in his opening remarks, “Today’s legislation accomplishes what we set out to do,” oh, yes. One thing that has happened, when this government took over on September 6, 1990, it set out with the Agenda for People, and this was in the Agenda for People. So the people of Ontario shouldn't be surprised. This is not like so many other reversals of government policy, where they said one thing before they were elected and then did another thing afterwards. Before they were elected they were going to do something about auto insurance and make it public, then they were going to do something different for—

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The member for Markham has the floor. Other members will have the opportunity of questioning or replying.

Mr Cousens: So then the Treasurer, the Minister of Finance, makes three points. This bill will help “to ensure tax fairness, the cornerstone of our tax policies.” What gobbledegook. What empty—tax fairness. I venture to say there isn't any such thing as a fair tax. The tax that they just described is a tax to the rich; that becomes fair. Tax fairness, the cornerstone of their policy. You look at their policies, and there isn't anything that I would want to hang my hat on. They're having to reverse—and thank goodness they are, but it's one of the few times we'll be debating further the bill for all the different tax increases for last year and the one on home brews and wine making, where they've reduced the tax on that one.

But how difficult it was to get the message across. Well over 100 of them have had to close down because of this fair taxation policy of the NDP government. There's no such thing as a cornerstone of their tax policies. Their tax policies go back to the previous sentence, tax the “large profitable firms.”

The next point that he makes is about the important role. We acknowledge “the important role of the private sector, particularly small businesses.” So in other words, with this corporate minimum tax, small businesses won't be hurt. I will come to some prepared studies that have been done on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and how they have demonstrated that this corporate minimum tax does in fact hit small businesses in Ontario. So when Mr Laughren can stand in the House and say this with his nice guy approach, that is wrong for him to make that statement that he's not hurting small business. I'll show you shortly how in fact this bill does impact small business.

“Our corporate minimum tax will stop big, profitable companies from taking advantage of tax preferences to the point where they pay little or no corporate income tax.” What they're doing, there are some companies and there are different ways in which they're paying their taxes. This government hasn't acknowledged any of the contributions that they are making. I have to say that there are other ways of going after them than starting up a whole new type of tax, and I'll come to that as well.

Then the exaggerations, the three exaggerations. He says that “it will not hamper the current recovery.” I venture to say that every tax has an impact on the recovery of Ontario's health. The tax that we're talking about here is just a further disincentive for outside businesses to invest in the province of Ontario. We're anxious to invite investors from China, Hong Kong, Europe, all parts of the world to invest in Ontario. What they do—they've got a very good system—they'll look at Ontario and say, “Well, how much tax is being collected by that government versus New York state, versus Quebec, versus another country?” If in fact Ontario is higher in all these levels, why, then, should they invest in Ontario? Why should outside investors put their money into a jurisdiction that's going to tax them more heavily than any of the others in western society or in the world?

That becomes part of the lie of this government, where they say “it will not hamper the current recovery.” I know for a fact that the outside investors are very wise in how they invest their money, and they're able to tell you far more closely than we, who are inside here, could begin to know just how we compare and compete with other jurisdictions.

He says he doesn't want to “discourage investment in our future.” This does discourage investment in our future. The very people we want to come and invest in Ontario, who have the money, are being turned off because, once again, we have taken more of their share.

He says “impair”; he doesn't want to “impair Ontario's tax competitiveness.” The moment you increase our taxes even higher, you're making us less competitive.

These are the words the Treasurer used in his remarks in December. I say it is almost contempt of the House for the Treasurer to come in and make those three statements: It won't “hamper the current recovery”—it does—it won't “discourage investment in our future”—it does—or it won't “impair Ontario's tax competitiveness”—it does. These are the kind of half-truths that come out of the mouths of politicians. Is it any wonder that people have great concern about what is said?

It's almost like the federal government saying, “We're helping Quebec.” The Shawinigan deal that Mr Chrétien is putting in—$4 million into Shawinigan—it's been shown and demonstrated it's a political gesture by the federal government. It doesn't have any purpose beyond what it's doing, and yet the federal Liberal Party is doing it. The words that come out of their mouths to justify it are just as bad as the ones that came out of the federal Conservatives' mouths when they put the prison in Brian Mulroney's riding. Let's be consistent and let's come along and develop policies that have integrity behind them and credibility of the politicians. Don't just say things because they sound good; say them because they're right, they're true and they're honest.

Is it any wonder the public have a diminished sense of value in their politicians when we make the kind of statements that Mr Laughren made when he announced this bill? Then he says it will only apply to large firms. I will get back to that further in my remarks, because when he takes a look at the assets of companies that have $5 million and says, “Anyone who has that kind of asset,” wait till you see what we can show you. He's touching small companies as well.

“It targets only those...firms that are profitable.” Isn't that something? Anyone who makes a dollar in this jurisdiction better get ready to have it taxed away, better get ready for the government to come along and put it into its own little coffers.

There are many different aspects to Bill 146. I'm going to deal mostly in my remarks with the parts that pertain to the corporate minimum tax, but it does include a few other little dandies. It has the meals and entertainment deduction. I'm surprised no one's even talked about this. Tax deductions on meals and entertainment expenses are reduced from 80% to 50%.

I sincerely hope our Tourism critic will be talking about this, and I hope other members of our caucus will take a moment or two to look at the impact on the hospitality industry, which is an important part of Ontario's economy. It's in the top three. It changes as the automotive sector improves, but tourism is a large part of what Ontario's economy is all about. A large part of that is for those companies that will be at conventions in Ontario cities, and Ontario-based organizations that are sending their people to do business in other places would look for a form of write-off on those expenses.

It wasn't that long ago that it was the Liberals who moved it from 100% write-off to 80% write-off. Talk to restaurateurs and ask them what happened when they lost the 100% write-off, where if businesses were doing entertaining at noonhour or evening over dinner, that expense was 100% deductible off their taxes. Then, there was more business being done over lunch and at mealtime. When the government reduced it to 80%, that reduced the amount of business done in restaurants.

How many people did you hurt? I'll tell you, the government at that time hurt a lot of the small businesses and some of the large restaurants as well. It was a form of expenditure that, because it could be written off, was also feeding another one of our major systems, the whole restaurant industry.

So now the government, effective the beginning of this year, 1994, will not allow even an 80% write-off on costs of doing businesses in the hospitality industry. It's reduced from 80% to 50%. It will impact the hospitality industry in Ontario. Ontario businesses are going to be saying to their employees: "Look, we just can't afford to have you having lunch or entertaining someone in that way. It's now going to be more carried by our costs of doing business, so reduce it." And when they reduce it, it reduces the amount of business that industry does and again reduces the whole net economy of the province of Ontario. It's less circulation of money for people who are feeding the system.

What it does is allow the government to get more of that money: Less money on the street, less money to help business. The people they're hurting with this are the very people you'd think the New Democrats would want to help, the small businessmen. The majority of the small restaurants are mom and pop organizations, family organizations, people who are just doing a good thing, working hard. But now they've had the government that says, "We're out to help you"—yes, they're out to help them take the money out of their pockets and put it in the government's pocket. I have a genuine concern that the government, by making this move in the budget, is increasing the amount of money it will take out of expenses for meals and entertainment.

There are a number of other aspects to the bill, and I'll just touch on them briefly. It is quite a complicated bill when you start realizing just how large it is. The bill is 75 pages of small print and it does go into quite a large number of areas. The one I will spend most of my time on happens to be the corporate minimum tax, but it touches on all the different surtaxes.

I compliment the government that it is modernizing the systems of filing tax returns on computer disc and using electronic media. It's a little bit late, but better late than never, and we're in a position where we have to find new ways where you can use facsimile and other processes to get your data quickly to the government. I notice people are getting their federal income taxes back much faster this year than before, using the electronic systems.

This bill imposes a temporary surtax on banks for taxation years ending after April 30, 1992, and commencing before November 1. It's another surtax there.

It reduces the small business income tax rate from 10% to 9.5% for taxation years after April 30, 1992.

It increases the rate of the surtax on Canadian-controlled private corporations with a taxable income exceeding $200,000 from 3.7% to 4%.

Those all sound like small numbers, but when you have a big budget and high costs, 0.5% or 0.3% becomes significant, especially when there are so many other taxes that are impacting business.

It's reducing the tax rate from 14.5% to 13.5% on income from manufacturing and processing, mining, farming, logging and fishing for taxation years ending after December 31.

It's reducing the paid-up capital for capital tax purposes of bank mortgages. It's increasing the rate of capital tax on banks from 1% to 1.2% for taxation years after April 30, 1992. A lot of people are very quick to criticize the banks, but here again banks are having to pay their share. People say, "They don't have to pay anything." They pay.

They have standardized the administrative penalty for late-filed tax returns by changing the penalty from 10% of the balance of the tax owing for the year to a much larger amount. They have paralleled some of their methods with the federal taxes.

And it goes on. It is a very complicated bill. I've only touched on a few of the different components of the bill, but it begins to show you that when the government has a way of taking its comb through business, it just doesn't let any fleas stay in the hair. They're picking up all the things they can to see what they can garner.

This bill implements a new tax on life insurance corporations, called a special additional tax, computed at the rate of 1.25% of the taxable capital for taxation years ending after April 30, 1992. That too will net about $15 million to $20 million.

When you start looking at it, people say, "Well, we're all being gouged." Yes, we are. And then they say, "Well, the government will announce this as a new, fair tax." There's no such thing as a fair tax. What we're dealing with is another way for the government to get money.

The Fair Tax Commission also did a review of the corporate minimum tax, and I refer to this tome, its report that came out, Fair Taxation in a Changing World. Their remarks on page 437 are salient to the point I'm trying to make, and I would like to put this into the record. It has to do with the corporate minimum tax that is implicit in part of Bill 146.

"However, as several members of the Corporate Minimum Tax Working Group observed, it has a number of serious shortcomings. Not only does it tend to be complex, but the option introduces a limit or clawback on incentives that governments have deliberately introduced to advance economic or social policy goals."

Therefore the government has said to businesses, "We want to see you grow, we want to see you build, we want to see you expand, we want to see you do all those things," but the moment they do, it's like the cat having given the mouse just a little room to play with: The paw is ready to drop, to take it all back plus a bit more.

"In general, we conclude that the introduction of this type of minimum tax does little more than introduce a second income tax structure."

Dig that: a second income tax structure. What we're beginning now is the beginning of something that will be a much larger form of taxation for this government. Isn't it funny? I haven't been a student of tax for all that long, but taxes originally were to pay for certain basic services, and then when there was a war they started collecting more tax for that, but now taxation is such an incredibly large part of what our lives are all about and what government's all about.

Once you start the new corporate minimum tax, it just opens the door for its continuation. In fact, the government's done it that way. They start off small, with a small percentage in the first year but increasing it over a period of three years, so at the end of three years this corporate minimum tax is not going to be all that minimum to the people who are having to pay.

"Over time, this new tax is unlikely to be any more effective than the regular income tax in dealing with the complex issues of what should be included in the tax base for corporate income tax."

In other words, here are the people sent out by Floyd Laughren, and he spent millions of dollars to get them to do a report, and they're saying: "This isn't going to solve the problem. There are other ways in which you could have dealt with it."

The report goes on to say: "Although we have considerable sympathy with the aim of this tax in attempting to deal with the problem of non-taxpaying and low-taxpaying profitable corporations, we are convinced that explicit recognition and a vigorous assessment of tax expenditures will deal with this blatant unfairness in the tax system better than the application of a further corporate tax."

I'm with them. Mr Laughren in his remarks at the very beginning, as I explained in December, said, "We're going after the large profitable corporations." If there are some that have found loopholes that have gone so far that they have an advantage over and above everybody else, then let's go after them, but to levy this new tax, which is going to have the impact it will have, is quite another question.

So we lead to the comments that I would like to make on the Ontario corporate minimum tax. I received excellent dialogue from the major accounting houses, and they do an excellent job for business to try to explain just what the impact is going to be on the different taxes as they come out. This is a provincial tax bulletin that was put out by Ernst and Young in December 1993.

Mr Mills: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I refer to the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly, chapter 6, specifically 23(d). That standing order suggests that reports read into legislative debate, such as the honourable member is doing now, is not allowed. This goes on and on and on. My idea of debate is spirited debate, not reading from documents. It's against the standing orders, and I ask you to rule on that, Mr Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The Speaker will certainly allow the member to refer from time to time to a report which he is referring to. He is also participating in the debate, and in my opinion he is very much in order.

Mr Cousens: I don't know. If the honourable member's concern is that you don't have some reference point and some basis for your study, even to give references you're working from, that's also part of the lunacy. Maybe the problem we've got with this cut-flower government is that it doesn't have roots. They're afraid to admit who it is they get advice from. I'm quite prepared to acknowledge that I personally don't have all the knowledge on financial affairs, but I am prepared to listen and refer to others who have been far more involved in this.

Mr Speaker, if there is any way in which I am in breach of the rules of the House, I would be the first to try to correct it. I have to believe it is our responsibility as legislators to do our research. In fact, I have a number of references I want to make to work done by others who have been working on this issue far more. I take offence at the member for Durham East saying you can't refer to any other documents. If you're dealing with the kind of debate he's talking about, all you're going to be doing is yelling at each other. I would at least like to draw upon certain resources that assist me. So I thank you for allowing me to continue.

In the bulletin from Ernst and Young, it said the purpose of the corporate minimum tax is "to maintain the perception of fairness in the Ontario corporate income tax system." Isn't that funny: the perception of fairness. That's probably, as much as anything, what Mr Laughren said in his opening statement on December 8. They're more interested in perceptions than they are in the real work of trying to work out a system that's going to balance the books and cause people to have confidence in Ontario's fiscal policy. In fact, all they're trying to do is a public relations scam that will satisfy the needs of the unions to say, "At least you've gone after the big corporations."

It's a sop, a sop to other groups, that allows the government to say, "Hey, we've taxed here, we've taxed there, but notice how we've taxed the big guys." That's a way of this government trying to appease the different pressure groups and interest groups that are putting pressure on them.

"Corporate minimum tax will minimize these costs. It should be recognized that using the CMT to maintain the perceived fairness of the tax system is done at a cost." And that's the point: It's done at a great cost.

"The corporate minimum tax applies to corporations subject to regular Ontario corporate income tax which have more than either $5 million in assets at the end of the year or $10 million in total revenue during that year."

Stop and think about that, and this is one of the things I'll be referring to shortly. When you start realizing that the corporate minimum tax will then apply to any corporation in Ontario, this is where you're going to see that it's no longer just the large systems. Small corporations with 10, 20, 30 employees may well fall within the guidelines because of their investments, the property, the equipment. The assets they have will put them into the category of being $5-million corporations, when in fact the revenue they're taking out of it, the money they're able to take into their own pocket is minimal.

The conclusion of this report was: "The Ontario corporate minimum tax proposals begin a new era in corporate taxation. Even so, and despite the stated objective of simplicity and ease of administration, the corporate minimum tax proposals will impose additional administrative burden on affected corporations."

And there is no doubt that it will impose an extra burden. Every tax places a greater burden on the companies that have to pay it, not only the business of understanding the tax, making sure your books are balanced off against the tax—the compliance factor and the cost to comply for businesses is just one of the high costs of doing business in Ontario. The government says, "Oh, it's going to be easy." It isn't all that easy. They made it somewhat simplified by virtue of not forcing corporations to have a special audited statement from which the CMT would be taken, but notwithstanding that, the province of Ontario does again place pressure on them.

I'd like to refer as well, and again the member for Durham East does not want me to refer to any documents, but I find this letter from Vern Penner, president of the Markham Board of Trade, as good a statement as any. As the member for the riding of Markham, I think it's worthwhile noting the kind of thinking that business people from within my riding are having that makes me feel right and good that I'm on the same side of the fence as are those business people.

He writes this letter to Mr Rae on December 9:

"The recent announcement of your government's plan to again tax our corporations in Ontario is disturbing to say the least. With the present tax rate, the new corporate tax, the Ontario labour relations regulations, the workers' compensation increases, the employment equity programs, to name a few, businesses certainly will not be attracted to Ontario. Those here are already going through extremely difficult times and are downsizing and laying off staff to try to manage through these poor economic times.

"Your government strategy and programs are making it so difficult in Ontario that businesses are moving out of the province rather than into it.

"On behalf of our members, we urge you to develop and implement a program that will help businesses, not make it so difficult that they either go bankrupt or move. Businesses and the economy have to be revitalized. Otherwise your government's training programs will be worthless for if businesses continue their layoffs and no new companies move into the province, where will your retrained people work?

"We anticipate receiving a plan from you indicating how your government intends to revitalize the economy to assist businesses."

A fair letter, a fair statement saying, "We've reached the tax wall." Where is your government when it comes to doing something to help business, to cut red tape? Where are you when it comes to helping business to grow? What are you doing to create a better climate for business? How can you justify imposing this tax when it's so anti-business? All it's doing is taking away jobs and cutting into our future.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business did an extensive research, which it shared with Mr Laughren, on September 30, 1993. They were working from the budget document that allowed them to understand what the impact was going to be of the CMT and they surveyed their membership.

They attach a copy of their survey, but I'll just touch on some of the highlights. Nearly 86% of the respondents of the survey that they had last summer indicated their opposition, of which 64% were strongly opposed to the corporate minimum tax. Some 8.5% favour the corporate minimum tax while 5.8% were undecided.

Members commented that the real answers to addressing our problems lie in reducing government spending, reducing government bureaucracy and reducing the tax burden on businesses. Concern was expressed about the government extracting $100 million annually from the business sector instead of allowing it to be productively reinvested. Some members predicted that the corporate minimum tax will drive more businesses out of Ontario.

According to one of their other questions, their members favour "government efforts to modify the corporate tax preferences directly." That is 69.5% as opposed to layering on a new complicated tax calculation.

1700

Who is there in that government to stand up for the special-interest group known as profitable businesses in Ontario? There isn't anyone from within the government, because they're all on the dole. They're not out there. They have not appreciated the kind of thing it takes to run a business. They haven't met a payroll. All the socialists of Ontario can do is think of more ways of taking money away from people. What you have to look at is that these are the people—unfortunately they have no understanding of what big business is all about.

Another comment that was made by CFIB:

"To respond to members in both situations, CFIB strongly urges the government to raise the gross revenue and total asset thresholds with the advantage that more smaller businesses could be spared the time and cost of performing the corporate minimum tax calculation."

Okay, now this is where I want to get into one of the earlier points I'd touched upon, that this tax is not only for the large corporations, it is in fact a tax that is going to impact small companies as well. This was in a subsequent document that was prepared by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and I have to believe that if their data are correct, they point to the profile of what is a small business.

I'd like to just read this into the record:

"We have analysed the profile of small businesses, using a run on their own data against the membership of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. The first observation is that of these small firms, with a total number of employees of five to 19, which are caught by the corporate minimum tax threshold, some 72% have sales in the modest range of $2 million to $4.9 million."

It's obviously the $5-million asset threshold which is capturing these small enterprises. What's happening is that because they also have other assets—property, equipment, machinery, these things become assets—it goes into the total cost of what the business is all about.

If you're a contractor, a roadbuilder—and I've known quite a number of them—they've got a huge outlay in equipment because they buy their equipment from their operating capital and then they have it. It will sit there in their yard, unused until they get another job, but they're going to be taxed on the prorated value of that asset, and even though they may not be making any money, or money to speak of—it might be poor and lean economic times—because their assets are so large they will be brought into the umbrella of having to pay the corporate minimum tax.

There are obviously various factors which cause these small firms to have assets of over $5 million. One can deduce, in some instances, that costly inventories are the reason. Other firms must invest in expensive heavy equipment or sizeable tracts of land to carry out their work. Still others have made the decision to buy rather than lease their facilities. It is highly unfair that these smaller businesses should be penalized for the basic operating realities in their line of work.

It must be emphasized that merely having total assets in excess of $5 million does not suggest that the firm is well off financially. I make that point: Just because a company has over $5 million in assets, it does not mean they are financially well off, yet they fall into the guidelines of the corporate minimum tax and they will then have that extra levy laid upon them. It does nothing to promote jobs, it does nothing to promote the economy, it does nothing to them; it's just because they fall into this very low-level guideline.

I therefore say to the honourable parliamentary assistant and to the Treasurer and all those across the floor, look at ways of increasing. If you're going to make a change to the corporate minimum tax and you say you're just going to hit the large corporations, then be consistent with what the Treasurer said in his statement on December 8, and go for the large ones.

What you're doing is taking the net out to capture many that are not large. They are small by comparison—the small number of employees—but because they have assets in excess of maybe what the government thinks they should have, either in the property or the heavy equipment—I think the classic case is that of the roadbuilder. The roadbuilder has that heavy equipment, uses it for a short period of time every year, but there it is; it's a high cost.

The developers I know have huge tracts of land that are set aside which they've invested in. There's a certain amount of land-banking that goes on so that as time evolves, they'll be able to receive approvals to have that land developed. Already in Ontario it takes an inordinate amount of time to get approvals to develop property, to get the official plan changed, to have the amendments changed. You go through the 43 or 46 different levels of bureaucracy to get an approval for a land development of some kind. It just takes years.

Because that corporation happens to have an investment in property in excess of several million dollars, if it's over $5 million, and all the money's tied up in property and that is the case, and the property is mostly owned by the banks—they own the property—now on top of the high cost of paying for the property while they're waiting to get it developed, while they're waiting to get it processed, they too will have a corporate minimum tax laid upon them. Is there any other reason why you do it except to almost say, "Well, they've got more than the rest of the small guys, so let's go after them"?

There's an offence in the thinking of this government that is really the underlying concern that I have. They came through in this House and said, "This is our new fair policy of taxation and we are only going to be going after the large, profitable corporations." The moment they said the assets had to be over $5 million—I don't have $5 million. I don't think Gerry Phillips has $5 million.

We also respect the importance of having those small businesses that have some assets and have some worth around $5 million so they can do something with it. Then they can invest it and they can build upon it and grow it, but not with this government. They're saying, "We're going to hit you again." How else do you say it?

All I can tell you is that I have fought this right from the beginning, and I know that my breath is in vain.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): No, it's not. You're on television for an hour and a half today and running into municipalities—

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. The member for Markham has the floor. Interjections are out of order.

Mr Cousens: The frustration I have is that all our efforts in opposition really don't result in changes to tax bills. The government has a way of whipping the members and will bring them into the House, and at the appropriate time, if it turns out that we talk too much on this side of the House, the government brings in closure and says, "No more talking on that; we're going to do it anyway." Even though the government, when it was in opposition, would go on and on and on, we are at least trying to take the responsible tack to tell you as members of the government that we have genuine concerns about this tax. I have concerns about the whole taxation policy. I have concerns about the spending policy of the government. I have many, many concerns.

I could go on longer but I feel that the point has been made. I'll just highlight it and close off.

This bill, Bill 146, has many ingredients to it. The first is that it's going to hit the hospitality industry in Ontario, reducing the amount of deductions that people can have for hospitality, for entertainment and meals, from 80% to 50%. That is going to hurt the restaurants, the people I know in Unionville, Markham, Thornhill, Toronto, Guelph and Cornwall, because every one of those communities and all the communities in Ontario have business people who come into their establishments to buy a meal which could come out as a business expense. They're out of town overnight and while they're overnight they have certain expenses. They could normally claim that. The companies now will have to reduce the amount of claim to only 50% instead of 80%. I'll tell you, that's just another cost of doing business.

The second point I've made, and I've tried to make it clear, is that this government, with the corporate minimum tax, is again starting a brand-new tax structure, a brand-new approach in order to collect money, and in so doing, it just opens the door for the problem that Ontario will be less competitive with other jurisdictions. Corporations will now see Ontario as even less attractive as a place to invest. This tax bill itself will touch upon corporations that are not just the large, profitable ones; it'll touch on small ones as well.

It's just too bad we can't do more to fight it. I can tell you this much: Once a bill like this is passed and once the government gets its claws into someone's wallet, there won't be any government that reverses it. So we're stuck with it.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): The corporation tax.

Mr Cousens: Yes, the minimum corporation tax.

Mr Perruzza: You mean not even Mike Harris is going to do that, the tax fighter?

Mr Cousens: Because at that point there's going to be so much to do—we can hopefully freeze taxes, but beyond, you haven't seen a government yet roll back taxes. You can have the Liberals make the promise that they're going to roll back taxes by 5% in the next several years. Well, who knows whether that'll happen? We have seen all the promises that politicians make that have to do with tax rollbacks.

I'm concerned that here is just another one of the eroding factors to Ontario's success. I've spoken against it; I'll continue to feel strongly about it. I feel that people like the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Fair Tax Commission, the established accounting agencies, my own board of trade and others have all had strong things to say about this tax. It's wrong. It's wrong-minded. It's badly implemented. I will vote against it and I just sincerely hope that some of the members on the government benches will think twice about it.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Now we have time for questions or comments.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Cochrane South): I just couldn't hesitate but to comment on the speech given by my honourable colleague on the other side.

I just want to touch on the one thing, and that's this whole question of eroding confidence of the business community and investors in the province of Ontario. If you were to listen to the members of the opposition speak, and particularly the speech of the previous member, nobody is willing to invest in Ontario any more because for some God-awful reason this present government has changed everything so badly that nobody wants to come any more.

I just want to bring a couple of facts to light. Right now in my riding, the riding of Cochrane South, we have major private sector investment going on, probably in the neighbourhood of $500 million to $700 million, depending on how the numbers play out. That's not a bad record considering that even in the heydays in my riding we'd never seen anywhere near those numbers.

So we're seeing people invest in the province of Ontario because they understand that Ontario is a good place to do business. When you come to Ontario you have the stability of an economy that is vibrant, that works; you have a workforce that's well trained; you have the confidence of the business community in order to get things done. In the end, investors will invest where you can make money. That's the bottom line here, that you can make money in the province of Ontario like you can nowhere else in some cases.

I want to also just touch a little bit on this whole notion that the opposition is trying to put forward in regard to, well, let's just keep on scaring the voter out there by saying nobody will come and invest any more. It's a little bit like the analogy of real estate salesmen. We're two real estate agencies. I've got the listing and I'm trying to sell the house, and you as my opposition are out there saying, "You know, you shouldn't buy that house because the paint's not quite yellow enough and the windows aren't quite clear enough," and you just keep on bad-mouthing the deal to the point of trying to scare the investor away from me and get him over to you.

I think we really need to be careful when we do that, because in the end we are all salesmen of the province of Ontario, either opposition members or government, and what we should be doing is that, yes, we've got to talk frankly about some of our problems, but we should be trying to increase investment by trying to talk positively about this province.

Mr McLean: I want to comment briefly on the remarks made by the member for Markham. I want to say that the minimum corporate tax act that you're dealing with is going to be a detriment to business. It's going to be a detriment to our tourist industry.

When you look at the percentage for people who entertain, who want to take out their guests, going from 80% to 50%, if you think that isn't going to have an effect on downtown Metro Toronto urban areas, on business, it will.

The other aspect of this bill has to do really with regard to the tourism. When we look at the corporate rates for the 1992 budget, no change in the basic corporate tax rate. But now we're looking at a three-year phase-in of 2% in 1994, 3% in 1995 and 4% in 1996. So when we look at the increase that's going to take place over the years, they're looking at over $100 million when it's fully implemented: $100 million out of the corporations that wanted to create jobs, that wanted to expand their business and keep the jobs here in Ontario. With this added tax, it's not going to happen.

Our position has been that we should be decreasing some of the taxes. The Treasurer the other day, not too long ago, said that with regard to the tax taken off the you-brews, from 26 cents to 13 cents. Those people who have lost $100,000 already, what's going to happen to those businesses that have gone under?

I say that this tax this government is bringing in is another detriment to society, a detriment to the business in this province, and the taxation that's gone on, the $2-billion increase in last year's budget alone is unacceptable. That's why we're losing the fight to keep the jobs and create more jobs, and jobs is what Ontario should be all about.

Mr Perruzza: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to a comment the member for the Conservative Party made, a comment which didn't surprise me at all: He is going to be voting against the minimum corporate tax. It doesn't surprise me at all, because we've seen, what, close to 10 years of Conservative rule in Ottawa. We've seen breaks on the corporate tax side. They started it systematically from the time they came into office until today.

But I'll tell you what they did as well. They hammered each and every Canadian right across the country for 10 years, year after year after year after year. They didn't blush when it came time to imposing the GST, a tax that would have to be paid by each individual Canadian. That wasn't going to deter business, no, no, no. That was going to make Canada more competitive and business was going to move back into the country. It was 7% off the top of just about everything: No, that attracted investment and that attracted business.

But now when it comes to saying let some of the bigger businesses, that have been getting a fairly easy ride, and many of which have been getting a free ride, pay a little and pick up a little of the slack, what do our good friends the Conservatives say? "No, no, no. Those aren't people who should be contributing to the tax roll."

Do the comments surprise me? Not at all. I'm so glad they're the third party in opposition, and that's where I suspect they'll remain with these kinds of attitudes.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): As always, I found the speech from the member for Markham interesting and exciting, the future mayor of Markham. I'm told he's a candidate. I don't know if this is true, but no doubt there's a lot of pressure on him for that.

One has to look, when he makes a speech of this kind, at whether the circumstances have changed for taxes. For instance, when the former Conservative government, which I sat in opposition to for so many years, raised taxes year after year, and a variety of taxes, including corporate taxes, because it needed the funds to fund the various programs, was that in a climate that could sustain those kinds of taxes? I'm sure the member for Markham would say that likely it was, that they were relatively good years in terms of the economy, just as the years from 1985 to 1990, when Ontario enjoyed the second-highest economic growth of all of North America, were years where it might have been possible to sustain an increase in corporate taxes.

What we're seeing at this time and where I think the circumstances are different—and I'm a person who likes to deal in the present and in the future and not simply worry about the past, even though I well recall the speeches from members on the other side in the past. Have the circumstances changed significantly? They have, for a couple of reasons, and some of them are right out of the hands of the provincial government.

They're largely because of the kind of competition we face for investment dollars today. There are people out there who are looking to invest in various places and there are various jurisdictions that are trying to attract those people.

Although it sounds very good to pass a tax measure of this kind, and it makes people feel good that they've gotten people they think haven't paid taxes before, we have to look at, will it improve the investment climate in the province? I think the member for Markham has concluded, as I have, that such a tax would not do so.

The Acting Speaker: The time for questions or comments has expired, and now the member for Markham has two minutes to reply.

Mr Cousens: The member for St Catharines makes an excellent point. There is an environment for everything and a time and a place for it, and we see that this is not the time for further taxes such as this. You made that point very well and I thank you for it.

The member for Downsview, I don't know what you said that was important, so I'm going to skip that.

As usual, the member for Simcoe East was dead on. He talks about this being a detriment to the province of Ontario, and he has totally the correct view that this tax on the hospitality industry is going to have a very deleterious impact. As for the corporate minimum tax, he thinks it's just another way for the province to add to its coffers. I respect very much where he's coming from. He could probably pay everybody's taxes, but none the less, I know he's out there to protect others from doing it.

To the member for Cochrane South, I'm thrilled that things are prospering as well as they are in your community. In fact, we want to see more communities that can have members stand up and say things are as good as they are. But the mining industry's been going through tough, tough times. I think you're an exception in that sense. Look at Sault Ste Marie and many of our northern communities where unemployment is over 30% to 40%. We've got real problems. We want to get people from outside to come and invest in Ontario. In the meantime, I am always pleased to see people do well, and if things are as good as you say, God bless the people from Cochrane South and may they continue to prosper.

But understand, we're here in the Legislature dealing with a legislative bill that's raising taxes again. If I can't raise the issue in this House—and I'm a little combative—where else am I going to do it? How else are we going to tell people how much we disagree with what your government's doing? That is democracy at work.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): Madam Speaker, on a point of order: I don't believe we have a quorum present to hear this rather important debate.

The Acting Speaker: Could the clerk please determine if a quorum is present.

Acting Clerk Assistant (Mr Franco Carrozza): Speaker, a quorum is not present.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Acting Clerk Assistant: Speaker, a quorum is now present.

The Acting Speaker: We may resume, and the member for Scarborough-Agincourt has the floor.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I'm pleased to join the debate on what's called Bill 146, which for those people who may not be familiar with the bill, incorporates, if I'm not mistaken, 11 measures from the 1992 budget and five measures from the 1993 budget. The public might wonder what in the world we're doing dealing with a budget that now is virtually two years old. The 1992 budget was presented, as I recall, on April 30, 1992, which towards the end of this week will be two years ago, and then we're dealing with measures in the 1993 budget.

It's fair to say that the centrepiece of this legislation is what's called the corporate minimum tax, although there are several other measures that I hope to have a chance to discuss as we get into the debate on the bill.

I do think it's important to set the stage for what we're dealing with here. The member from Cochrane was indicating that in the area he represents things seem to be pretty good. I will say, frankly, that's not the case in most of our constituencies, in most of the areas that we represent around the province. It's certainly not true in the area that I represent, which is a part of Scarborough.

I think it's fair to say that certainly for the people I represent, the number one issue is jobs: jobs for themselves, jobs for their family and jobs for their friends and neighbours. I will repeat what we've said many times in this Legislature, that the situation is serious in Ontario, that in spite of what the Premier may say about things getting better and that we are well on our way, I will just say that we are now well into 1994. In the first quarter of 1994, the first three months of 1994, the government, Bob Rae, had said we would be seeing substantial job growth by now, that we would be seeing year-over-year job growth of 65,000 or 70,000 more jobs in the province in 1994 than we saw in 1993.

Actually, the reverse is happening, and we've actually seen, in the first quarter of 1994, 4,000 fewer jobs in the province of Ontario. So rather than 65,000 or 70,000 more jobs—and that, by the way, is just to hold the unemployment rate steady, because about 75,000 or 80,000 a year enter the Ontario labour force. We need to see those numbers of new jobs, net new jobs created. We actually have seen in the first three months job losses, and I might say it contrasts with the rest of the country where we see about 150,000 more jobs created in the first three months of 1994 than the same period of time in 1993.

The Acting Speaker: I would ask members to please keep their conversations down. I am trying to listen to the member who has the floor.

Mr Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Most tragic, in my opinion, is the unemployment rate among young people. We see the reported rate of unemployment among young people at perhaps 20%. That's what is reported in the statistics. Anyone who has looked at the numbers will say that—

Mr Bisson: Boring.

Mr Phillips: The member across is saying "Boring." I will say once again to the members, you should be ashamed of yourselves.

Interjection.

Mr Phillips: No, one of the members over there.

Anyone who is prepared to live with one third of our young people out of work and then say that is boring, there is something wrong with the NDP caucus. I am amazed you are not in revolt. I can't understand the back bench in the NDP, how you can accept an unemployment rate among our young people of one out of three and then sit in here and laugh. To me, you should be embarrassed; you should be ashamed of yourself. You should be demanding action by the cabinet.

I don't know how you can sit still for four years, entering five years now, and live with yourselves. Frankly, as I say, I cannot understand the back bench of the NDP not in revolt about an unemployment rate among our young people of one out of three. There's never been a situation like that. Perhaps in the 1930s, but never since then, and all we're doing is being silent about it and saying things are getting better, that we are prepared to accept one out of three of our young people being unemployed.

It's tragic, and if you don't start raising your voices in caucus—

Mr Bisson: What are you going to do about it?

Mr Phillips: "What are you going to do about it?" the member says. I will say we have issued a paper about what we're going to do about it. The question is, what are you going to do about it? Why don't you get on—

Mr White: Issue a paper. Issue a paper.

Mr Phillips: Yes, making proposals to the government, but the government won't listen. The government will not listen to recommendations from either the third party or ourselves—

Mr White: I can see the backbenchers of your party getting really excited. Issue a paper.

Mr Phillips: —and the members across get wild-eyed and yell, but they're doing nothing about the unemployment rate among our young people. You should be ashamed of yourselves.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Phillips: Ashamed of yourselves.

Mr White: You should be ashamed of yourself, making such gratuitous comments.

Mr Phillips: Well, there goes the member again, rather than coming forward with suggestions and solutions. I'd like to know what you are saying in your caucus. I would like to know how you let the cabinet come in and out of your caucus when every single year the unemployment rate among our young people climbs dramatically. It doesn't go down, and you sit silently.

I have not heard one of you backbenchers in this debate get up and talk about young people and the unemployment rate. I've not heard one of you. I'd like to see the Hansard from you, sir, of where you have got up and talked about young people and come forward with suggestions and solutions. No, all you can do is heckle while our young people in this province are tragically out of work. If you want to accept that, that's fine, but I don't.

What are the solutions? As I say, two weeks ago we issued a paper with our proposals on it. Whether you like them or you don't like them, it was a comprehensive plan to deal with unemployment, including unemployment among our young people.

A year ago my leader, Lyn McLeod, issued a detailed paper on youth unemployment that I don't think any of the NDP caucus has even taken the time to read, I don't think any of you has taken the time to read. So when you heckle and you yell and you say, "What are you going to do about it?" there are two specific detailed proposals we have given to the government, and the government has chosen not to act.

Mr Perruzza: You've given nobody nothing.

Mr Phillips: There goes the member again, yelling—

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Perruzza: Nothing, not a thing.

Mr Phillips: —saying we have done nothing, whereas, Madam Speaker, you can look at the record—

The Acting Speaker: One moment please. I would like to remind all members that each member in this House has the right to speak and to be heard and I would like the member to address his comments through the Chair.

Mr Phillips: I find that when people have nothing to say, they yell, and the member across is yelling. Some day he may have something to say, and then I think people in the province might choose to listen to him.

If any of us take the time to look at this issue, the tragedy of unemployment, and the tragedy of unemployment particularly among our young people, you wouldn't be sitting here heckling; you would be out spending your time trying to find some solutions.

I come now to the bill and to talk a little bit about the bill, because it incorporates many proposals. I remember well something called the Agenda for People, where—

Mr Perruzza: Oh, that hasn't come out in a long time. Let's hear it.

Mr Phillips: It hasn't come out in a long time. I carry it with me all the time. An Agenda for People: This was the promises that Bob Rae got elected on; it was the promises that defeated a government and the promises that Bob Rae got elected on. The member chooses to leave now, and I understand why.

In it what Premier Rae said was this: "A minimum corporate income tax would ensure that profitable corporations could not use tax loopholes to reduce their taxes to zero." It said, and this was their platform, that the minimum corporate tax would raise $1 billion a year.

This was going to be the key way they would fund the promises that they've now broken. They're going to fund it with $1 billion a year going after the corporations with the minimum corporate tax. That's how they were going to, as I say, deal with all of the promises they made, the promises they've now broken.

I think the people of Ontario should recognize that that was the promise, the $1 billion. Then there was a Fair Tax Commission appointed to look at this, to say, "All right, how are we going to get the $1 billion?" The Fair Tax Commission's report was quite informative.

If I can summarize the Fair Tax Commission's report, firstly, there was no $1 billion to be found. After the report came out, someone said, "Where's the $1 billion that Premier Rae thought he would get?" and I said, "Premier Rae went looking for the enemy and found the enemy, and the enemy is the government."

The reasons corporations do not pay taxes, the reasons many profitable corporations pay no taxes are found in detail in the Fair Tax Commission's report. It's quite simple. There are two reasons.

One reason about half of the corporations that make money aren't paying taxes is because of a loss carry-forward. They've lost money in previous years and therefore they carry that forward: quite legal, quite understandable. I think the public by and large accept that, if a corporation has lost a lot of money in one year, there should be some way that they reduce their taxation in future years. So that was the reason for half the profitable corporations.

The second reason that the other half of the corporations are profitable and paying no taxes is because they are taking advantage of government programs. The governments, governments of all stripes, have put together programs over the years that are designed to encourage corporations to do things. When corporations take advantage of the government programs to do things, they reduce their taxes. When they reduce their taxes, in many cases they reduce their taxes to zero because they are taking advantage of government programs.

What the Fair Tax Commission concluded, and I think it was a solid conclusion, in its final report that came out last fall, one of the key recommendations there is this: that Ontario introduce new disclosure and accountability requirements for corporate tax expenditures—"a corporate tax expenditure" is the jargon used for tax programs offered by governments to reduce taxes in exchange for doing things that governments want them to do—eliminate the Ontario-only corporate income tax expenditures and address the issue of profitable corporations paying no tax through restrictions on tax expenditures rather than through a corporate minimum tax.

So the government spent I think $9 million of the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars to have the Fair Tax Commission study this issue in detail. The Fair Tax Commission did study it in detail, and its recommendation was, "No, don't introduce a corporate minimum tax; rather, deal with the real issue," which is what they would call the tax expenditure program.

As a matter of fact, on page 104 of this discussion paper from the Fair Tax Commission it outlines approximately $4 billion of tax expenditures. This is money that the people of Ontario give up in tax revenues to corporations. It is a variety of things, including capital cost allowances, current cost adjustments, research and development superallowance, resource allowance, small business deduction, flat capital for small business. There's $4 billion worth of what are called "tax expenditures."

That was the recommendation of the Fair Tax Commission: Why put, I think, 14,000 corporations in Ontario through a fairly expensive process of filing for corporate minimum tax? Why send the signal out to the global business community that says, "In Ontario, regardless of what we do with our tax policy, we are still going to tax you; even if you are abiding by all of the laws and all of the things that we want you to do in the province, even if you get through all of that and you're paying no taxes because you're complying with all the government regulations and all the government tax laws, we're still going to tax you," and in my opinion send to the international business community another signal that Ontario is a business environment that is hostile?

As I say, they went directly against—the Minister of Transportation came in. You spent $9 million of taxpayers' money on this. You had all the studies done. They looked at it in great detail. Their recommendation was: no corporate minimum tax.

Now, the problem is that Bob Rae promised $1 billion, in the Agenda for People, in revenue from the minimum corporate tax. So I understand why politically it's embarrassing to agree with the Fair Tax Commission's report. But I think a far wiser move would have been to look at the Fair Tax Commission's report and find the underlying causes of why otherwise profitable corporations are not paying taxes.

The reason is—the Minister of Transportation shakes his head—the Fair Tax Commission concluded for you that the reason they're not doing it is because these corporations are complying with government programs on tax breaks that encourage them to do things.

The corporations say to me: "Listen, you asked me to, for example, invest in capital, in equipment and what not. I do that. I then take advantage of your incentives for me to do that. What that means is I reduce my profits down to nothing, taking advantage of it, and then you want to put another tax on me called the corporate minimum tax. What's going on here? You want me to head one way and then you jerk me back the other way."

Furthermore, I might say, what we are doing, if you cut through it all, the tax proposal here calls for raising approximately $100 million from the corporate minimum tax. It is essentially a clawback of about 2% of these tax expenditures, these tax breaks that the government is offering to our corporate sector. Wouldn't we be far better to look at these tax expenditure programs, rather than putting 14,000 corporations through an enormous exercise of complying with the corporate minimum tax that, by any definition, is a relatively blunt instrument?

I understand why the government's doing it. Actually, as I recall it, the corporate minimum tax was introduced quite hastily just a few weeks before the Fair Tax Commission report came out to avoid the embarrassment of introducing a corporate minimum tax after the Fair Tax Commission's strong recommendation against it.

I would say on the tax issue that we've often heard you're going to hit a tax wall some day. We've heard that from lots of economists and from lots of people and I guess governments have questioned when you hit that. I think an objective analysis of the situation in Ontario today would say we've hit it.

I went back and I looked at the three budgets that have been presented to date by the government, and we'll see another one next week. But the 1991 budget, as I think everyone here knows, took taxes up by approximately $1 billion. The 1992 budget took taxes up by approximately $1 billion and the 1993 budget took it up by approximately $2 billion. We saw three consecutive years of very substantial—but the Minister of Finance himself said, "We have taken taxes up substantially." But what's actually happened to tax revenue?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation and Minister Responsible for Francophone Affairs): Where's the wall?

Mr Phillips: We've hit it. "Where's the wall?" the minister says. We've hit it and we've bounced back a fair bit. As a matter of fact, so everyone can understand what these numbers mean, roughly a $4-billion increase in the taxation level is about a 10% to 11% increase in the rate of taxation. We've taken the rate of taxation up in the province by roughly 10% or 11%.

You would have expected, in normal circumstances, revenue to grow by at least 10% or 11%; in fact, normally you would expect it to grow more than that. But tax revenue has actually dropped. In 1990-91, tax revenue was approximately $33 billion. This year, the year that just ended a few weeks ago, it had dropped by about $2 billion. For three straight years, the level of taxation went up dramatically and for three straight years actually the revenue from taxation had dropped. Something very strange happened. I think an objective viewer would say we have hit the wall.

There are two or three extenuating circumstances around it. We have gone through a period of relatively low inflation and that's hurt revenues; there's no doubt about that. The economy has been slow and weak. As a matter of fact, when our friends say to us, "I hear there's a recovery going on but I don't feel it," the reason we don't feel the recovery is that even at the end of 1994, with some fairly good growth—and most people believe the Ontario economy will grow perhaps 3% or 3.5% this year—the output in the Ontario economy will still be below where it was in 1989. We've seen an increase in the population, an increase in the number of people in the labour force, although not an increase in the people working, but the Ontario economic output is still below where it was in 1989.

So the economy is struggling, and where we see it manifest itself in the most significant terms is in our inability to see jobs created at the rate we need them. I go back to what I said earlier, that in the first three months there are actually some frightening numbers which I hope will not continue, the frightening numbers being that we've actually seen job loss year over year when we should have seen job growth in the 70,000 range or thereabouts.

If you look at the rest of the country, the economy in the rest of the country has grown dramatically better than in Ontario.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Newfoundland?

Mr Phillips: The rest of the country has grown dramatically better than Ontario. The Minister of Transportation is shaking his head, but he knows those are the facts. Job creation has been—

Mr Bisson: No, that is not the case.

Mr Phillips: I always enjoy it when the NDP backbenchers say, "No, that's not the case," because it indicates to me they don't know the facts. If you don't understand that the Ontario economy—the rest of Canada's economy has been growing just fine; not great, but just fine. Ontario's economy has lagged, for the last four years, behind the rest of the country significantly, particularly on job creation.

Mr Bisson: Is that why you called the election in 1990? Is that why you guys cooked the books?

Mr Phillips: The member once again across the way is barking, and I always enjoy this. I wanted, in the last few minutes available to me, to talk a little about some things that have been said earlier here in the Legislature. I'm sure the public must wonder what we spend our time at, each of us blaming each other for things. The public says, "Listen, get on with managing things. Help the economy grow," and we try to give constructive suggestions. I always appreciate my Conservative friends, and I'm glad they're here in the House to hear this.

Hon Mr Pouliot: One friend.

Mr Phillips: I know Mike Harris doesn't like these numbers to seep out, because he would prefer that the Reform Party not hear them, but I looked at the Provincial Auditor's report—I don't think the public have a lot of confidence in what all of us say, but they trust the Provincial Auditor—and what did the Provincial Auditor say about deficits? I know the Conservatives would like to portray themselves as the great money managers. The Provincial Auditor said this: "Ontario has had only one surplus in the last 20 years." This was in 1991. Only one surplus in the last 20 years, the year ending March 31, 1990.

Hon Mr Pouliot: You left us with a $3-billion deficit.

Mr Phillips: The Minister of Transportation is barking. Only one surplus in the last 20 years: What does that mean? It means the Conservatives went 15 straight years never balancing the budget, good times and bad times.

The Minister of Transportation is saying, "Yes, but you left us with a $3-billion deficit." Let me tell you how the auditor explains that, because I'm not sure the Minister of Transportation has ever read the auditor's report. The auditor says this: "There was only one balanced budget in 20 years, the year ending March 31, 1990." As you know, the Liberal government was defeated about five months later.

Then the auditor says, "It was expected that there would be another surplus in the next year." That was the second straight surplus. That's what the auditor said the former Liberal government had promised, and that was true. The actual deficit ended up being $3 billion.

Hon Mr Pouliot: That's why you called the election, because you can't stand—

Mr Phillips: Then the auditor asks, what is the explanation of that? I know Bob Rae thinks we tricked him into winning the election because we knew there would be a $3-billion deficit. But the auditor says here is the explanation. There was a surplus in the year ending March 31, 1990. There was another surplus planned. Then, the auditor says, "The major factors contributing to this variance"—and I want all the people out there to understand, because I know they think all those miserable Liberals left a $3-billion deficit. The auditor said, "The extent of the recession, which was obviously not foreseen at the time of the budget, meant that total revenues were down by approximately $1.1 billion."

1750

Revenues were $1.1 billion lower than had been expected. I say to my business friends, that's about a 2% drop in revenue. I think you can appreciate that when a recession hits like that, that's possible.

He said, the second thing to get to the $3 billion is that total expenditures were up by approximately $1 billion, "with the increase in social assistance payments being the major contributing factor." That's a second thing. Recession hits, revenues drop by $1.1 billion, and expenses went up by $1 billion, heavily social assistance. The NDP may not want to have done that with people who needed help, but that was what was required, approximately $1 billion. That's $2.1 billion of the $3 billion.

The third thing the auditor said is that, "There were special payments made that weren't provided in the budget." What were they? One was $196 million for the teachers' pension fund. That wasn't due in the year it was made. It was due the next year, but the NDP saw that, oh, the deficit wasn't going to be quite high enough and moved a $196-million payment up. The second payment that was made was SkyDome, writing all the SkyDome off. That's fine, $321 million completely written off. That's legitimate. It wasn't planned, but it was completely written off. The third thing was that a loan to the Urban Transportation Development Corp of $400 million was completely written off.

Only one surplus in, now, 25 years. That was the final year the Liberal regime had its full hand on the bank. That's irrefutable. That's not me saying it, that is the auditor. Then the auditor explains in detail how the $3-billion deficit came about. I always get a kick out of my NDP friends who say: "You didn't tell us the recession was coming. You didn't know things were going to be this bad."

Mr Wiseman: Oh, yes you did.

Mr Phillips: Of course we did. Here is exactly what we were predicting, and here is what the NDP said about what the Liberal government was saying. This is what the NDP said: "The Ontario Liberal government has reacted to predictions of an economic slowdown by dropping its Liberal pretence and showing its true Conservative nature. The Liberal government is now spreading the message that 1990 will be a year of fiscal restraint. The Liberal majority on the finance committee agrees with this Conservative philosophy and has recommended a course of restraint."

"The New Democratic Party challenges the defence of the status quo by calling on the government to implement reform policies needed to bring fairness to our society."

My point in raising that was it was clear to those NDP members who were around that we saw the need for restraint. We could see what was coming. We warned the NDP about it, and the NDP, rather than responding to it, said we have dropped our Liberal pretence and shown our true Conservative nature.

I wanted to get those things on the record, Madam Speaker, as we debate an important tax bill.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I notice that the government is incapable of having its members in the House. We don't seem to have a quorum here.

The Acting Speaker: Would the clerk determine if a quorum is present, please.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Questions or comments?

Mr Turnbull: I always enjoy listening to my good friend the member for Scarborough-Agincourt. The last time he made this indictment and discussion about having a balanced budget, the Liberals having the only balanced budget in 25 years, I responded to it. Unfortunately, he'd left the chamber by that time. So I just wanted to put this on the record.

Yes, it's absolutely true, we've had one—

Interjection.

Mr Turnbull: Madam Speaker, I'm in the midst of speaking, and this specimen across the floor is hammering his desk. I find that most objectionable.

The Acting Speaker: I ask and I caution all members that there's a certain decorum that is expected in this House. I ask the members to respect that decorum on all sides of the House. Would you continue, please.

Mr Turnbull: Please do that.

Madam Speaker, I would ask you to reset the clock, instead of allowing somebody to go like this throughout what I'm saying.

The Acting Speaker: I will give you a minute and a half. Please reset the clock.

Mr Turnbull: Thank you. Are you resetting the clock, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker: I said I would give a minute and a half. Please go ahead.

Interjections.

Mr Turnbull: I beg your pardon? I cannot hear a word that you're saying.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I have told the member that he has one minute and 30 seconds.

Mr Turnbull: Thank you. There's only one balanced budget that has occurred in the last 25 years, and everybody who has been involved with any government that has racked up deficits should be ashamed. I've said this before, and that applies to all political parties.

The year that the Liberals in fact had a balanced budget, they had budgeted a deficit. They had budgeted a deficit of $550 million. They got an unanticipated $888 million from the federal government because the economy was booming and they hadn't estimated they'd get much. At the end of that, you should say, they should then have had $338 million surplus. Instead they showed $90 million surplus. In other words, had they not been bailed out by the feds, they would have been even deeper in the hole than they had budgeted.

We've got to start having fiscally responsible government that understands that every deficit is deferred taxes, which we're putting on the backs of our children and our grandchildren. This is not a partisan statement. Every single party has got to wake up to the fact. If we're going to spend money, spend our own, don't spend our children's future, and that's what we're doing.

That's what I would say to my friend the member for Scarborough-Agincourt. Be honest with the people. Tell the people that you didn't anticipate making a surplus, it was just a fluke. You got some money from the feds.

The Acting Speaker: We have time for one more question or comment.

Mr Sutherland: It was very interesting listening to the member for Scarborough-Agincourt, because he had to go into such a great defence about them having a balanced budget in the year 1989. But what the member for Scarborough-Agincourt doesn't want to do is to compare apples and apples, he wants to compare apples and oranges.

He didn't talk about how much more of a large revenue base they had. He didn't talk about how much the revenues increased that year, which I believe was in the double-digit figures, over 10% increases in revenues. Heck, anyone could balance the budget doing that.

Then he goes into the justification as to why we ended up with a $3-billion deficit by the end of the 1990-91 year. He talks about increases in social assistance costs. He talks about all those things that contributed to that, the downturn in the economy.

He's willing to give credit during that year in terms of the 1991 year and why it got up to that. He won't admit that we had an even more dramatic impact and more people went on social assistance in 1991. He won't admit that the revenues actually declined—declined—for the first time since the 1930s. He doesn't want to admit that fact in terms of understanding the different situation.

There's no doubt the 1990s are different. There's no doubt during the Liberals' time, they had the glory days.

No doubt about it. Unemployment was low. Revenue was coming in throughout their ears, and they increased taxes galore. Unfortunately, they weren't doing much planning for the future.

When we came into government, we came in at a very difficult time and we had to deal with the difficult things. We had to deal with the impact of free trade. We had to deal with the impact that they hadn't managed the health care system and it was increasing 10% a year. We had to deal with the things that they avoided, that they didn't deal with.

For him to say, "Oh, we were so great because we had a balanced budget," I say anyone could've done it. Who can manage in tough times? That's what this government is doing.

The Acting Speaker: Being six o'clock, this debate will resume at a further date. This House now stands adjourned until Tuesday at 1:30.

The House adjourned at 1801.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): I have become convinced that this NDP government is not committed to employment equity, to employment equity that provides fair access to employment, training and promotion. This NDP government had four years to bring about legislation and regulation that would be fair to all regardless of race, sex, age, nationality or religion. The NDP government has failed miserably.

Royal assent was given to this inadequate compromise bill almost five months ago, and still the final draft of the regulation is yet to be presented for the legislation for proclamation.

Furthermore, it is evident that this government is unable to handle this issue adequately. Recently we have seen the Attorney General completely mishandle a situation here, forcing 90 people, mostly war veterans, out of their part-time jobs. After pressure, she has reverted to get 19 back into the job. The minister responsible for Management Board had to withdraw his controversial direction, in advertising for a vacant position, that white males may not apply.

This government has done more harm than good towards employment equity, and we hope they can get their act together and bring forth a proper bill.

FESTIVAL OF THE MAPLES

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): As the end of the maple syrup season is upon us, the fun is set to begin in Ontario's maple syrup capital, Lanark county. I invite all members, families and friends to come celebrate the 1994 Festival of the Maples this Saturday, April 30, in Perth.

This annual event features many forms of entertainment, both on stage and in the streets. This year the Festival of the Maples is placing a special emphasis on entertainment and activities for children. Kids can enjoy the Ferris wheel, boat rides, a petting zoo, a magic show and much more.

Events for all ages will include a pancake breakfast, display booths, barbecues, music, dancing, chainsaw competitions, trolley-car rides and a vintage car display.

The more competitive participants are encouraged to take a sap bucket and spile in hand and become competitors in the maple olympics in the afternoon.

I extend many thanks and best wishes to the Perth Chamber of Commerce for coordinating this event, and to the Lanark county maple syrup producers for their sponsorship.

Last year's festival drew close to 10,000 visitors, and with anticipation of an even greater turnout this year, I am sure that this festival will help us preserve the rich maple syrup heritage of Lanark county.

DENISE HOUSE

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): Today Denise House marks 10 years of helping abused women and their children in Durham region.

They began as a 10-bed refuge called Auberge in Oshawa and they helped women like Maria. Maria showed up for work on Monday, as usual. This time a bruised cheek was barely visible under her makeup. "I fell in the shower" was her only explanation, and she lied. This was not the first time she had covered the truth and a bruise. There had been many other times.

Maria was like 200 other women who came to Denise House last year fleeing from violence in their homes. Thanks to the care and the counselling available at Denise House, these women were able to make necessary choices about their future.

Unfortunately, an event in December 1989 reminds us of the tragic consequences of family violence. A former resident of this refuge, Denise Penny, was murdered by her husband in plain sight of her three-year-old daughter. It was to honour her memory that the shelter is now called Denise House.

The children who come to Denise House also receive help because their behaviour and attitudes are frequently warped by the violence in their homes.

Denise House is a sign of hope in our community. It provides an outstanding example of women helping women and their children in crisis situations.

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr Robert Chiarelli (Ottawa West): Early last year, Bob Rae cancelled funding for the southern portion of Highway 416, funding which had been allocated by the previous Liberal government. Five weeks later, Premier Rae announced an increased multibillion-dollar allocation of funds to build subways and highways in the Toronto area. There is no question eastern Ontario's funding allocation was diverted to Metro Toronto.

If that was not bad enough for eastern Ontario, the government is now making matters worse. It established a new transportation capital corporation to work with the private sector to build roads, and what does the government do? It called a request for proposals with the private sector to accelerate the joint venture construction of Highway 407 around Toronto, yet there is no request for proposals on the horizon to create Highway 416 using the new capital corporation.

First the government cancels existing funding to build Highway 416, and then under its new transportation capital corporation is doing nothing to accelerate Highway 416. Will the Premier please immediately prepare a request for proposals to complete Highway 416 or tell the people of eastern Ontario why not?

The minister for eastern Ontario, Evelyn Gigantes, is sitting here today and she is not giving any answers to the people of eastern Ontario. Where is Highway 416 going? Tell us now, Minister.

ANNIVERSARY OF CHERNOBYL DISASTER

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington South): Today marks the eighth tragic anniversary of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster in 1986 in Ukraine. Countless thousands of people were directly impacted by the reactor explosions resulting in death and crippling disease in the aftermath of the nuclear fallout and increased levels of radiation.

I was privileged to have here in my Queen's Park office a legislative intern on an exchange program from Kiev, Ukraine, who witnessed the immediate events of that fateful day. As he related: "A woman working in our office returned from lunch-break with a very red face. We all joked about it. Two others went to wade in a public pool and came back with the same red condition. These people are dead today. We had no idea."

For the thousands of children who continue to suffer from cancer and other radiation-related illnesses, Chernobyl is more than a bad memory; it is a nightmare that won't go away. For them, it is a struggle they must face every day and a challenge that we must continue to help them overcome.

The city of Toronto has proclaimed today Children of Chernobyl Day and a special candlelight memorial service will take place at 7:30 pm at High Park. The service is sponsored by Toronto's Ukrainian Canadian community and the Children of Chernobyl Canadian Fund.

Today is a day of remembrance, but also a time to reflect on how much we in the west may still do to help alleviate the ongoing experience of suffering of the children of Chernobyl. The world has adopted them as its very own, and we in Ontario can do no less.

MEDIA VIOLENCE AWARENESS WEEK

Mr David Winninger (London South): I rise in the House today in recognition of April 24 to 30 as Media Violence Awareness Week in London.

The awareness week program was initiated by Dr Peter Jaffe, the executive director of the London Family Court Clinic. It is significant to note that this is the first time any city in Canada has observed a Media Violence Awareness Week.

There are a number of goals, goals that could be seen as steps, for this week.

Increased awareness that an enormous level of violence comes into the average home every day through the media is the first step to taking action.

Parents are encouraged to monitor and consider the effect media violence has on their children. Dr Jaffe observes that children are vulnerable to violent images and that repeated exposure to acts of violence can have a desensitizing effect.

Once parents appreciate the effect media violence can have on their children, they can then take that important third step to action. The action may be as simple as shutting off the television or as complex as creating alternatives to a culture of violence.

We see that three steps—awareness, understanding and action—begin to address the problem of media violence.

I laud this bold initiative on the part of Dr Peter Jaffe in establishing this week as Media Violence Awareness Week in London, and I hope this will be a giant step that will be emulated across the country.

EVA'S PLACE

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Oriole): On April 20, I had the opportunity to attend the opening of Eva's Place. Eva's Place is a shelter for homeless youth in the city of North York, located at Leslie and Highway 401, just south of my riding of Oriole.

On that day, the mayor, the city of North York, members of council, Metro members, members of the board of education and MPPs were all there in support of Eva's Place.

Paul Molitor, MVP of the Toronto Blue Jays, was there and donated his MVP van to Eva's Place. It was truly a very special moment.

The mission statement of Eva's Place is that it is providing a safe haven for youth who are unable to live at home for many reasons, including physical and mental abuse.

Eva's Place has been named after a very special person. Eva Smith was a remarkable community activist in the city of North York. I met her for the first time when I was an alderman, back in the late 1970s.

Eva could not be at the opening of Eva's Place. Unfortunately, she passed away just a few months ago. But her family was there, filled with pride, because Eva's Place is a reality and a very important part of the city of North York.

I want to say what a thrill it was to be there. I congratulate the city of North York and particularly would like to mention Nora Spink and Jim Coombs and the board, who have been active in seeing that Eva's Place became a reality.

CAMPING FEES

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): My statement is for the Minister of Natural Resources. Minister, Coldwater area residents Roger White, a Rover adviser, and his wife, Kathy, a Venture adviser for the 9th Orillia, have informed me that you have sunk to a new low by reaching into the pockets of such groups as Scouts Canada.

Your new fee structure for the use of provincial park group campsites includes a fee of $1 per night per youth, $2 per adult per night, an additional $14 per campsite and a further $6 per booking reservation fee.

Minister, you simply cannot justify imposing this youth tax on scouts who draw their membership from rural Ontario and the urban neighbourhoods. You may not think this tax on youth on the surface is exorbitant, but Scouts Canada and I think it's totally unacceptable and outrageous. It will add significantly to the budget of a weekend camp. I cannot believe the income from this outrageous tax grab will provide a dramatic increase in your ministry's revenues. I do believe the loss to the youth of Ontario and to our provincial community will be substantial.

Scouts Canada makes every attempt to conserve its funds, since virtually all of its operations must be paid for by parents or through fund-raising events like tree planting and apple sales. Minister, scouts will have to sell an orchard full of apples to come anywhere close to covering the cost of your new youth tax, and I think you've reached back—it's outrageous and unacceptable. Shame on you.

EVENTS IN DURHAM WEST

Mr Jim Wiseman (Durham West): I'd like to draw the attention of this Legislature to three events that I participated in over the last little while.

Last week, I went to the Ontario Public School Boards Association where they unveiled their trash tally, which is an auditing process where they go into the schools and do an audit and then do a comparison on how much trash they've reduced. This event took place in the wonderful town of Newcastle, which is in the Northumberland-Clarington board. The young people in that school are the real heroes of this story, because they were able to reduce the cost of taking care of their trash by almost $800 over one year. So I applaud them for that and I applaud the Northumberland-Clarington board for participating in that.

The second presentation was at the Adult Learning Centre in the Durham board, where a number of middle-aged people were involved and handed out scrolls. While I was leaving on Earth Day, outside were a number of young people who were cleaning up the environment. I'd particularly like to mention Peter Fawcett and Fred Parrot who were involved in that.

Just yesterday morning, I was at Duffin's Bay Public School in my riding where I was able to give an Environmental Bill of Rights poster to the class. I was also able to participate and watch the wonderful activities of these young people displaying their talents and being rewarded by the administration for everything from playing the piano to the basketball and wrestling teams that had done so well.

I congratulate all of these and all the teachers involved in all of these events.

POLICE SERVICES

Mr Peter North (Elgin): Today, I'd like to bring to the attention of all members of this House a rather difficult problem in rural Ontario. We have over the last short while been experiencing extreme difficulties with regard to rural policing.

We have in the west end of the riding the area of Rodney, and a friend I know named Frank Deeley has brought to my attention the very difficult things that have happened there recently, most recently problems on their main street which they could not actually get an officer to come and deal with.

In the area of Dutton, where at one point we had 28 officers from the OPP, we now have six. In North Yarmouth, we had more than 16 incidents happen in a three-month period, where people were breaking into homes at all hours of the day and night. Parents were afraid to work their shifts for fear that there might be a problem with their families over the course of the evening or into the night.

We also have had extreme difficulties in the east end of the riding with regard to an area named New Sarum, where we had over a dozen break-ins in the same business in the span of a year.

It is a problem that I'd like to bring to the minister's attention. I'd like to bring it to all members' attention. It is an extreme problem that I hope we can have this minister, this government and all members of the House deal with. Rural Ontario certainly needs its policing. It needs it every bit as much as urban Ontario does, and we hope that in the future we'll get that attention, the same attention as other parts of the province get.

VISITOR

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I invite all members to join me in welcoming to our chamber, and seated in the members' gallery west, the former member for Halton North, Mr Walt Elliot. Welcome.

ORAL QUESTIONS

PUBLIC SAFETY

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): My first question is to the Solicitor General. It's almost three weeks ago that my leader stood in this House and called upon the government and all members of the Legislature to begin serious work on a response from the government and the Legislature to the growing concern in communities large and small, rural and urban, north, south, east and west in this province about issues around safety and security in their communities. At the time, Minister, you indicated an interest. Well, nearly three weeks have passed since that exchange on April 7.

My question to you today, Minister: What can you tell the Legislature and the people of Ontario as to your plan and the plan of your government to deal with a rising tide of concern about safety and security in Ontario today?

Hon David Christopherson (Solicitor General): I appreciate the opportunity to comment on the issue. To the direct question that was in there with regard to the offer by his leader to commence discussions, that's under way. We're having those discussions, depending on what day it is—they're kind of up and down, but they're still proceeding, and we are trying to find a way in which there can be all-party agreement to move forward with discussions that has the support and the buy-in from everyone in this place, which, as I recall, was indeed the tenor and the tone of the suggestion made by his leader on that day.

I might also point out that this weekend, for instance, the Crime Prevention Ontario organization is sponsoring a symposium on community crime prevention which I believe will go a long way to assisting us in developing the kind of Ontario positions we need to fit in with the federal responses, recognizing, as he has or his leader has in the House, and the leader of the third party, that many of the areas we're talking about here, particularly areas of the Criminal Code, are indeed the jurisdiction of the federal government. That is not to pass the buck but to acknowledge the realities of the jurisdictional setup and to also indicate to him that we are responding very seriously and taking actions at the provincial level where we can.

Mr Conway: The difficulty that the people of Ontario have is that they hear these commitments from the government to in general terms move forward, but to date we are not seeing any kind of leadership from the Solicitor General. We are not seeing any specific action plan from the minister responsible for the Solicitor General's department or the minister of justice or anyone else in the government.

The difficulty is that in the last two or three weeks there is more and more evidence across the province. Last weekend there was a brutal murder of a young boy in Chatham, Ontario. Last night, we are told by the morning press, a 38-year-old woman was sexually assaulted and robbed at knife-point in her downtown Toronto hotel. The trouble is that these kinds of stories are appearing all across the province, not just in Metro but in Chatham, in all kinds of communities large and small.

The people of Ontario want to know, what do you propose to do, when do you propose to do it, and how do you propose to put before the people of Ontario and their Legislature an action plan to allay growing public concern on this vital issue of the public interest?

Hon Mr Christopherson: Let me say very directly to the honourable member that everyone in this House has acknowledged that all levels of government have a certain responsibility in this matter.

I believe if we look at what Metro Toronto is doing as a local government, other initiatives across the province, us in this place here and the federal government, there is a concerted attempt to respond in a coordinated way, which I might add was clearly supported and enunciated by all the members in this House, at least as I've heard them ask the questions, in recognizing that there is no one single solution.

I don't think I heard in the member's question the implication that had some level of government taken a single course of action, any of the incidents he's discussed or raised here would not have happened. The reality is that we have systemic difficulties, we have social difficulties which no one can respond to individually. We are, however, taking a leadership role in an area that's not primarily the responsibility of the province. But this government has taken a leadership role—

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Christopherson: —in Canada on the issue of gun control, which as one piece of the issue is an important one. Our Attorney General has taken a leadership role on the use of the dangerous offender application, as stated by the federal attorney general that if other provinces—

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude his response.

Hon Mr Christopherson: —did the same as the Ontario AG, there wouldn't be a need for him to look at the change in legislation.

Indeed, we're also, as I said earlier, responding to the initiatives mentioned by members of the opposition and I—

The Speaker: The question's been answered. Would the minister please take his seat. Final supplementary.

Mr Conway: Can the minister today outline a timetable as to how and when he is going to proceed on issues that fall within the provincial jurisdiction? We all understand that local and national governments have responsibilities as well, but days ago I, on behalf of my colleagues, indicated that there were some things we could do provincially, like tighter control on the retail of ammunition, like having the minister of justice for Ontario direct provincial crowns that there shall be no plea bargaining around gun-related offences, like ensuring that there is tougher sentencing for people convicted of the commission of violent crimes, particularly involving firearms.

My question remains, Minister: Can you give the Legislature and the province today a more detailed timetable as to how, when and where you intend, as a government, to act in this provincial jurisdiction?

Hon Mr Christopherson: Let me deal with two issues that the honourable member raised, one of them specifically on the issue of the ammunition. I've already indicated that we responded to that, and I think in a very positive fashion, in exactly the way that his leader asked and hoped for us to respond. That is a matter still for discussion by the House leaders, and I'm still very hopeful that there will be agreement on the part of all three parties in this place to deal with that in a non-partisan way, so that if there is action we could take at the provincial level, we indeed do so and have the support of all the members here.

In terms of directives to crowns and to others regarding plea bargaining and sentencing, I would defer to the AG to give specifics, but I do know that many of those actions have already happened.

There are a number of initiatives under way in this province, not the least of which are the support and sponsorship by this ministry of Crime Prevention Ontario and the work that they do; the coordinated effort that we have with policing services to provide standards of policing, to assist them in doing their job and ensuring we do it right across the whole province; the funding of rape crisis centres and sexual assault centres. There is a whole host of initiatives.

But to answer the question in a positive way and to be very upfront with the member, many of the issues, as he has said, are in the federal domain. My officials are talking with the federal officials, as are the AGs. We're expecting a package from them to provide—

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Christopherson: —the leadership that they should, and when that happens, we will respond swiftly and effectively.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): A new question to the Minister of Housing, and it concerns supportive housing. The plot thickens; the swamp deepens.

In recent hours, I have received new information about another Metropolitan Toronto not-for-profit supportive housing group; very interesting material. I have in my hand new information: an audit done by the Ontario Ministry of Housing of this second group, the Supportive Housing Coalition of Metro Toronto, a community-based, not-for-profit group providing housing services to the community since 1982.

This audit was completed in March 1992, and it says some very interesting things. It finds a whole host of indefensible and inappropriate behaviours, very sloppy accounting practices, untendered contracts, and a very interesting pattern of undeclared conflicts of interest, to name but three of the audit's findings.

Is the minister aware of this audit, and what specifically has she done about its findings?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): Indeed, I am aware of the audit. It was made available yesterday at the same time as we released the report of the audit concerning Houselink, which has so fascinated members of the Liberal opposition.

We have a new policy in the Ministry of Housing. In the past in the Ministry of Housing, internal reports of this nature which reviewed the contract obligations by the ministry and by partners in the community were not released to the public. That policy has changed as of my decision to release the Houselink report, and the release of the report to which he refers, the Supportive Housing Coalition report, is evidence of that new policy.

So indeed, I am aware of it, and indeed, the ministry has been working, as it did with Houselink, to make sure that those problems discovered by the audit are problems which are addressed by ministry administration monitoring and working with the community-based group.

Mr Conway: I challenge the minister. My information is that this audit was not released by her yesterday, that this was leaked, not released. But I want to be clear that this audit paints exactly the same kind of picture as we saw at Houselink. This is a detailed account of maladministration, misappropriation, untendered contracts involving substantial public moneys, and perhaps most importantly, let me read just this one line, the auditors found in 1992 that there were "undeclared conflicts of interest where two board members were also lawyers of the firm retained by the Supportive Housing Coalition."

Sound familiar? "One has resigned but the other continues to serve in a non-voting yet very influential capacity as treasurer." The report goes on to suggest, to indicate, to recommend in March 1992 that no new allocations be given to this group until they've cleaned up their act of these several and serious sins of maladministration.

Can you confirm, Minister, that no new allocations have in fact been given since this audit was completed in the spring of 1992 to this Supportive Housing Coalition, mindful of the fact that just a few months ago, in March of this year, you had to write off millions of dollars' worth of government obligations—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the member conclude his question.

Mr Conway: —to this band of incompetents? Can you confirm that?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The member goes a little far in his language. The Supportive Housing Coalition has served people in the Toronto community very well for very many years. I can certainly understand the Liberal urge to attack on these questions because these were problems which of course arose during the Liberal administration, and a good defence is always a foaming-mouth offence, is it not?

But I would like to indicate to the member that my colleague and I, the Minister of Health, having considered the issues which were brought forward around the audits of both Houselink and the Supportive Housing Coalition, are quite prepared to see all these matters discussed by members of the Legislature working in the public accounts committee.

Mr Conway: I'm sure the House will be happy to know, mindful of the minister's last response, that over these past several years the executive director of the Supportive Housing Coalition was none other than Mr David White, a very prominent, well-known city of Toronto New Democrat.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): No? David White, who sat on Toronto council for how many years? Not that David White? I'm shocked.

Mr Conway: David White, a very prominent New Democrat. I just want to put that on the record.

Let me just say to the minister that those of us who support supportive housing always expected that it would mean something more than supporting a bunch of out-of-work New Democrats who are just finding a new way to fasten on to the public trough.

This report, Minister, like the report yesterday, represents a damning indictment of how millions of dollars of public money have been poorly, incompetently and inappropriately handled in this province by this sector. Given what that audit says about the Supportive Housing Coalition and what we've found in the earlier audit about Houselink—

The Speaker: Could the member place a question, please.

Mr Conway: —will you today commit to refer these audits immediately to the public accounts committee so there can be an in-depth analysis of what went wrong here and so that we can look and see what, if anything, you have done to clean up this costly mess?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Mr Speaker, why can't he take yes for an answer when I give it before he asks the question? Why can't he?

If the members opposite in the former Liberal government were so concerned about dealing with all these terrible NDP people who associated themselves with community-based work in supportive housing, why did they provide allocations to the groups and why did they allow all this to continue for such a long period of time? These are questions which I'm sure will interest all the members of the public accounts committee, and I look forward to that.

The Speaker: New question, third party.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): My question is to the Premier, because I want to give the Premier the opportunity to respond to the growing rot at Houselink.

Last week, Premier, when the Toronto Star uncovered an audit at the Ministry of Health, at no time did your Minister of Housing speak up and admit that her ministry had also done an audit. In fact, today, Premier, in response to the last question, your minister is now boasting that she released the audit, when in fact it was not released voluntarily by your ministry but was leaked by people in your ministry.

With regard to Houselink, Premier, we now have two separate audits from two separate ministries with two catalogues of mismanagement, wrongdoing and potential corruption. Premier, to restore the integrity of your government, a subject that you have spoken about loudly and often, is it not time for you to step in—and we're calling on you to step in today—and to undertake a complete investigation of Houselink and the other audit that was brought forward today? Premier, will you give that commitment to this House, that you will step in personally and do a complete review of these scandals?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I'm going to refer that matter to the Minister of Housing.

Hon Ms Gigantes: As I've indicated, the release of the audit on the Supportive Housing Coalition was done voluntarily by me. When I learned last week that there had been a request under freedom of information for a copy of the report done about Houselink and that it had been turned down, I asked why and I asked for a review of that decision. In the course of that review, I became aware of a second report of the same nature done about the Supportive Housing Coalition, and that one too was released yesterday.

We are quite of one mind, my colleague the Minister of Health and I, that there shall be an investigation of all the matters that concern members on all sides of the House at the public accounts committee, and we look forward to working with members of the opposition in that process.

Mr Jim Wilson: There's something very fishy going on around here. I can understand that if the Liberals were still in government, they'd want to cover up the Houselink affair. What I can't understand is why the Premier of this province, the NDP Premier of this province, won't answer questions about the Houselink scandal. I don't understand that. There's something very, very fishy going on.

My question to the Premier—to the minister, I guess, because the Premier won't answer: Minister, we have a litany of unanswered questions. Who went to Berlin with Lea Caragata, and why did they go? What is the involvement of your friend Robin Sears's mother? Why is the husband of the Minister of Health's chief of staff—

Interruption.

The Speaker: Stop the clock. Order.

1410

If the member has got his share of the money, then I believe he's about to ask his supplementary.

Mr Jim Wilson: Clearly, the public is extremely concerned about the scandal at Houselink. They're yelling from the galleries.

Minister, we have a litany of unanswered questions. I want to know, for example, why the husband of the Minister of Health's chief of staff is the lawyer for Houselink. Specifically—this question was to the Premier—why did it take the press and the opposition to uncover this whole smelly affair? Minister, after an entire week, do you have any answers to these questions I've posed?

Hon Ms Gigantes: I think the member is mistaken. He says there's something fishy, but the fact is that he's just gone fishing and therefore he thinks there's something fishy. Those things don't necessarily follow one on the other.

There are all kinds of suggestions and murmurs and questions: Who's related to whom, who's travelled where, how much did an old piece of furniture cost, and so on? We're looking forward to discussing these things in context, where there will be a chronological framework on the discussion and where it will be clear what actions have been taken, both in the Ministry of Health and in the Ministry of Housing, to ensure that the working relationship with both the Supportive Housing Coalition, in the case of Housing, and with Houselink, in the cases of both Housing and Health, is a straightforward one which is fully, publicly accountable.

Mr Jim Wilson: There's one burning question in this scandal: Why did it take almost four years for this government to respond to this issue, and why did it take not voluntary compliance, Minister and Premier, but inquiries from the press gallery to obtain the audits so we know what actually is going on with taxpayers' money with respect to the non-profit housing sector? I have a couple of more questions for you.

Yesterday in the House, you told us in response to a question that you hadn't extensively reviewed the audit by your ministry, yet minutes later, outside the House, you said you saw no evidence of criminal wrongdoing. Not having reviewed the audit, she concluded there was no evidence of criminal wrongdoing.

To the best of our knowledge, the police have not been called in on this affair. With a government that calls in the police every time there's a leaked cabinet document, I find it more than passing strange that the police were not called in to investigate this scandal.

Minister, I ask why the police were not called in. I also want you to answer to this House, how many audits of non-profit and co-op housing projects have been done by your ministry and/or the Ministry of Health? Third, when we review the non-profit housing sector, we find the names of contractors, lawyers, architects and non-profit groups appearing over and over again. Minister, on behalf of your government, will you expand the inquiry into all non-profit groups and non-profit housing so we can have a full inquiry on how the taxpayers' dollars are being spent in this province?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The public accounts committee will no doubt discuss the framework in which it wants to operate. What my colleague and I have determined is that we agree that public accounts should feel that the matter of Houselink, the relationship with the Supportive Housing Coalition, is one which we're quite agreeable to have examined by the committee.

I should also point out that the proportions of nonsense in terms of accusations and attempted smears and so on going on out of opposition benches really boggle the mind. I understand from a well-informed source working in my office that the David White referred to in some—no, I'm wrong.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Oh, you'd better watch out. Ruth said no.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Okay. There, I'm wrong. There is no end to the kind of speculation that's being generated on the basis of no good information, and I wish members would say: "Yes, we've got a piece of work to do. Let's settle down and do it." We're quite happy to help in that process.

The Speaker: New question; the honourable member for Etobicoke West.

Mr Stockwell: What was that about David White, Madam Minister?

The Speaker: To whom is your question directed?

Mr Stockwell: I've got to get this clear: the well-informed source. David White—

The Speaker: Would the member take his seat, please.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Etobicoke West.
GO TRANSIT

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I will ask my question to David White, the city of Toronto alderman—no. I will go to the Minister of Finance, who is not here, so in lieu of that, I'll go to the Premier.

Mr Premier, could you confirm that as part of the GO Transit sale and leaseback transaction the provincial government asked the federal government to waive its 15% withholding tax? Could you advise the House about the status of that request and whether in fact anyone had to pay the withholding tax at all.

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I'm going to have to take that question as notice and refer it to the Minister of Finance and ask him to respond.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Supplementary?

Mr Stockwell: Does the Minister of Housing have an informed source on this one, do you think? I guess I'd better get my supplementary on the record, Mr Speaker.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): You may never get on in question period again.

Mr Stockwell: Yes. As I understand it, the $425-million GO deal was closed offshore in Bermuda and involved a transfer from the crown corporation to a company called Asset Finance Bermuda.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): So that's why they all went to Bermuda.

Mr Stockwell: That's right. Now, they went to Bermuda and it was closed with Asset Finance Bermuda. As I understand it, that company immediately, in turn, flipped the assets—you know that word very well, I'm sure—to the ultimate purchaser, who ideally got out of paying the tax because of the flip and the closing in Bermuda.

I would also ask the Premier, would you not agree that we have a case here of an agency of government participating, if in fact this is the case, in an elaborate scheme to avoid literally millions of dollars of Canadian taxes, trying to avoid that through the withholding tax of 15%, if they did flip it in Bermuda and thereby got out of paying the 15% withholding tax?

Hon Mr Rae: Again I'm sure the Minister of Finance would be happy to have a very learned discussion with you on this subject. I think you should probably wait for him to respond.

Mr Stockwell: The problem is I've got another supplementary.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): You're not going to get an answer yet.

Mr Stockwell: No, I don't plan to, but maybe I can put this on the record and when you run into Floyd maybe you can mention this to him.

1420

The last time this House talked about a property flip of this magnitude it was engineered by a couple of people named Player and Rosenberg, as I recall. I recall your party had a nervous breakdown caused by moral indignation over the whole affair.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): They all had a nervous breakdown and a big run on the cash.

Mr Stockwell: Yes. Now we have a crown agency, as I understand it, playing tax avoidance games. When most people in this province don't want to pay our high taxes, they go to Buffalo. It seems you guys go to Bermuda, Mr Premier. Don't you think, Premier, this type of action by a crown agency makes a mockery of all your hand-wringing about cross-border shopping, the underground economy and federal transfer cuts? Isn't it kind of a classic case of you, the Premier, saying to the people, "Do as I say, not as I do"?

Hon Mr Rae: I know the Minister of Finance will want to explain to you, as he has to all of us, and as we have looked at over the years, the principle in place, which is to get the best possible arrangement and deal for the taxpayers of the province. That's an answer I'm sure the minister will have respected.

WCB CHAIR

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): My question is to the Premier, and it's about another soon-to-be-out-of-work New Democrat. I read recently, following your announcement last week of reform at the Worker's Compensation Board, that you are considering appointing the outgoing chair, Mr Odoardo Di Santo, to the liquor board.

During Mr Di Santo's term as chairman of the Workers' Compensation Board, the unfunded liability has grown at a rate of $2 million a day, to reach the unprecedented level of $11.5 billion. The operating loss last year under his stewardship was $74 million—

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): What was it during the Liberal term?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order, the member for Oxford.

Mr Mahoney: —rates to business have skyrocketed by an average of 33% while claims have gone down by 22%, and staff morale is at an all-time low under the leadership of Mr Di Santo.

Will you assure this House that you are not about to appoint the current chair of the WCB, who you are not reappointing to that position—will you assure us you will not transfer him over to the liquor board of Ontario?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): The short answer is no. I can say to the honourable member, and I say without hesitation, that when Mr Di Santo was defeated after being a member of this House for some time, he received a public appointment from the Liberal government of the day. All of us who know Mr Di Santo, and there are many members on all sides of the House who know him, know him to be a man of integrity, of ability and of great compassion. I am very proud of the fact that Mr Di Santo has accepted an appointment at the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario, and I think he's somebody who deserves the respect and recognition of his peers and colleagues in public service, since he is serving the province very well.

Mr Mahoney: Before that answer, it was simply a rumour. Now the Premier has confirmed that Mr Di Santo has taken a position, presumably at your behest, an appointment with the liquor licence board. I just find that incredible, and so do the people of this province.

This was a 10-year NDP member of this Legislature, currently drawing a pension, double-dipping as chairman of the Workers' Compensation Board, who will now simply move into a new position to see what kind of havoc he can wreak on the liquor licence board.

Let me give you some other examples. He has denied that he was responsible for the decision to build the new building in downtown Toronto, contrary to the facts. He delivered a task force on service delivery and vocational rehab, and absolutely nothing was done at the Workers' Compensation Board during his term as the chairman to improve service delivery. Fewer than 10% of the cases at the board drive 90% of the cost of the board. The board is in absolute chaos.

The Speaker: Could the member place a question, please.

Mr Mahoney: Premier, we would ask you to revoke the appointment. Mr Di Santo does not deserve to be appointed by you to another position in the government when he has clearly failed to provide any leadership at the Workers' Compensation Board.

The Speaker: Would the member please conclude his question.

Mr Mahoney: Will you revoke that appointment today?

Hon Mr Rae: No. I can say that given my experiences in politics, I understand that there will be all kinds of personal things said about individuals. I say to the honourable member that I think the way in which you personalized this is most unfair to Mr Di Santo, but I'm sure we'll all survive those attacks and recognize—

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): He was incompetent. A nice guy, but he is incompetent.

The Speaker: Order. The member for York Centre, please come to order.

Hon Mr Rae: —that he is a fine person who continues to deserve the confidence of the people of this province.

Mr George Mammoliti (Yorkview): How does your community feel about what he is saying?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Stop playing ethnic politics.

The Speaker: Would the member for Yorkview please come to order.

Mr Mammoliti: Go ahead, have a chat with them.

Mr Mahoney: Is this an Italian issue? Is that what you're saying?

Mr Mammoliti: You tell me. Is it an Italian question?

The Speaker: The member for Yorkview is asked to come to order.

Mr Mammoliti: We'll let the Italians decide whether it's an Italian issue.

The Speaker: I caution the member for Yorkview that if he refuses to come to order, he will be named.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My question is to the Premier. Recently, your government put the shovel in the ground on an expansion of the Queen Street Mental Health Centre. This expansion will house 20 criminally insane patients. The residents of Parkdale have contacted my office to say they are outraged that their already fragile community is being dumped on yet again by your government without proper consultation. Can you tell these residents why, in all of Ontario, you decided virtually unilaterally that Parkdale should be the home for this facility?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): Mr Speaker, I'll refer this to the Minister of Health.

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I'm glad to have an opportunity to address this question because I know it's one that certainly members on our side and members of the community have been very concerned about. But I have to say to the leader of the third party that the need for medium-security facilities in our psychiatric hospitals has been growing, that Queen Street is a hospital that has been there for a long time and that has had secure units for the evaluation and assessment of people who have been referred by the courts, and that the move to change 20 existing spaces into secure spaces is one that was decided upon as we looked to how we can serve people who need care, who are mentally ill, in their communities.

There are now no medium-security beds in Metropolitan Toronto. The decision or the indication that Queen Street would continue to provide these services was made in a strategic plan that was very publicly discussed within the community last year. I profoundly regret that a number of the elected representatives and community members—that it wasn't made more clear that in fact this was going to be a switch of 20 beds from open beds to medium-secure beds.

Because there is a real concern in the community, I have met with some of the elected representatives locally there. The community advisory board is certainly aware of the concern in the community and I have asked them to see what they can do to meet with community representatives and try and allay some of the concerns people have.

Mr Harris: All I hear from this minister is that you're going to have meetings to try and smoke this through. I don't hear anything about halting construction and making sure there is a proper, open consultation process before this facility proceeds.

You and I know that individuals and families of Parkdale already share their neighbourhood with the current residents of the Queen Street centre, with a parole office, with patients at two treatment centres and with a number of halfway houses. They're saying, "We're prepared to do even more than our share." But without the proper consultation—and you know that had you not had a facility, and you simply with fudge words changed the definition, you could not have proceeded this way in any other neighbourhood in Metropolitan Toronto without having full, public, open hearings as to what was happening.

I am asking you, given that a considerable number of the residents of Parkdale are new Canadians, given that they don't have the same political expertise and clout to fight your decision that other communities and other neighbourhoods have, will you halt construction? Will you proceed with a full and open consultation process on what is fair in Metropolitan Toronto about where this facility should be located?

Hon Mrs Grier: The member describes a facility. The member indicates that this is something dramatically new and an expansion of the Queen Street psychiatric hospital. This is the transformation of 20 units in the hospital into a double-locked, secure, under-surveillance community, of which there already are two floors in the same building that have the same kind of security.

Mr Harris: Into a completely different definition of what it was before, without the hearings.

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): Why didn't you tell us this months ago?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Hon Mrs Grier: I think it is unfortunate that people in the community were not aware that this was in fact part of the change that was going to happen.

Mrs Cunningham: I think it's unfortunate you didn't tell them. That's the problem.

Hon Mrs Grier: I certainly understand that concern and want to do everything I can to share with them—I hope they have visited the facility—

Mrs Cunningham: Just boom along without doing your job. Say, "I'm sorry and I'll fix it."

The Speaker: The member for London North, please come to order.

Hon Mrs Grier: —what in fact is planned, what in fact the security will be, so that they will understand that these are not going to be people who will be in the community. In fact these are people who are going to be much more securely within the hospital than many of the patients who are there now.

DRIVERS' LICENCES

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): My question this afternoon is to the Minister of Transportation, and the question reaches right into the heart of why we're here. We're here to speak up for our constituents.

The question that I want to ask you, Mr Minister, this afternoon is this: One of my constituents has been blind for the last eight years, and he's been on a disability pension for that reason. Suddenly a miracle has happened and he's got his eyesight back. He's absolutely filled with euphoria at entering the workforce again and not being a burden on any of the social nets.

He has given up his pension and has gone to the local licence bureau to obtain a driver's licence that he had for 31 years. He was told at the drivers' bureau that due to the pressures of the testing system, he will be unable to get a licence until 1995. I appeal to you, Mr Minister, for an answer to this, because it's depriving my constituent of making a living, which he dearly wants to do.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): Well, what better news. We're pleased, needless to say, that his eyesight has returned, and you will indeed convey our good wishes.

The person in question, the member advises, has had his driver's licence revoked by virtue of blindness for the last eight years. We have introduced a graduated driver's licence which is made for new people, regardless of age, from 16 upward entering the system, or if your licence, be it in good standing, has lapsed for a period surpassing more than three years. In this case, with the highest of respect, the licence has lapsed for a period exceeding eight years. We have to be strict.

I have 1,100 reasons to favour a graduated driver's licence: 1,100 people who lost their lives on the roads and highways of Ontario last year.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Pouliot: While we sympathize, we have to be rather strict and uniform, although we will be reasonable indeed in our enforcement of graduated drivers' licences.

Mr Mills: Thank you very much, Mr Minister. What I'd like to know and what my constituent would like to know is whether there is any possibility that he can call someone in your office and discuss this further. Because I really think that the circumstances surrounding my constituent are very rare and need some direct assistance. I wonder if you could tell me that.

Hon Mr Pouliot: Let me be direct. This is an action directe question and it requires the same kind of answer. Sorry I'm repetitious, but you have to be strict.

The member mentioned in his original question, in his first question, that a test will not be granted before 1995. We're talking within the confines of the graduated driver's licence. In an emergency, a human dimension extraordinaire issue, a special case or the need to find a job, and you wish to jump the queue under the new graduated driver's licence system, no getting away from it, then we have built in some flexibilities within the system to allow that possibility.

I would like to encourage the member to give us more particulars, for no two cases are the same.

TENDERING PROCESS

Mr Hans Daigeler (Nepean): The Minister of Transportation can just stay on his feet, and I hope his answer will be a little bit more direct than the one he just gave.

Minister, your government has decided to use tolls to build the 407 faster. In other words, you're levying a special tax so that this road can be built faster. Normally, through the annual appropriation process, as you have indicated, it's likely it would take a lot longer, but with this special tax you feel you can build it faster.

The question remains, however, and you've been asked that before, why does the NDP insist on bypassing the proper process of public tendering for the building and maintenance of this project over the next 30 to 35 years, because that will be the length of the contract.

The chosen consortium will not finance the project, which had been the main reason why you limited the bidding process. In view of this fact that this is a public project now, will you separate the toll technology aspect of this road, for which I think some of the consortium members have a special expertise—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member place his question, please.

Mr Daigeler: —from the building and maintenance features so that all roadbuilders in Ontario can properly bid on this project?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): The member opposite is right. As we develop the team for the 407, and the member has mentioned that without the possibility of tolls, without the opportunity afforded to the capital corporation, without that innovative system, it would take—I think you mentioned the year 2025; you're right. We had the choice to wait until we're into our twelfth term of office to complete the road or to do it by the year 2000, six years from now. We chose the latter because it puts people to work and it responds to the 401 being oversubscribed.

There was no problem. Economies of scale are what we have to keep in mind. Both consortia are extremely capable to meet the size of the project. Their financial capabilities are assured. We've already saved $200 million in value engineering. A bigger piece of the pie will ensure that we will save even more—

The Speaker: Would the minister conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Pouliot: —in the future, but we have to go "whole sum." Economies of scale are the driving force, and the innovation of the capital corporation charging tolls to repay the lenders makes it all possible. The users will pay for the 407, and it will happen in a relatively short time of six years for a project worth well over $1 billion, creating well over 20,000 jobs.

Mr Daigeler: Since I do believe the minister is an intelligent person, I can only conclude that he's deliberately sidestepping the real issue here. The issue is not the tolls, the issue is not the savings that he referred to because, frankly, those savings are because he's building less road than was originally planned. The issue is why are a great many of Ontario roadbuilders excluded for the next 30 to 35 years from bidding on one of the biggest construction projects in this province?

I would like to say to the minister in the words of one of those contractors, who so far has been excluded, and he's not part of the consortium, "This immense project will be awarded to a select group and to the disadvantage of both the industry at large and the general taxpayers and motorists of the province."

Minister, the issue is, can you assure me and the taxpayers that their tax money is properly spent and the proper public tendering process will be followed?

Hon Mr Pouliot: With respect, we have to keep in mind that the consortia are made of several companies. Once you get to the subcontracts, you pretty well involve more than 50% of the roadbuilders, of the contractors. Then we have to keep in mind, because we begin to understand in phase 2, Mr Speaker, phase 2 being the infrastructure program, that provincial-municipal-federal entity, that one third of the municipal contract—

Mr Daigeler: What does that have to do with the question?

Hon Mr Pouliot: Let me answer please. You're talking about jobs for contractors, for people who build roads. Well, one third of the submissions have Ministry of Transportation guidelines and contracts attached to it so they'll be building more municipal roads. We're moving on four subway lines. That's transportation money.

Our transfer payments, which will be announced tomorrow, will resemble what was allowed last year, so there's no decrease there. We've been able to preserve our base highway capital program, so there will be more work during the next construction season than ever before, regardless of the difficult times that we've been in. This is good news for the roadbuilders and it's cause for celebration indeed.

POLICE OFFICERS

Mr Charles Harnick (Willowdale): My question is to the Attorney General and it's regarding the special investigations unit. The special investigations unit was audited through your ministry, and the very first recommendation was that the Attorney General is to deal with the issue as to whether police officers must give statements and potentially incriminate themselves.

I know that the report has now been in the minister's hands for many months. I have yet to see any legislation to amend the Police Services Act to clarify this situation, and I wonder if the minister can tell us whether she will be introducing legislation this spring that will clarify whether police officers must incriminate themselves or whether police officers will be given the same protections as all other potentially accused people who might have been involved in a crime.

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): The member may be aware, certainly it was part of our release when we received the audit report, that we had committed ourselves to a six-month process of consultation with police service organizations and with the general community around the findings in the report, and that would include that particular issue. There has been a great deal of discussion between the Solicitor General's ministry, my ministry and the police service organizations around what form of accommodation we could make to clear up some of the investigations that are there that continue to not be resolved because of lack of interviews with police officers, and we have reached some conclusions.

There are still a number of cases in which the investigation has not been able to be completed for that reason, and we remain concerned about that. But we're equally concerned about maintaining the rights of the individual involved, a police officer or not. This is not an issue that we would expect to be giving any kind of legislative solution to this spring.

Mr Harnick: The question is very simple. Are you going to bring in legislation or are you going to continue to let the officers who are now the subject of investigations languish? You know, it's a very simple proposition. You're either going to do something or you're going to do nothing. But you've been studying this issue, which has been in your bailiwick, for over two years. I want to know when we can expect to see legislation and when these officers can find that the dilemma they're in is going to be resolved. Will you tell us?

Hon Mrs Boyd: I did say to the member that we do not anticipate bringing in legislation this spring, that what we are trying to do is reach an agreement about how to deal with the legislation as it now stands, understanding that eventually the legislation will need to be changed.

There are many recommendations in the audit report and in other reports that have been done about changes in the Police Services Act. It seems to us to be not a good use of the time of this Legislature to make one change in the Police Services Act, even if we could resolve that issue satisfactorily to the consensus of all those parties—and we haven't been able to do that yet—when there are many other issues that require further discussion with the police service organizations and with the community.

CAMPING FEES

Mr Gary Wilson (Kingston and The Islands): My question is to the Minister of Natural Resources. Algonquin Park has built its reputation as one of the finest parks in the country by making the experience of Ontario's wilderness accessible to people. My question for you concerns a group of people from my riding for whom that experience could be the experience of a lifetime.

Camp Outlook is a charitable, non-profit organization run by volunteers. Every summer for the past 24 years this group has taken about 120 disadvantaged Kingston-area teenagers on canoe trips into the park, far from their often troubled lives at home.

Recently your ministry announced that for the first time, charitable groups like Camp Outlook will pay a fee to use Algonquin Park. Members of Camp Outlook have told me that the new fee will increase their annual costs by about $4,000. I've also had a petition signed by some 350 people asking that the ministry exempt Camp Outlook from paying the fee.

Minister, could you please tell me if there is some way Camp Outlook can continue to use the park for free to carry on its valuable work with troubled youths?

Hon Howard Hampton (Minister of Natural Resources): It's true that last year when we examined the fee schedules of the provincial parks, we found some situations which are clearly inequitable. We have situations where a number of people in the province are paying full fees, we have other situations where some groups were paying half fees and still other situations where some groups were paying no fees.

It was very hard to find a rationale for the differences, so what we have done, in the interests of an equitable sharing of the costs of running our parks system and in the interests of recognizing the value of the resources we have in our parks system, is reorient the park fee system.

Qualifying youth groups will be asked to pay what amounts to half fees. They are the same fees that senior citizens are asked to pay, and we think we have created a more equitable situation. Everybody must pay to recognize—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the minister please conclude his response.

Hon Mr Hampton: —the value of the resources, but we have recognized the ability to pay as between different groups.

Mr Gary Wilson: Minister, the people at Camp Outlook recently suggested to me that they would be willing to offset the cost of the entrance fee by doing park maintenance on interior trails and campsites. Another possible suggestion to mitigate the effects of this new fee would be to impose it gradually so the group would not have to bear the full weight of the fare immediately. Minister, would you consider either of these options to help this dedicated group continue using the park?

Hon Mr Hampton: There are a couple of options. The reality is that Algonquin Park, along with some of our other larger parks, has a volunteer program. Camp Outlook, which does perform a valuable service, could apply to park officials to be recognized under the volunteer program.

It may also be that for some of the activities that Camp

Outlook wants to carry on, they might be better off to carry on those activities on crown land outside the park. So while half fees will have to be paid, it may be possible for Camp Outlook to work something out with the volunteer program and to use other crown land for some of its activities.

CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST LEGISLATION

Mr Bernard Grandmaitre (Ottawa East): My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. As you know, Mr Minister, conflict-of-interest legislation has been on the mind of every taxpayer and municipal politician in the province. You and your predecessor had promised AMO two years ago that you would introduce such legislation.

I find that if you keep stalling with the legislation, it will be too late for the 1994 municipal elections. If you intend to introduce such legislation, I would like to know what your timetable is all about.

Also, municipal candidates must know well in advance, as you know, Mr Minister, what rules will govern their office before proceeding to run in the upcoming municipal elections. What is your legislative agenda? Will you introduce such legislation?

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I thank the member for an excellent question and I'll be happy to answer his question.

I agree with you that any legislation should be fair and therefore should apply to candidates as well as incumbents. You cannot have legislation in place after the election and therefore have one set of standards for the people who won the election and one for those who did not. I agree fully with that.

I have met with AMO. We've had a committee that has worked with AMO to try to find out what is the best possible course of action, what should be in the open government concept, and I think we're in some agreement. I can assure you that we will be making an announcement fairly soon.

I have assured AMO that, one, we intend to move ahead with open government legislation, and two, that it will be done in such a way that an incumbent or a sitting member of council is not put at a disadvantage compared to a candidate against that person.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I move that Mr Hope and Mr Winninger exchange places in the order of precedence for private members' public business.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

PETITIONS

SALE OF AMMUNITION

Ms Dianne Poole (Eglinton): I have a petition signed by constituents:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas it is imperative that we make our streets safe for law-abiding citizens;

"Whereas any person in Ontario can freely purchase ammunition, even though they do not hold a valid permit to own a firearm;

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen at an alarming rate; and

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Bob Chiarelli's private member's bill, Bill 151, to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario outdoors card."

I have signed this petition in support.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a petition of 19 signatures addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no PC support in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on the administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and future bills which would grant same-sex couples the right to marry, and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

I have affixed my signature to this petition.

LAND-LEASE COMMUNITIES

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I've got a petition here to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 21 has received second reading in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 21 provides needed protection for owners of mobile homes in mobile home trailer parks and owners of modular homes in land-lease communities"—like Sutton-by-the-Lake in my riding—"and

"Whereas many owners of mobile homes are threatened with eviction and loss of their investment in their mobile home by the action of their landlord;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To proceed as expeditiously as possible with third reading of Bill 21."

It's been signed by residents who live on Damsel Circle, Kelsey Crescent, Geneva Court, Roxanna and Hummingbird Circle as well. I affix my name to it.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr John Sola (Mississauga East): I have a petition here from Christ Our King Lutheran Church in Mississauga.

"To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and may include sadomasochism, paedophilia, bestiality etc, and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all such references should be removed from the code."

It's signed by 73 members of Mississauga.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming): "Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"I/We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the minister the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I have signed this petition.

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario which is identical to the one which has just been presented and which is signed by over 300 people from different communities throughout Ontario.

HOUSING LEGISLATION

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): I have a petition that comes from the residents and family members of the Bearbrook Court Retirement Residence: "We are consumers who will be directly affected by Bill 120." Instead of reading the whole petition, in respect for my colleagues I will keep it short. I will sign this document and I am also opposed to it.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Chris Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): "Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course."

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have a number of petitions.

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the cost of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I shall sign this petition.

LANDFILL

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have a petition from a number of constituents in King City. It's addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the recent announcement by the NDP government to choose three superdumps within the greater Toronto area has disturbed and upset local residents; and

"Whereas these superdumps might have been prevented if Bill 143 had allowed the Interim Waste Authority to look at all alternatives during the site selection process; and

"Whereas we would like to ensure the province of Ontario is making the best decision based on all the facts regarding incineration and long rail-haul and garbage management;

"We demand that the NDP government of Ontario repeal Bill 143, disband the IWA and place a moratorium on the process of finding a landfill to serve all of the greater Toronto area until all alternatives can be properly studied and debated."

I support this petition and I have signed it.

SOCIAL CONTRACT

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 48, with its provision for an increment grid freeze, creates wide discrepancies in education sector salary losses required to meet the savings target of the social contract; and

"Whereas Bill 48 unfairly penalizes younger, less financially secure members of the teaching profession, as well as their senior colleagues nearing retirement, for many years beyond the purported three-year commitment required by the social contract; and

"Whereas Bill 48 implicitly undervalues the contributions of female teachers who, having left teaching for years in order to raise children at home, now find themselves caught on the grid with relatively low, frozen salaries upon resuming interrupted careers; and

"Whereas Bill 48, with its arbitrary suspension of terms of collective agreements arrived at in good faith, contravenes the long-espoused belief by the New Democratic Party that the collective bargaining process is a sacred and fundamental cornerstone of democracy;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That, without delay, the Legislative Assembly vote to rescind Bill 48, and thereby free up negotiated salaries that help to stimulate renewed consumer confidence in spending; the result in economic growth should help to save precious public sector jobs and services."

I support this and will affix my signature.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): I have a petition from 37 people in my riding in the Campbellford area. It's a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex,' drastically redefining the family as we know it.

"Whereas Bill 55 will make it illegal for people to make any public statement, written or oral, which ridicules, demeans or discriminates against a person on the grounds of sexual orientation, threatening free speech in a democratic society and the freedom of religion for historical Christianity, which does not condone homosexuality;

"Whereas Bill 58 will allow legal actions to be launched against any person or organization that promotes hatred or the superiority or inferiority of a person or class of persons;

"Whereas we believe that Bills 45, 55 and 58 will cause an enormous negative impact on our society over the long term because of the redefinition of fundamental institutions of marriage and family;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the House refrain from passing Bill 45, Bill 55 and Bill 58 and that 'sexual orientation' not be added to the Ontario Human Rights Code."

CASINO GAMBLING

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): "Whereas the government of Ontario has permitted the construction of a casino gambling establishment in the city of Windsor, citing as reasons the attempt to assist border communities hit hard by cross-border shopping, free trade and the proliferation of gambling casinos in surrounding provinces and the border states; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has further indicated its intention to permit the establishment of a second casino in the province by a first nation of Ontario; and

"Whereas the United Chiefs and Councils of Manitoulin on Manitoulin Island has publicly declared that it would like to see the first native casino in the province built on Manitoulin Island; and

"Whereas many Christian denominations across Canada have taken the lead in opposing legalized gambling in all its forms, including lotteries and casinos, calling it a regressive tax on the poor and a magnet for criminal activities and warning of the selfishness of gambling; and

"Whereas many church ministers in Windsor, where the first provincially sanctioned casino is slated to open some time in 1995, fear that the opening of this casino will lead to gambling addictions and related family and social problems, requiring them to meet the social needs of gamblers and their families; and

"Whereas Manitoulin Island is already known to have a higher rate of social and health problems than the provincial average, including a rapidly increasing crime rate for its population size, especially in the areas of spousal and family abuse brought about, in part, by alcohol-related problems and poverty, both of which could be exacerbated by the establishment of a gambling casino, the premise of which is to make winners of a few at the expense of the majority of losers;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, respectfully ask the government of Ontario to reconsider the establishment of gambling casinos anywhere in the province, and that the government of Ontario turn down the request by the UCCM to build a casino on Manitoulin Island."

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): I have a petition addressed to Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, sponsored by the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters.

Basically, it has asked that the "undersigned petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario" to change their plans and "grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I have attached my signature to this petition.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): To the Legislative Assembly:

"Whereas the government of Ontario has stated that multiservice agencies, the new single, local point of access for long-term care and support services, must purchase 90% of their homemaking and professional services from not-for-profit providers, therefore virtually eliminating use of commercial providers;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We protest the action to drastically reduce the service provision by commercial providers and respectfully request that the impact of this policy decision, including a cost study, be performed before any further implementation."

I have attached my signature to that.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, just before we proceed with the moving of third reading of the bill, I believe we've reached an agreement among the House leaders that the parliamentary assistant will move third reading and speak for two minutes, that the member for Ottawa Centre will speak for an additional five minutes and that then the two opposition parties will split the remaining time in the hour that's set out in the time allocation motion.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Is it agreed? Agreed.

I would just like to remind you that we are proceeding following the order of the House dated April 7, 1994, which states that one hour be allotted to the third reading stage of the bill. At the end of that time, the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF OTTAWA-CARLETON AND FRENCH-LANGUAGE SCHOOL BOARDS
STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1994LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT DES LOIS
CONCERNANT LA MUNICIPALITÉ RÉGIONALE
D'OTTAWA-CARLETON ET LES CONSEILS SCOLAIRES
DE LANGUE FRANÇAISE

Mr White, on behalf of Mr Philip, moved third reading of Bill 143, An Act to amend certain Acts related to The Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton and to amend the Education Act in respect of French-Language School Boards / Projet de loi 143, Loi modifiant certaines lois relatives à la municipalité régionale d'Ottawa-Carleton et la Loi sur l'éducation en ce qui a trait aux conseils scolaires de langue française.

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): On behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs, I rise to present for third reading Bill 143, an act that will reform regional government in Ottawa-Carleton.

The main features of this legislation include: direct election to regional council, to be in place for the 1994 civic election; regional responsibility for policing under a regional police services board; a new role for regional council in acquiring land for economic development purposes; and provisions concerning French-language school boards in the region.

The hearings held by the standing committee on resources development accomplished a great deal after two full days were devoted to listening to approximately 40 deputations. A broad cross-section was heard from, both those who supported and those who opposed the bill. They included local politicians, ratepayers, business organizations and both urban and suburban residents.

There can be no doubt of the level of interest in regional government in Ottawa-Carleton and in the sincerity of the views that were presented. However, a substantial process has been followed in developing these reforms, and these hearings were only part of that process. There has been a broad consultation on these issues including three studies in the past several years. The population as a whole supports this legislation overwhelmingly.

The time has come to act, and the time has come to put into place a new system of regional government which will serve the present and the future needs of Ottawa-Carleton. The time has come to act, and this is the act which the population of Ottawa-Carleton supports.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): I represent very proudly the riding of Ottawa Centre, and I am absolutely delighted that we have come to third reading of Bill 143. If I could just take a few moments for members of the House and interested people who may be watching to outline what we've done as a government in addressing the questions around the structure of regional government in Ottawa-Carleton since we were first elected in the fall of 1990, the then Minister of Municipal Affairs, Dave Cooke, announced first of all that we would be taking steps to make sure that in the subsequent municipal election in 1991, the office of regional chair would be one for which the population as a whole could vote, and that was a first. Up to that time, the chair of regional council had been chosen among people on the regional council, who voted among themselves for a regional chair. It was a very widely accepted change, and it was taken in the context of an outline by Mr Cooke at that time of the measures the government would undertake to address the larger questions of the structure of regional government.

Our regional government will be 25 years old this year. It's the oldest in all of Ontario, and the basic structure has not changed significantly since it was first constructed under the Conservatives way back 25 years ago. Times have changed, and there's a wide recognition in Ottawa-Carleton that the structure of regional government, which now has a budget of $1 billion a year, also needed to change to reflect people's real desire to see a more accountable regional structure.

The problem with the current structure has been one in which people are elected at the municipal base to represent the people in their municipality within their municipality, but they also became representatives on regional council. The ways in which that was done differed from municipality to municipality, but for example, in the city of Ottawa each council member of the city of Ottawa automatically became a member of the regional council, a very indirect and arm's-length kind of responsibility and one that I think people in Ottawa-Carleton have come to see as not very satisfying in terms of its public accountability.

When Mr Cooke first outlined what we would be doing, he said that we would undertake further consultation with the public of Ottawa-Carleton. That was done with the assistance of the commissioner appointed, Graeme Kirby, who did an absolutely top-notch job of involving the public in Ottawa-Carleton in discussions around the regional structure. I think all sides of the House agree on that and there's widespread appreciation in Ottawa-Carleton for the work that he carried out.

Following the recommendations that Mr Kirby brought to the government, new legislation was tabled back in July 1993 very much in the form that it sits before us today. It addressed, as my colleague from Durham has suggested, some very basic issues of responsibility for matters which should lie at the regional level: matters affecting the environment, economic development and policing, most importantly.

I think the time has come that people in Ottawa-Carleton are more than ready to see these changes. I'd like to personally, on behalf of people in Ottawa-Carleton, thank all members of this Legislature who have participated in work on this legislation, many of whom came to visit Ottawa-Carleton and hear the deputations that were made to the standing committee and expressed a great deal of interest and concern for the views of the people who came before that committee. I very much appreciated that, and on behalf of people in Ottawa-Carleton I'd like to express my personal thanks for their assistance.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Each of the opposition parties will now have 26 minutes to express their views.

Mr Bernard Grandmaitre (Ottawa East): What else is new at Queen's Park? Not much: another closure motion. This is the 14th time this government has used time allocation. The minister is not present today; he's being represented by his parliamentary assistant. The Minister of Housing is leaving the House after a very short speech of seven minutes, for the simple reason that she didn't want to hear the truth, the real truth, about Ottawa-Carleton and the major changes introduced in Bill 143.

I want to admit that in Ottawa-Carleton, being 25 years old, our government needed some fine-tuning. That's why David Bartlett and Katherine Graham were commissioned to do a study on delivery of services and also the composition of our regional wards. These two studies were done by professional people and it made a lot of good sense.

We were told time after time by the Minister of Municipal Affairs that people in Ottawa-Carleton supported Bill 143. I want to tell you otherwise.

We witnessed only last Friday, April 15, and Saturday, April 16, in Ottawa—we finally convinced the minister that some hearings should take place in Ottawa-Carleton. I want to tell you that of the 31 deputations, the 31 submissions tabled or given to us verbally, 95% of the submissions were against Bill 143 in its present form. So to say that the majority of the people of Ottawa-Carleton support Bill 143 is totally wrong.

I want to tell you about the supporters, the original supporters, of Bill 143. I know the minister has used the Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade's name on a few occasions, saying, "I have the support of the Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade." Well, only Sunday in the Ottawa Sun—I want to quote the Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade:

"Willy Bagnell, president of the Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade, says the city of Ottawa has already made the first mistake by giving councillors a full-time salary of $45,000.

"If regional council ends up being a full-time job that would be a mistake," says Bagnell. "We've always supported this bill because it was a step in the right direction to one-tier government."

The minister—not only the Minister of Municipal Affairs but the Minister of Housing, the member for Ottawa Centre—has always said that no, this will not lead us to one-tier government. Everybody else, even their supporters, is saying this bill will lead us to one-tier government. Again, even the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, their staff are having second thoughts on Bill 143. Let me quote again from the Ottawa Sun of last Sunday, from the regional municipality CAO.

"At the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, they're not sure what impact reform will have.

"It's going to be the major role for staff to coordinate with staff from other cities," concedes chief administrative officer Merv Beckstead.

"After 22 years of municipal service, including time with the city of Nepean, Beckstead was starting to have his doubts."

I just want to prove to this House and to the Minister of Municipal Affairs that their support is dwindling, and this is only third reading. It hasn't received royal assent yet, and their supporters are dwindling.

I know that I have very little time because other members of the Ottawa-Carleton region will want to address this bill. But again, I want to point out that time allocation and time closure are being used again. Bill 143 is not of major importance to this government. The minister should be in the House to listen to what the members of Ottawa-Carleton have to say about Bill 143.

Let me go back to our hearings in Ottawa-Carleton on April 15 and 16. People were refused for the simple reason that we had no time. They had no time to hear the opposite. They wanted to shut people up, and that's exactly what Bill 143 is doing; that's exactly what time allocation is doing. We're not getting used to it. We will continue to fight the government, because this is the wrong legislation that we need in Ottawa-Carleton. We need a regional government that will work with local municipalities.

In the beginning, 25 years ago, regional government was instituted in Ottawa-Carleton to work with 11 municipalities; to work and to share in economic development, share in transportation costs, in social services.

What we are doing today is we are destroying local government in Ottawa-Carleton. Don't be surprised if within the next few months that this government has in power it continues to destroy local government. Yet this government was supposed to be the government by the people, for the people. "Write in; come and visit us." Even this afternoon the driver for the Minister of Transportation was going to pick up his own colleague who had a problem in his riding. So that's how accommodating they are. "Come and visit us, come and see us; open doors."

Yet when it comes to Ottawa-Carleton, when it comes to eastern Ontario, well then, we're off the map, because this government thinks that anything east of Bay is eastern Ontario. We have to remind them every so often that Ottawa-Carleton exists. We represent 750,000 people and we will be heard.

I don't know why the present Minister of Municipal Affairs didn't use an arbitrator, because nobody knows what the real cost of this new regional government will be in Ottawa-Carleton. They did it for Middlesex; they appointed an arbitrator to look at the cost. But now people are questioning the cost of this new regional government. Why?

They didn't introduce time allocation for the Middlesex bill. No way. But Ottawa-Carleton? I point out again, not a member from that side, the NDP side, from the Ottawa-Carleton area is present today to address this very important bill.

I will vote against this bill because this is the wrong legislation for Ottawa-Carleton. They will pay the price in future years.

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): It's with a little bit of sadness that I speak on this issue today. I have been involved in this debate through a number of months now and I can say that this bill is being watched closely, not only in the Ottawa-Carleton region but right across the province of Ontario, because what happens here in the Ottawa-Carleton region from a municipal structure point of view is quite likely going to be the vision of the future across other municipalities in the province of Ontario.

The vision that we're seeing is one-tier local government. So perhaps in the future, when we look back, we'll say, "This is the day that local municipal government died in the province of Ontario."

I think it was an excellent approach to go to Ottawa.

We had very limited time. This whole issue has been rushed through. The government did not give priority, first of all to Bill 77, now to Bill 143, which encompassed the structural changes for municipal government. Because the government did not give priority, this matter was rushed through with great speed. The people in Ottawa-Carleton were allowed one and a half days, a Friday and a Saturday morning; a very sad state of affairs. That's all the time that was allowed to speak to this bill.

Notwithstanding that, we accommodated within that short period of time as many people as we could. The overwhelming view of not only the people of Ottawa—when I say "Ottawa," I mean Ottawa-Carleton—but the business community in Ottawa-Carleton, the politicians in Ottawa-Carleton, was in opposition to Bill 143 as it stands today.

However, those who did speak in favour—and there were some people who spoke in favour. The mayor of the city of Ottawa, for example, spoke in favour and she made it clear that she was in favour of one-tier government. When she said "one-tier government," she meant a regional sort of government. She did not mean local governments, but a regional sort of government.

The board of trade of Ottawa was also in favour of this bill, to be fair. Again, the board of trade's point of view is that this is a step towards one-tier government. They would support one-tier government because, in their view, we have too much government, and eliminating one level of government would be a healthy step.

Those, almost unanimously, I would say, who did speak in favour of this particular bill—and they were very much in the minority—were clearly in favour of a one-tier government. They were clearly in favour of eliminating the local governments. That's what we found. I'm not surprised, but that's what we found. I think that's the vision of the future of this NDP government for the province of Ontario.

That's why we found, not when we went to Ottawa-Carleton but through the process of this whole debate, that opposition has come in from across Ontario. Opposition has come in from here, Metropolitan Toronto. Opposition has come from many, many municipalities, large and small, across this province, because they see the writing on the wall and they realize that if this government is prepared to implement a form of government that is a step towards one-tier government in Ottawa-Carleton, this government will obviously be prepared to implement that level of government anywhere else in the province, and that's what's striking fear into the hearts of municipalities.

I might say that the mayors and municipalities across Ontario have every right to be concerned about one-tier government. It has not been proven that a one-tier government is less costly and more effective in terms of delivering services to the people of Ontario.

As a matter of fact, there was a report commissioned by the 11 municipalities in the Ottawa-Carleton region from Price Waterhouse. Price Waterhouse looked at the cost of a one-tier council. And what did they find? Not surprisingly to me, they found that the one-tier system would be more expensive than the two-tier system that's in place today. Salary levels would tend to rise to the most expensive level. The level of service would tend to rise to the most expensive level. There are many reasons one-tier government would be more expensive than the setup that's there today. As a matter of fact, the Price Waterhouse report indicated that the additional expense just for the services delivered today would be somewhere in the range of 7% to 15%, I believe it was, more expensive. That's the kind of government we're heading to.

What we also heard—and I guess it's a restatement of this concern—from people, from politicians, from the business community, is, why not do a cost analysis of this government? I see the parliamentary assistant is watching now. I know he's heard that question and I'm sure I stated that question to him during the debate: Why not do a cost analysis?

We have, for example, a councillor in the city of Ottawa, Peter Harris, who says that the costs will be up to $4 million simply for the full-time councillors. This same Councillor Harris from the city of Ottawa says, "It's hypocritical at this time to insert a new, costly measure to govern Ottawa-Carleton." It says, and this is the key statement, "The taxpayers in Ottawa-Carleton want less government, not more government."

That is perhaps the bottom line to all of this: The taxpayers want less government, they want less expensive government. That's what they're pleading for. If you see a survey or poll, I'll wager you that the bottom line somewhere in that survey or poll is indicative of the fact that people want less, and less expensive, government, including at the local level. But have we done a cost analysis? No, we haven't done a cost analysis. There's a councillor from the city of Ottawa saying it's going to be costly.

Here's a private citizen who lives in Osgoode township, has a business in the city of Ottawa, Dale Harley, and in his brief to us when we were in Ottawa, he indicated: "It is evident that there has not been a thorough examination of the financial impact of Bill 143 on local taxpayers.... I encourage the government to carry out a proper study of the financial implications of this bill."

Shouldn't that be automatic? In this day and age, when it is so imperative that we control government costs, when a significant change is made shouldn't it be automatic that we have a cost analysis to show what the additional costs are, the additional costs in policing, the additional costs associated with direct election, the additional costs in terms of the works activities that will be associated with the region, the extra economic development activities that will be taken over by the region? We have no costs on this. We simply have blind faith that this is somehow a better government and it should be implemented.

We have the chamber of commerce of the city of Gloucester saying, "The chamber of commerce is deeply concerned with the choice that the government has made to go ahead with major and costly structural changes when less costly administrative changes could have been achieved through simple bilateral negotiated improvements and reallocation of duties and responsibilities between local and regional governments."

They're saying: "How about a little common sense? Let's not impose a costly structure. Let's just sit down, discuss this and work out what makes common sense, avoid the duplication, and we'll have an effective level of government." That's the chamber of commerce speaking from Gloucester.

So there you have it. We have citizens, we have the business community and we have politicians, in majority, in the Ottawa-Carleton region saying this bill is not headed in the right direction.

Just one extra minute for me to finish up: There was considerable concern expressed with regard to community policing. Communities such as Nepean and Gloucester, that have their own police force, are very concerned they will lose a service they're very proud of, a service that is delivered on a cost-effective basis within their municipalities. There will now be a regional police force. They're concerned that the regional police force will not have the same contact with the local citizens that they have with their community-based policing now. I think they have every right to have that concern.

Kanata now has an arrangement with the Ontario Provincial Police, and the cost for policing in Kanata is about half the cost per person of what it is in the city of Ottawa. So Kanata is looking not only at the loss of a police service tailor-made to their community but also at a significant increase in cost.

Finally, the liaison between the municipalities was of uppermost concern in everybody's mind, the fact that the mayors will no longer serve on the regional council. This message came through time and time again. People will still look to their mayors for answers: answers on local issues, answers on regional issues. They will still hold the mayors accountable for all of those issues, but the mayors will no longer have regional responsibilities. That linkage between the local and regional municipalities will be lost, that linkage that's important so that all the municipal politicians, the local and regional politicians, will work together on transportation issues, planning issues, waste disposal issues, all those issues. That linkage will be lost, and I'm afraid it will lead to a more parochial approach.

That certainly is the concern of the deputants we've heard in the Ottawa-Carleton region. Unfortunately, I'm afraid it will lead to a conflict between the two levels of government and ultimately the disappearance of local government in the region of Ottawa-Carleton.

With those words, I will sit down and allow the member from Carleton to take over the rest of the debate.

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): Before I start the debate, I'd like to inform the constituents of my riding, the members from the Ottawa-Carleton region, that we're debating an extremely important bill, Bill 143, and the Minister of Housing, representing Ottawa Centre, is not even in the House. The Minister of Municipal Affairs, who was supposed to be so excited to introduce the bill and pass it through as quickly as possible, is not even in the House.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy and Minister Responsible for Native Affairs): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I have the greatest respect for the member who is just beginning to speak, but I would point out that it is completely against the rules of the House to refer to the presence or absence of another member of the assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. I believe you are correct.

Mr Morin: The bill we are debating today, Bill 143, is the product of a very sad state of affairs. It is the result of this government's lack of commitment to the very principles it claims to embody, to the democratic principles of justice, responsibility to the electorate, openness, respect of differing views, and the list goes on. This government might as well be governing by decree. The end result would be the same.

For years now the people of the Ottawa-Carleton region have awaited reform. They grow increasingly concerned about quality of services, cost and efficiency, and yet they remain attached to the local government and are proud of their community. These are very positive and constructive points, proof that despite the violence, the uncertainties and the lack of focus that often seem to characterize our society, there is an underlying current of decency, caring, respect and hope for the future.

As politicians, as part of the political system, we should be building upon these sentiments. Now is not the time to disrupt communities, to tear at the fabric of our communities, which is what Bill 143 does.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs introduced Bill 143, then known as Bill 77, last summer: July 22, 1993, to be exact. Nothing happened. There appeared to be no sign of urgency. The government was obviously not concerned with deadlines nor with the upcoming municipal elections. Instead, it accused opposition parties of obstruction, of preventing passage of the bill. It played political games with an issue of major importance to the people of Ottawa-Carleton, yet all we requested was a full examination of the proposed legislation, a proper debate in the right forum to ensure that this reform is the one best suited to the needs of the people and the communities of Ottawa-Carleton.

We are not interested in a reform that meets the requirements of a select group of individuals, namely, those who have caught the minister's attention. Regional reform belongs to everyone, not to special interests, not to a few politicians who want to decide what is best for everyone. The people must have a say.

Bill 77 was amended, then reintroduced on March 22 of this year, eight months later, but with a difference. There was a new urgency: It was imperative that Bill 143 become law in time for the upcoming municipal elections. Yet this government knew all along about the elections, it knew it was working against a deadline. Now the delay in dealing with regional reform is creating difficulties for the region's clerks, for candidates. Is this a surprise? This was foreseen months ago. It just wasn't a priority then for the government.

In the rush to pass this legislation, the government has completely ignored the wishes of Ottawa-Carleton's population. It scheduled a few days of hearings, listened to some 30 to 35 speakers, the overwhelming majority of whom were opposed to Bill 143. Because of time allocation, there was no time to discuss the amendments my party proposed. All this is blatantly undemocratic.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs' chief of staff states in a letter: "Since Bill 77 was introduced on July 22, 1993, the minister has received over 1,000 letters in response to the bill. Most of these letters were opposed to the proposals contained in the bill." Clearly, this government has failed to demonstrate to the House that the people of Ottawa-Carleton are supportive of this bill. Quite the contrary: The residents in the region have continually raised strong concerns regarding the cost of this reform, cost in human as well as monetary terms.

I've mentioned the following before, but it bears repeating. People are greatly attached to their communities in a very positive sense. They feel and need to feel a part of the community, a member of the human family, so to speak. This link exists mainly at the community level where one enters into close, familiar and regular relations with people. The people of Ottawa-Carleton wish to retain the familiarity, the comfort and the security which accompany local government. They have no desire to see some large, distant political entity govern their affairs.

The second concern raised is that of monetary cost. The government has yet to reveal the real cost of this reform. If the city of Ottawa's actions are a sign of things to come, we are looking at a very expensive reform. Last week, and it's worth repeating again, the city of Ottawa approved a resolution conferring full-time status to its councillors, with increased wages. What other hidden costs will spring out as this reform unfolds?

Bill 143 is leading the region of Ottawa-Carleton into one-tier government, whether the people of the region like it or not, because this government and the member for Ottawa Centre have decided that it is right, regardless of how people feel about it.

I would ask the minister to be frank and to explain to this House and to the people of Ottawa-Carleton what is going on. Who is really behind the push for this reform? Who is pulling the strings? Why won't this government listen to what people want and base its decisions on proper criteria instead of continuously imposing its views and its policies?

Mr Speaker, I don't have to tell you that I will vote against this bill.

Mr Norman W. Sterling (Carleton): It's with some sadness that we come to a forced close on a debate of Bill 143. It's a disappointment, because the government tried, I think through nefarious means, to get the opposition to collapse and debate this bill, wash it up, in one hour of legislative time in this Legislature. I have never understood why the government felt so crass about a major, important piece of legislation for Ottawa-Carleton.

I say they have not represented the people of Ottawa-Carleton well in terms of the process they have allowed for this bill.

They have also not consulted with the people of Ottawa-Carleton on this bill in a forthright and meaningful manner. We have had a number of commissions that have studied the matter, have gone out into the community, have consulted with the people, but Bill 143 does not reflect the results of those commissions. It does not follow Bartlett, it does not follow the Kirby commission, in terms of the implementation of this bill.

I've worked with a number of the mayors in my area for some period of time. I've been fortunate enough and privileged enough to represent the people of Carleton for some 17 years in this Ontario Legislature, and I have grown to know a number of the municipal politicians over that period of time. I have nothing but the utmost respect for each and every one of them.

I was touched to read the submission of Albert Bouwers, the present mayor of the township of Osgoode, who represented the various mayors in Ottawa-Carleton, at least all of the mayors save and except for the mayor of the city of Ottawa.

Albert Bouwers has served his people in Osgoode township for even a longer span than I have in this Legislature, and I feel that Albert Bouwers representing the mayors was an appropriate representation because he could speak from an unbiased position, as he does not intend to seek either a regional seat or a mayoralty seat. So I had hoped that when the government read his particular submission, they would have at least lent a little bit of weight to it.

We have also been fortunate in this debate through the consultation process, which the government unfortunately did not listen to, to have had people like Anton Wytenburg, the former mayor of Goulbourn, set up a task force in Goulbourn to consider the Kirby report, to go through recommendation by recommendation with the people of the township of Goulbourn and ask them what they thought.

The former mayor, Mr Wytenburg, after considerable work, put down the recommendations in a report and submitted it to the township of Goulbourn at no cost to the township of Goulbourn, as a volunteer, as an outstanding citizen of his township and of Ottawa-Carleton.

Unfortunately, the work of individuals like Mr Wytenburg went for naught. It went for naught because this government failed to follow the advice of the people it commissioned to look into the problem. I guess that's what angers people mostly in Ottawa-Carleton.

It was summed up by Mr Phil Downey in the Ottawa hearings when he said, "The people I talked to perceived that we are getting a made-in-Toronto solution to the Ottawa-Carleton problem." That's what we have here, the arrogance of the NDP government sitting in Toronto, giving a Toronto solution to an Ottawa-Carleton problem, because the people in Ottawa-Carleton spoke out and they spoke clearly as to what they wanted in the restructuring of the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton.

Unfortunately, the callousness, the arrogance of this government came forth in Bill 77 and in Bill 143, and that callousness and that arrogance were exhibited time and again in the process that we were dragged through in this Legislature and in the committee hearings, which were ever so brief, in Ottawa-Carleton.

Thirty people and groups had the opportunity to make presentations in Ottawa-Carleton, a day and a half of hearings, hardly adequate time and on very, very short notice. We had a lot of support, four to one against.

If you look through each of the briefs, as I have, and read them in Hansard, four to one against, and the people in Ottawa-Carleton, quite frankly, the ones who were for, such as Mr Brian Bourns, as evidenced in committee hearings and Hansard, were in fact asked by the minister from Ottawa Centre to appear on behalf of the government to buttress up its case.

Alex Munter came and spoke in favour. He ran against me in the last election for the New Democratic Party. We had partisans on behalf of the government side cajoled by the NDP government to come and sing the party line.

We had the real people, the people who were not representing political interests, people like Frank Spinks, who represented a group in the Ottawa-Carleton area that are concerned about taxes, come in front of the committee and express his concern that no economic analysis had been done on this legislation. We had people like Phil Downey, a successful businessman, come and express his concern that this was a Toronto-made solution to an Ottawa problem.

We had people like Wilf Pillsworth and John Gruber, ordinary citizens who put a significant amount of effort into looking into the issues of policing in the city of Kanata, because the city of Kanata is really going to take it in the ear with regard to taxes as a result of this bill. Their police bill is going to double from about $3.1 million to about $6 million in taxes because of Bill 143, and that's a fact.

The chamber of commerce was represented by Allan Whitten, John Rick and John Reiter, who all appeared there on their own time to express their concerns about Bill 143 and the fact that there's no economic basis for the restructuring of the Ottawa-Carleton area as outlined in Bill 143.

I had the opportunity, fortunately, to talk to other representatives from other parts of this world about restructuring government. It's odd that if we talk to people in other parts of North America and in fact in Europe about the structure of government, we find they are travelling in exactly the opposite direction of this government.

What is happening in the new restructuring of eastern Germany for instance, in Berlin, where I had the opportunity to speak to some parliamentarians from that area, both at the municipal level and at the state level? What they're trying to do is download responsibility; not fiscal responsibility, but responsibility to make decisions on behalf of the people. They want to strip themselves of power and put it down. They're not talking about taking power from down below and lifting it up, as we are here in the restructuring put forward by this government.

This government has not learned that the people out there trust their local governments more than they trust their regional governments and more than they trust their provincial governments. Therefore the people out there would prefer their local politicians to make some of the decisions for them.

Merle Nicholds, the mayor of the city of Kanata, along with many of her colleagues, put forward a valiant fight against this particular bill. She sees the very detrimental effects of this legislation, how much it is stripping the city of Kanata of the ability to grow as a prosperous, high-tech area in the province of Ontario.

One of my former opponents in a previous provincial election, Roly Armitage, calls himself the bürgermeister of West Carleton. He's a veterinarian. Thank the Lord Roly Armitage ran against me in 1987, because if he would run against me in 1995, I think he'd probably whip me now. If Roly Armitage could represent the people of Carleton as well as he does West Carleton, I think I'd be in real trouble.

What you're doing with Roly Armitage is saying to him, "You know all of the problems, Mayor Armitage, but you're not going to have the opportunity as mayor to go to regional council and tell them what in fact is happening in West Carleton township."

West Carleton township is either the first- or second-largest township in all of Ontario. It is the largest township in all of Ontario that is densely populated or fairly highly populated. There are about 14,000 people in that particular municipality. It is very large in geographical area. It is the combination of three former townships undertaken in an amalgamation in 1974.

I have a great deal of respect for Dr Armitage. Dr Armitage understands the people of West Carleton, and I think it's doing a disservice not to allow him to sit on regional council.

Jim Stewart from the township of Rideau, in addition to being the mayor, operates a retail store in downtown Manotick. Jim, not only in terms of being a mayor but in terms of being a small businessman in Rideau township, knows what's going on, because people not only drop in at city hall, they drop into his store from time to time and say, "Jim, we're having a problem with this or we're having a problem with that." When Jim goes to regional council, he knows what he's talking about when he's talking about problems for Rideau township.

Paul Bradley similarly runs a grocery store as well as being the mayor of the township of Goulbourn, a young man of about 45 who I think shows tremendous, tremendous political ability.

1600

I've got to tell you that these part-time mayors—if you want to call them that, because they spend tremendous amounts of time in terms of their civic duty—have their finger on the pulse of their community more than any regional representative is ever going to have with regard to township affairs.

I think it's a travesty of justice that we're taking these talented men and women off regional council. They're in close contact with people; they are trusted by their people; they have proven themselves in terms of service in the past; they have made wise decisions in the past. Many of these people are going to be discouraged from running for regional council because they want to be the mayor of their area.

The system in the past—I can guarantee you this—has worked better than what is proposed under Bill 143. We cannot support this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): This completes the time allotted for the Progressive Conservative Party. Further debate?

Mr Hans Daigeler (Nepean): First of all, I'd like to welcome back the member for Carleton. I just want to tell him that I missed him, and I guess we missed him, defending the interests of his riding over the last two weeks while we had the public hearings and during clause-by-clause. But it's good to see him here at least to vote, hopefully, against this bill and joining with myself and other members from the Ottawa-Carleton area who are very much against this.

I realize that we do have people who are in favour of this project and, frankly, those who are in favour I think are doing it for a good reason. What is that reason? Because it's going to benefit them and it's going to exclusively benefit them. That's the issue and that's the objection I have, because unfortunately my riding and my city, which has over 110,000 people, is losing on the whole front.

I can tell the minister, who has finally arrived, that we don't like it and we'll remember that. Mind you, the NDP I think has no chance in my riding, and perhaps that's the reason why he's pushing this bill through without any kind of consideration for the people of the other municipalities in Ottawa-Carleton.

I understand, and the mayor of Ottawa has said that very clearly and the chairman of the Ottawa board of trade has said that very clearly: Some members of my own caucus are in favour because this bill does benefit Ottawa, no question and no bones about it. So why would they not fight for it?

But I think the government and the provincial government and the Minister of Municipal Affairs have a responsibility: It is a moral obligation to represent the interests of all the people of the province and of all the people of Ottawa-Carleton, not just of the city of Ottawa and not just of the member for Ottawa Centre.

That's why I'm so opposed to this bill. There would have been an opportunity to bring forward reforms that would have been accepted. Not everybody probably would have been in favour—I'm under no illusions—but I think there was the potential to get together and work things out through cooperation and not through coercion, as we have done, as the Liberal government has done before.

We had a bill on the order paper that was going to be acceptable pretty well to all of the mayors and to all of the councils in the whole region, and only this minister, not even the previous NDP Minister of Municipal Affairs, was that draconian.

This current Minister of Municipal Affairs has really pitted one city against the other in the Ottawa-Carleton area and has pitted the people of Ottawa-Carleton against each other, and that's what I object to and that's why I'm very, very upset about this, because this is going to have and leave very bad feelings for a long time in the Ottawa-Carleton area, and it was not necessary.

Finally the minister is here. He did not come to the hearings, he did not come to the clause-by-clause, but at least he's here at this point. He never came to Nepean, he never went to Gloucester, he never went to Kanata, and still his parliamentary assistant, and I think the member for Ottawa Centre earlier on, said, "The population of Ottawa-Carleton at large is in favour." How can he say that? What basis do you have to claim that the population of Ottawa-Carleton at large is in favour of your reforms? None.

I have done a survey. I've done several surveys. I did one last year, and the people of Nepean said to me, "Yes, we are prepared to look at regional reform, but only if it saves us money, and certainly not if it costs us money."

Again I did a survey in my most recent householder that was just distributed about three weeks ago, and I asked the people—I tried to be as neutral in my question as possible, because you know how you can frame the question—"Do you want the mayor to sit on regional council or not?" I tell you, 70% of the people who sent in their little reply sheet, and they're still coming in, said they're against dropping the mayors from regional council. I can tell you, people on the government side, I directed the hearings and I directed the people who spoke on behalf of Nepean. I can tell you, I would have perhaps liked to; I certainly did it.

The feeling that is out in Nepean, certainly in my municipality and in other parts of the region, is that they are very satisfied with their local government, they are basically satisfied with the regional government. They want some fine-tuning, but fine-tuning in a way that is going to give them more service at less cost. What are we going to get with this bill that we have in front of us? We are going to get more cost for less service, and that's the problem.

The minister's shaking his head. Well, Minister, last week, before this bill is even passed, we already had the first concrete evidence that it's going to cost us more. What did the municipality that has been pushing for this reform do? What was its first decision regarding regional government? They made their local politicians full-time. They increased their staff budget by $20,000. Is that cost-saving, I ask the minister?

In Nepean, we've had only seven politicians, who have been part-time—part-time—and they've done a very good job, because the fiscal record of the city of Nepean is the envy of the region and I would say the envy of the province.

Why is it, I ask the minister, that the city of Ottawa is in favour? It has the worst fiscal record, the worst management record in the region of Ottawa-Carleton, and they are the ones who are pushing for amalgamation. Well, it doesn't make sense. It doesn't make sense to our municipality and it doesn't make sense to Gloucester and it doesn't make sense to Kanata, and that's what the representatives of these regions have said.

What we have seen, unfortunately, is politics of confrontation, and I think that's frankly the typical NDP approach. You pit one group against the other and then you benefit from it. But what I can't see is where the benefit for this government is going to be. I can see the benefit for the city of Ottawa, and I guess I have to congratulate it on succeeding to get the NDP government on its side.

But I say to the people of Nepean and Kanata and Gloucester and the rural municipalities that unfortunately we're on the losing side. But certainly we will make sure to hold this government accountable and to hold certainly the politicians of the city of Ottawa accountable, because we're afraid that they're going to burden us with increased costs.

RETAIL SALES TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR LA TAXE DE VENTE AU DÉTAIL

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 138, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act / Projet de loi 138, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la taxe de vente au détail.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I'm glad to see there's a large number of people here to listen to the remainder of this speech this afternoon, after that vote.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): Why are they all leaving?

Mr Bradley: I've heard it said that when some members get up to speak the House fills up; sometimes it does the opposite.

I was pointing out in mid-speech the difficulty of making tax changes at a time when we're in a very competitive period in relation to other jurisdictions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Order, please. The member for St Catharines is attempting to participate in the debate and there is a great deal of noise in the House.

Mr Bradley: This happens from time to time, I know, at the conclusion of a vote. The member for Sudbury is listening attentively.

I was mentioning in the latter part of my speech that—

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Honestly, it's very difficult to hear the member for St Catharines. If you could bring order it would be helpful.

The Acting Speaker: I have much the same difficulty. I'm attempting to get the honourable members' attention that indeed it is very difficult to hear the member for St Catharines, who has the floor very legitimately.

Mr Bradley: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I know there are times when governments must gain some revenues to carry out their programs. For instance, years ago, I'm sure, when the Progressive Conservative government brought in the sales tax in Ontario, it was to gain revenues for the programs it was going to be involved in. When it brought in OHIP premiums many years ago, likewise I'm sure the Progressive Conservative government of the day raised those taxes simply because it needed the funds to meet its financial obligations. Even though, at that period of time, we were running deficits, as I well recall, deficit after deficit in those years of Progressive Conservative rule, they still needed the funds.

In those days, it wasn't a case of chasing potential investment out of the province; the province seemed to be able to sustain those kinds of increases. What we've got today, for whatever reason one wants to put forward, and there are a variety of reasons, is an extremely competitive regime; that is, there are other jurisdictions now which are trying to lure business and other investment out of the province of Ontario and into other jurisdictions, some of them other provinces, some of them other countries.

If we are to add to that tax burden, as this bill suggests, we make ourselves less competitive. If times were booming today, if there wasn't that much competition for Ontario in terms of gathering investment and retaining investment, people would still complain about a tax increase but the damage that could be done to the province potentially would be much less. It makes it difficult for this government because it's governing in times in which it is extremely difficult to govern in terms of the economic situation.

That's why it really means the government has to examine carefully all of its expenditures and decide what the priorities are. For instance, and this is borne out by surveys which governments have released, people want to see a good health care system and are prepared to pay to have a good health care system for all the citizens of this province. We are seeing an increasing number of people who would like to see our police forces and our court system with the necessary resources to fight crime, which is of great concern to many people, the deputy leader of the Liberal Party today suggesting that, for instance, in many communities he's visited recently that seems to be second only to the concern about jobs.

If the government were to apply these funds to matters that are of great concern to the general population and reduce or eliminate expenditures in non-essential areas, you would find there would be a better situation existing for attracting the kind of investment we want to see in Ontario. This, combined with a number of other taxes, adds a substantial burden.

I'm sure nobody on the other side—the Treasurer most assuredly is one of those people—wants to raise taxes, because it's very politically unpopular to do so. That is why I think we see governments moving to what they call "painless taxes." I have a very strong personal point of view on this, not one that is necessarily shared by all members of the opposition or all members of the government, that the government moves in the wrong direction when it simply tries to get more and more of its funding from gambling proceeds.

I wish—and I think this will happen in four or five years—there was a groundswell of support for assessing very carefully the impact on our society of the various new kinds of gambling before governments proceeded. It's so attractive—because no one wants to pay new taxes that aren't so-called voluntary—for governments to move into new areas of deriving funds from gambling. Yet we keep seeing reports coming in that these funds, that this regime of "Let's get into new and different ways of gambling"—and it's not this government alone, by any means; virtually every jurisdiction today is attracted to new ways of gambling to get its funds.

I express again my concern that this province—because I sit in this Legislature, but I would certainly apply that to other provinces, any federal jurisdictions, the states next to us. They're all moving far too rapidly into new gambling ventures before looking at the impact on very vulnerable people. Those are often people who are in desperate circumstances because of the fact that they don't have a lot of money, and this represents a chance to grasp at that chance and to perhaps become a millionaire or at least win a good deal of money through slot machines or these video terminals or lottery proceeds or something of that nature.

I'm told that now they're even installing bank machines in bingo halls so that if you didn't bring enough money to spend on gambling there's a bank machine there that you can get more money from.

For instance, people who enthusiastically went after offtrack betting for their establishments are taking a step back now and saying perhaps that isn't the route to go. I have an example in my own community of a tavern which enthusiastically went after and was successful in receiving the offtrack betting franchise, I guess I'll call it, and now I see in my local newspaper, the St Catharines Standard, that the same company has decided to give that up because their experience was not one which was ultimately beneficial to that business.

But what I'm just as concerned about is that there are very vulnerable people out there, gambling addicts, people who are desperate, don't have much money, and they are really the people we are taxing when we apply new gambling ventures to this province.

I hope the government will reconsider this particular legislation, withdraw the tax and try to ensure that Ontario is a competitive place for investment.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I'd like to comment briefly on the remarks of the previous speaker with regard to Bill 138. It's interesting to note that the taxes had not even been put on yet for the beer and wine and here they are wanting to pass this bill to implement these taxes at 26 cents, but they've already reduced that to 13 cents.

What this bill does is add 5% on every person who's paid insurance in this province since last July, I believe, without any legislation being in place. This bill was brought in on May 10. Here we are, almost to May of the next year, and we're still dealing with last year's budgetary policies. I find it hard to believe that we're dealing with repealing the tire tax of $5 as part of this bill and that's already been off since last July 1. But for all those people who had to pay that extra 5% on their insurance, the legislation hasn't even been passed to do that yet. Also, there's the fact that parts and labour are all part of this bill, and the member who just spoke mentioned some of these things in his remarks.

When you look at the budgetary policies of this government and what it's doing to the people in Ontario, with regard to this bill and motor vehicles, many people had problems. They wanted to give a gift to one member of a family, and now they have to go through a whole process of buying a kit to make sure the process is in place. The onus being put on these individuals—a mother who wants to give a car to one of her children now ends up paying a whole pile of money; plus, the Red Book inflates what the price was really intended to be.

The member speaks about some of the problems with the budgetary policies of this government that we can certainly see.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the member for St Catharines. One always wonders whether his comments today are different from when he originally started his speech, and what frame of mind he may be in, since I know his beloved Buffalo Sabres weren't successful last night. That may impact his mood and reaction.

The member for St Catharines said the taxes should be revoked. He did not provide any alternatives about what should be put in place. I want to remind the member that these taxes were part of our strategy to deal with the burgeoning deficit, to ensure it didn't get up to the close to $17-billion mark. We did the tax portion of that, we did the social contract, we did the expenditure control plan. Of course, now that the fiscal year is over, we can see that strategy was very successful in terms of getting a handle on the deficit issues, protecting jobs, and ensuring that we're going to be in a stronger position as the economic recovery is going to continue in 1994 and 1995.

I do wonder, though, what the member for St Catharines would put forward as an alternative if you take that tax off. Speaker, as you remember, their leader said we didn't cut enough; they wanted us to cut a couple more billion. They didn't say how. They didn't like the social contract, they didn't like what we did in the expenditure control plan, but we should cut more. It makes us wonder whether there are new ideas out there from the Liberal Party.

I have a great deal of respect for the member for St Catharines. He usually does have a lot of good ideas and creative ideas, but in this speech I didn't hear a lot of them. It sounded more like a lament, to me, from some of the past good old days of how things used to be.

Mr Mahoney: I actually wasn't going to comment, but remarks made by the member for Oxford have led me—

The Acting Speaker: We are commenting on the member for St Catharines.

Mr Mahoney: I know we are. His remarks are commenting on the member for St Catharines, so therefore, in a circuitous way, I will do the same.

For the member to actually suggest that, "We have a handle on the deficit," I think the words were, is really quite remarkable. What the member for St Catharines is talking about is a difference in time. When it might have made some sense several years ago to implement a particular tax for a particular purpose, today what this government fails to understand is that by increasing taxation—as I see the Treasurer leaving the room—increasing the percentage level of taxation, I say directly to the young member for Oxford, has decreased your revenue. Do you understand? Your revenue has actually gone down as the percentage of taxes has actually gone up. Don't shake your head; it's true.

Every year you say you have a handle on the deficit. Well, I'll tell you, you're wrestling the deficit to the ceiling in the province of Ontario.

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): Jerk.

Mr Mahoney: What you have managed to do in four years in government is take a total provincial debt of $39 billion and more than double it. By the time you're finished—and we understand that your Treasurer will be coming in with a record low, for you, deficit of $8.5 billion next Thursday. Imagine calling an $8.5-billion deficit a record low deficit for a government, but that's what it is. You have actually increased the debt by increasing the deficit every single year, you've driven taxation through the roof and you've totally destroyed any confidence the consumer or the business community has in this province. If that's getting a handle on the deficit, we're all in big trouble.

The Acting Speaker: We can accommodate one final participant.

Mr Stockwell: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: On a point of order, or a participant?

Mr Stockwell: Point of order, Mr Speaker: The comments made by the member for Downsview are most inappropriate and definitely out of order and I would ask him to withdraw them.

The Acting Speaker: I did not hear. Does the member for Downsview feel there were unparliamentary comments?

Mr Perruzza: Mr Speaker, I will say in this place and I'll say outside that the member for Mississauga is totally incompetent, and I'll repeat that from here to Anderson, Ontario, all the way up to the lake. I have no problem with that, and if he's got a problem with it, then he can—

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr Perruzza: —take it down to the bank.

Mr Stockwell: Well, I'll comment for the two minutes. That's not what he said. As usual from this member—

The Acting Speaker: Is this the final participant?

Mr Stockwell: —what he says and what he attributes to being said are usually two different things. It's typical coming from this member.

I will comment, Mr Speaker, for two minutes. I wonder why this government does not comment on the GO rolling stock sale. Here's a clear example. They want to talk about taxes and deficits and tax loopholes. Remember when they got into power they were going to close all those tax loopholes and tax the corporate rich, the corporate welfare bums, they called them? What does this government do when it sells the GO rolling train stock? They take a trip to Bermuda, sell it to a Bermuda company, allow them to set up a shell company, transfer the assets to that shell company, all to avoid a federal tax, the 15% withholding tax.

I'm very surprised the member for Oxford didn't talk about that. He used to talk about the tax loopholes and the corporate welfare bums and the two-martini lunches. The first opportunity this government has to take advantage of a loophole with respect to the withholding tax, it flies its officials to Bermuda, closes a deal by selling the GO rolling stock, the trains, in Bermuda, not in this country, because if it closed it in this country it would have been subject to the tax laws of this country. Is that the ultimate in irony, coming from the socialists, the ultimate ironic statement from a government like this, that talked all those years about the corporate élite and the wealthy and the rich? One chance they have to pay the withholding tax, and they fly to Bermuda, set up shell companies and act like Bill Player and Rosenberg. It's awfully shameful.

I liked the comments made by the member for St Catharines. I'm very astounded that the member for Oxford—who dresses like he's from Oxford now; a very good dresser, I might add—wasn't commenting on that shell game you played with the taxpayers' money, you corporate welfare bum.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allotted for questions and comments. The honourable member for St Catharines has two minutes in response.

Mr Bradley: I would like to first of all comment, because there have been many comments around here, that in fact the members on the government benches have improved their wardrobes considerably over the years. I want to compliment them. I look over there now and there are a lot of new suits, a lot of nice ties and so on, so I don't want to hear any of these stories about the government members—

Interjections.

Mr Bradley: I'm trying to be nice about it, because I see some new jackets, new ties and so on. This is great to see.

The you-brew tax is an example of where the Treasurer has recognized he's wrong and has made a modification to that tax. It took a lot of statements and a lot of questions from the opposition. The member for Ottawa South, for instance, made representation on many occasions in this House, and the Treasurer understood he was wrong on that. He understood the detrimental effect and he was prepared to withdraw that tax.

1640

Hon Howard Hampton (Minister of Natural Resources): What happened to your red tie? If you were loyal, you'd—

Mr Bradley: The Attorney General of years gone by says I don't have a red tie on today, obviously commenting on the wardrobe of people over here. I tell you, when you're in opposition, things are tough.

Hon Mr Hampton: What happened to red ties?

The Acting Speaker: Order, please.

Mr Bradley: I want to also say that when a Treasurer is prepared to withdraw a tax, he will find support over here. I think there was a round of applause that came from this side of the House when Mr Laughren announced that he was admitting his mistake and changing the tax on you-brews. That's what we're suggesting, that you do that and let the economy start to move in Ontario and then you will find those revenues coming in naturally from this stimulated economy.

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I don't believe a quorum is present.

The Acting Speaker: I believe we have a request to check if there is a quorum.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I'd like to say a few words with respect to Bill 138. This is one of several bills dealing with the 1993 budget. It is ironic that we're dealing with these bills about a week before the next budget, which will be on May 5.

This specific bill deals very briefly with a number of things which have been mentioned by other members in this House: the 8% tax on insurance for drug benefits, health benefits, dental benefits—dirt. This is the tax that one of the Toronto media said, "They're even taxing dirt." This is the bill that sets the 5% tax on auto insurance and, of course, brew-your-own.

I must say, when you start looking at the rationale of why we're doing taxes, as to what this province is getting for the money that is being charged to the taxpayer of this province, we have to look at what this bill and other bills like it have done in one year. This bill and other bills have resulted in a total of $2 billion in new or increased taxes. That is an all-time, record-breaking tax grab for this province. It has resulted in the philosophy of this government resulting in another $10-billion deficit.

More seriously, it has resulted in a credit rating moving downward, the third in three years. The Provincial Auditor has refused to endorse the province's books. There is a tax revolt that's getting stronger and stronger with respect to this and other bills, resulting in the underground economy which is a very serious problem in this province. There is another forecasted revenue shortfall, an estimated $1.6 billion in lost revenue. When you look at the overall financial position with respect to this province, it's not good, specifically when you fit this bill in with all the other financial policies that are being put forward by this government.

The government did recognize, and there is an amendment coming along somewhere in this place with respect to you-brew, pursuant to a press release of April 18 when the province reduced the tax on produce-your-own beer and wine. Effective April 18, the tax applied to beer and wine made at produce-your-own outlets would decrease from 26 cents a litre to 13 cents a litre, and tax increases scheduled for June 15 of this year and June 15 of next year with respect to you-brew would not take place.

The difficulty is, of course, that meanwhile this is a new, struggling business, all these businesses, and there's about 100 of them that have simply gone out of business since this budget announcement was made last year. It's a rather expensive way for the government to find out that it made a mistake. I think that one has to look philosophically. This is a prime example of, will the levying of taxes necessarily mean an increase in revenue?

Someone mentioned during the response to one of the previous speakers the whole issue of the cigarette tax. I think that we're all predicting. The Treasurer has said, "Oh, well, revenue is going to fall as a result of the cutting of the cigarette tax." I will bet that there will be as much revenue, if not more, as a result of less activity in the underground economy. The predictions of what the underground economy is generating in this province are unbelievable, and I think that this government soon, if not with this bill, should start looking at that whole topic and how it's affecting this province.

I will make one further comment with respect to the you-brew industry. Here is an industry that was starting to get its feet off the ground. It was starting last year—

Mr Jim Wiseman (Durham West): There are more improvements now than before the tax.

Mr Tilson: Well, I'm sorry, but the fact of the matter is that when this tax came into existence, a whole bunch of businesses went out of business, a whole number of jobs were lost.

This government over here is talking about how it's going to improve the jobs in this province and here, with the implementation of one tax, 200 businesses went out of business as a result of this tax. Now the Treasurer comes along and says, "Oops, I made a mistake." He's now going to reduce it, and meanwhile all these people have lost their jobs and businesses. People who have invested in a business have now lost their investment.

I would hope that the Treasurer, the Finance minister, would get his act together before he starts implementing these philosophies and looking at the effect as to where this province is going; for example, the whole issue of the beer industry, which, mind you, with the exception of you-brew, isn't really an issue with respect to this bill, but the whole issue of tax in the brewing industry.

In Ontario 47% of the $26.40 price for a case of 24, including the deposit, is a government tax. Mind you, the national tax average of 53% makes Canadian beer the most heavily taxed in the world. By comparison, the average US tax on beer is 18%. So you have to look at all of this.

It talks about doing business in Ontario, the cost of buying products, the cost of providing jobs. I can tell you, this whole philosophy that the government has entered into with Jobs Ontario, saying they're going to increase jobs in this province, when people start looking at the tax structure and the heavy burden on the employer, people are taking a second look as far as starting up a business in this province.

The issue of auto insurance: I think that this whole topic of auto insurance has been a very important issue for a number of years. It started off with the debate of changing the tort system to the OMPP, and the NDP, led by Mr Kormos, who became perhaps notorious for his 17-hour filibuster in this place, attacking the Liberal government for its OMPP philosophy on auto insurance.

Then, of course, the New Democratic Party came to power and said a number of things with respect to auto insurance, very little of which they followed. But they did say, "We're going to introduce Bill 164," and that is now law in this province, with the minister responsible for auto insurance saying there isn't going to be any more increase in the cost of auto insurance in this province.

Have any of us looked at our premium notices since this government has taken office and since Bill 164 has taken effect? You have to start looking at these things, because the minister responsible for auto insurance says one thing and then, all of a sudden, the Finance minister comes along and says, "We're going to have a tax of 5% on auto insurance," at the same time as Bill 164 is being debated in this place.

It is a strange place, when the government is attempting to solve a defective Liberal system by saying premiums are going to be kept down. Premiums haven't been kept down, and one of the reasons that premiums haven't been kept down is Bill 164, of which much has been said in this place; but the other is the 5% tax that is being billed to the people of this province through this Bill 138.

There are higher auto insurance costs as a result of this bill. There are higher auto insurance costs as a result of Bill 164. I can tell you that when you start looking at the 5% tax that's being put on auto insurance premiums now by this bill, you add that to the 3% premium tax, which Mr Laughren, the Finance minister, introduced some time ago, which was a hidden tax built into premiums, so in effect there's an 8% tax. On top of that there was the 4.4% that the consultants for the government who were putting forward Bill 164 had said would take place, and then there are the usual increases that seem to have risen each year because of increased costs of auto insurance.

So there are people who are getting insurance bills, insurance premiums, in their envelopes, addressed to them, to be paid forthwith, of increases of anywhere between 20% and 30%. It's a very strange situation. Why would the government with this bill pick on, of all things, auto insurance to try to bring revenue into its coffers in an area where it has been trying to keep the cost of auto insurance down? It's a very strange thing to do.

Of course, there are other issues. Now we're going to have, will the NDP pay brokers to become tax collectors? Essentially that's what's happening. The brokers will have to collect the tax, more forms to complete, more funny paperwork to fill out by the insurance brokers.

Then there's the issue of the favourite topic of this government and other governments: the GST. We talk about harmonizing the tax between GST and PST. That has been a favourite topic of both federal and provincial governments across this country. There is no GST with respect to your auto insurance, but for some unearthly reason, this government has decided to tax auto insurance. So now we're having more complications, more paperwork, more strange paperwork with respect to the general public. It is becoming more and more difficult to do business in this province, specifically with respect to auto insurance.

There are higher auto insurance costs again after we were promised by Mr Charlton, the minister responsible for auto insurance, that we would have cheaper premiums in exchange for the right to sue with a no-fault scheme.

That was his promise. Of course his Treasurer, his Finance minister, has stabbed him in the back with this 5% tax, but that was his promise. That was the promise on behalf of this government, and I can tell you, it is making people, anybody in this province, very, very angry.

I can speak specifically with respect to the people in my riding, the riding of Dufferin-Peel, which consists of the county of Dufferin and the town of Caledon, areas where most people who work have to travel by automobile. They live out in the country. They work in the south, in Mississauga, Brampton, the Toronto area, or they work in other areas and they have to use their automobiles to get to places of work.

It's become a very mobile society, not only for pleasure driving, but for their cost of living, and this is another cost. It's another cost to those people, with respect, because they need to have the automobile. There are some people in this province, I suppose, people in Metropolitan Toronto, who don't need an automobile.

So one starts looking at the fairness of tax. These people need automobiles. People in my riding are saying: "Well, it's another cost." You know, we've had cost increases with respect to tax and the issue with respect to auto insurance premiums. They just groan and they don't understand it; they simply don't understand it. All they know is that their insurance premiums are going up, and we know by this bill that they're going up by at least 5%, so people don't understand.

I will tell you one other thing. I've always taken the position that this 5% tax is a tax on a tax. In 1992—I think it was 1992—the Finance minister reinstated the 3% premium on auto insurance tax. This was a hidden tax which was built into the auto insurance premium. Now there's going to be a 5% tax on that, on the 3% that's hidden within the premium, so there will be a tax on a tax: the 3% premium which is hidden, and then on the overall cost there will be a 5% tax, so it's a tax on a tax.

The 8% on home insurance and group benefits certainly is giving a great concern to the employers in this province, specifically with respect to benefits, and I will be speaking about that. That's a topic which many people in this province who are trying to provide jobs are concerned about, because we've got into a system of providing benefits to our employees. Many are in their employee contracts, their union contracts. It's part of the system of their salary plus benefits, and here is yet another burden that is going to be put on the backs of the employers to provide health benefits with respect to this province.

I can tell you that there are many employers in this province who are looking at, can we afford it? We've got a difficult recessionary period where income isn't the way it used to be. We have more bureaucracy in this province, more difficulty, more competition to deal with other jurisdictions around us. We've got increased personal tax; we've got all kinds of taxes under this system. It's becoming more and more difficult to keep a job and to provide jobs. So something's got to give. Either people are going to lose their jobs or salaries are going to remain the same or be lowered, or there's going to be a lowering of benefits, because there's so much money in the pot that the employer has to pay to make a living to keep his or her business going. There's only so much money there, so eventually something's going to have to give.

I debated last week the issue with respect to the health tax and how that's being put on the backs of the employers. So there are more and more taxes that are being put on the backs of the employers, and the employer is finally going to say to the employee or to the union that he or she is negotiating with: "I don't have any more money because of the strange tax system that we've got in this province. There's just no more. It's not going to pay me to operate a business in this province."

That issue of jobs is the main issue that concerns the people of this province, and the government stands up and talks about Jobs Ontario and the various programs they have to stimulate jobs. But the fact of the matter is that there's only so much money available and this type of tax, this 5% tax on benefits, is creating major problems with respect to the employer.

I guess we could start looking at the total tax, the total increase in premiums, before I would close with respect to the issue of premiums in this province for auto insurance. On the very face of it, depending on the increases from company to company, there is at the very minimum a tax increase of 17% on auto insurance premiums in this province. Then, of course, depending on the policies of the particular insurance company, that goes anywhere up to 30%. I have had people in my riding of Dufferin-Peel tell me that they're getting insurance increases of up to 30% and they don't understand it. So when you start looking at the various taxes that have been set—the 3% tax, the 5% tax that's been added to auto insurance, the four-point increase that was put on as a result of Bill 164 and the 5% increase each year with respect to auto insurance, it makes people absolutely dizzy. They have no idea why and they simply don't understand it.

They're becoming very, very cynical with respect to this government and other governments that have come along and said, "We're going to keep insurance rates down." The Liberals said it, because Mr Peterson suddenly discovered that the tort system may not be working. Insurance premiums were going up, so he introduced the OMPP. This particular government, the NDP government, went absolutely bonkers over that and criticized that whole philosophy.

Now of course we've got Bill 164, plus this bill which adds an unbelievable cost to insurance.

Insurance agencies are sending out notices to their policyholders. I have one that was sent to me, just to show what they're doing in my riding of Dufferin-Peel, but I suspect that similar agencies are doing the same, to explain to the public why their premiums are going up. They've talked about this 5% tax through Bill 138; they've talked about the increases of premiums due to the implementation of Bill 164; they've talked about how beginning January 1, 1994, you will no longer be able to sue for economic loss.

I'm quoting some literature that was sent out by one of the agencies in one of the municipalities in my riding, Orangeville Insurance. They say:

"Beginning January 1, 1994, you will no longer be able to sue for economic loss if you suffer serious bodily injuries in an auto accident. This means that you will not be able to sue for the loss of money you would have earned from being employed. Who will that change affect most? High-income earners, those with net incomes greater than $1,100 per week; students with a high future income earning potential; persons whose present income does not reflect future earning potential, and others with special need for additional coverage."

Then they say there's a need for other alternatives and they offer, as other insurance companies are offering across this province, additional insurance. So as of January 1, an excess economic loss endorsement has been approved by the companies that this agency represents, and I presume other companies across this province, "This endorsement provides excess coverage over the new basic plan, to the degree that you are not responsible for the accident, in the case of serious injuries from an accident occurring in Ontario."

The ironic part of course is that here we have a tax on auto insurance, we have Bill 164 which is going to cost us more yet it's taking away more rights, and now we have insurance companies saying, "We recommend that you buy more insurance coverage," and of course this government's going to tax that policy. So there'll be a 5% tax on this new coverage that's being offered by insurance companies to cover people whom they used to cover under the OMPP.

Not only that, you start looking at the benefit regulations that are being set forward by Bill 164. The problem with that of course is that the insurance companies have no idea where they're going with this thing, because you're going to be paying for ever. The benefits are going for ever and they have no idea.

The system is doomed to failure, yet you have the gall to levy a 5% tax on auto insurance premiums. As I say, technically it's a triple tax. You've got a tax on the 3%, the hidden premium tax, then you've got the 5% tax on auto insurance premiums and then you've got a tax on the insurance coverage that people are going to have to get because they don't have enough coverage.

It's one of the most bizarre things you've done to auto insurance coverage in this province. It's putting insurance companies in a great deal of risk. They simply don't know what they're going to do, particularly some of the smaller companies. They're worried. Then of course you've got legislation. Bill 164 says, "If you want to get out of it, you can't get out of it." It's a very difficult thing.

I've said enough. I haven't got very much time left with respect to auto insurance other than to say that this is the most damaging perspective in my assessment with respect to the bill.

The other issue is with respect to group benefits. This new tax will certainly raise the cost of insurance to employers. Group tax benefits, health, dental and disability, already represent 5% to 6% of payroll costs. Again we're looking at the amount of money that employers have to keep their businesses going, and yet Bill 138 says, "We're going to add more on to that."

The expansion of the expense the employers are being put to is being made larger and larger and larger, and they're going to finally say: "Why bother? Why do business in Ontario? Why bother?" That's the fear I have. You may say, "Oh, well, it's only a small tax," but you add this to the employer health tax, you add this to all the other taxes that are being levied against the employer, and it creates a grave concern with respect to employers.

Many employers have been struggling to stay alive during this recessionary period, and you have the gall to add this other expense. There have been certain rapid increases with respect to employee benefit costs as governments, to use the words of Blue Cross president Dunbar Russel, "peel away the onion of health care and transfer costs to the private sector." Now, of course, with this bill, they're facing yet another burden of a tax on the private sector, on the people who are trying to provide jobs in this province. Virtually all the insurance premiums get resented on claims.

I've had people write me with respect to the benefits and the increase their businesses are going to be put to, and they're simply saying they'll be forced to cut back.

Here's a letter from Plastiflex in Orangeville that expressed their concern with respect to the benefit package that they're now going to be obliged—it keeps increasing, increasing, increasing. They say: "This will cause us to review our policy again to determine areas of savings. Unfortunately, this most likely means we will be forced to downgrade the coverage carried, thus reducing coverage to our employee base."

This is just one example of letters I received in my riding, and I suspect similar businesses all across this province are saying the same thing. My fear is that this in turn is affecting people this government is trying to help: the workers of this province. Yet here is an employer putting us on notice that they simply don't have the money to pay what you want them to pay, all for your funny financial policies.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I don't believe we have a quorum present.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Would you please verify if we have a quorum in the House.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

1710

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Dufferin-Peel.

Mr Tilson: There's an excellent article I saved from the Globe and Mail of May of last year which talks about the cost to employers. There's an article by Margo Gibb-Clark on May 21 of last year. It talked about one of the things I don't think this government has considered, that companies with fleets of trucks or cars, or companies that simply depend on transportation and the auto insurance they have to pay, will be especially hard hit. As well, there is the 8% on insurance premiums for employee benefits, so they're getting doubly hit.

The article goes on to say, "Health and dental benefits and disability insurance can easily cost an employer 5.75% or more of gross payroll." These are comments by a consultant at William M. Mercer Ltd. "Most employers pay the full shot." They do. Most employers across this province pay the full shot, and so it's they who are getting stuck with this thing.

"Depending on how generous the benefits are, this could add $100 to $150 a year even for an employee who earned...$25,000. For a staffer earning a $40,000 salary, costs could go up $160 to $240,"—that's per employee—"and for a $70,000 employee the figure could be as high as $420" per employee. It's a lot to expect the employers of this province to carry the burden for the financial wizardry this Finance minister is trying to put forward.

General Motors of Canada, in the same article, talked about "extra costs of several million dollars a year for its 40,000 employees.... GM also offers some health benefits to between 25,000 and 30,000 retired workers, which would add further to its expenses."

I don't think the government's thought this out. I don't think they've thought out, as they have not with many taxes, the effect this is going to have on the very issue they're trying to solve. The government members stand up—and I believe their sincerity. They know there's an employment problem in this province and the members on the government side continually stand up and talk about how they're trying to save jobs. Yet they sit by and watch these bills, such as Bill 138, be passed in this place, attacking the very people who are paying the employees, who are creating the jobs in this province. So what they're doing is completely contradictory.

I've got roughly a minute left. I received a letter from a widowed pensioner who's on a fixed income. This is a letter from a lady in Shelburne and she is very concerned about the tax on the insurance premiums, specifically with respect to health plan participants who pay 100% of their premiums. This is a widow.

"The Ontario government's budget is totally unacceptable for seniors in my position. I am a spouse of a superintendent teacher who has been on a D pension for 20 years. Are you prepared to do anything about this matter?"

That's the question that's being asked by constituent after constituent in my riding of Dufferin-Peel, and I'm certain it's being asked by constituents to members on the government side and members in the opposition, the fact that we're standing by watching people sink lower and lower in terms of the standard of living.

I'm totally opposed to Bill 138, as are members of the Progressive Conservative caucus. Any increase of taxes at this time, in a recessionary time, is certainly untenable, and I would strongly recommend that the government change its mind and vote down this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Wiseman: I sat here this afternoon listening to a

Tory talking about how concerned they are about business and the business climate in the province. I had to hold my breath, because I could not believe what they were saying.

The myth out there is that the Tories are friendly to business. Let's take a look at some of the facts about what the Tory government in Ottawa was able to give us over its tenure as an example of what Tories do when they get power.

In 1991, this business-friendly party increased unemployment insurance rates by 7% at the time when the provincial government of Ontario was putting about $700 million into the anti-recession package to put people back to work. In fact, what this Tory party did was suck all the money out of Ontario that the Ontario government was putting into job creation. They sucked it out with this increase in the unemployment insurance.

Let's take another look at this Tory business-friendly party that increased the interest rates in 1987 to about 15%, jacked the dollar up from 72.5 cents to 89 cents, practically destroyed the export market for our businesses in this province. Not in my wildest socialist nightmare would I have thought that I would have done that, but the Tories did that; the Tory business-friendly party did that.

They changed the Bank Act, Bill C-19. They changed the Bank Act, which now allows the banks to pull lines of credit, to do in small businesses on a regular basis and give no support to them whatsoever. If this is an example of Tory support for small business, I think the businesses out there better stick with the socialists because we're a lot more sympathetic to them than that party is and than that party has shown over the years.

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): Thank you for allowing me to have a few comments. I was interested most particularly in the member's speech on taxes on auto insurance premiums, because what that really speaks to is the nerve that this government has in making sure that it gets the very essential elements for people's everyday living.

In my part of the province, in all parts of this province, we must have transportation, and most people have cars or trucks or some type of motor vehicle. If you expect to drive it legally on the streets and roads of this province, you have to have insurance. When you have to buy insurance, the price that you have to pay is the price you have to pay plus 8% for the federal government. There is no discretion. You must pay the price.

Mr Laughren, the Minister of Finance, and the rest of the people have locked in on this as one of those areas that is fail-safe with respect to raising money from those people who must drive vehicles: farmers, seniors, young people, middle-aged people, employed people, unemployed people. Anybody who gets around in this province by use of a private motor vehicle has to pay the price.

That, to me, is a sign that this government has gone the wrong way, in forcing people to increase the cost of doing business: Force the people to increase the cost of being able to go from their homes to the grocery stores, force the people to pay the government a toll every time they step in their automobile. If there is anything more cynical than that, I don't know what it is.

When we were there, we removed that premium tax and some people yelled and screamed that it was the wrong thing to do. I'll tell you, it was the right thing because it reduced the cost of auto insurance. Now these people have put it back on.

Mr Stockwell: I'd like to pick up on the theme with respect to the insurance. We know full well the backtracking this government did with respect to publicly run auto insurance and the fallout from that. There have been a succession of decisions made by this government that were particularly offensive I think to the rank-and-file New Democrats.

Probably it has a lot to do and has related very directly to the fact they get 6% and 7% in by-elections. Not so much that they've alienated the groups that really weren't supporters of theirs, but the bedrock community that used to support them, the socialists who used to support them, have been directly affected or directly offended by some of the kinds of decisions that have come forward.

Auto insurance is one, gambling is another. These kinds of things really upset the public, or specifically the socialists' bedrock support. That's why, when you go to Don Mills or Victoria-Haliburton or any of these ridings where we have by-elections, you're getting like 6% of the vote.

Having said that, I want to comment on the insurance issue. I am glad they didn't go for government-run auto insurance. If they did, can you imagine the unemployment rates we'd be looking at today if all those people in the auto insurance industry were put out of work? It would have been terrible. It was a bad decision. It was a bad idea.

Hon Bud Wildman (Minister of Environment and Energy and Minister Responsible for Native Affairs): That's why we decided—

Mr Stockwell: Oh, I applaud you for not doing it. I never believed in it, I wouldn't have campaigned on it and I'm glad you saw the light once you were in government. Much of what Mr Wiseman had to say always can be attributed back to what he was mouthing off about when he campaigned and is directly different to what he has done in government.

But I will say this: If a government is going to force the population to buy a product, it doesn't have any right to tax it at that point, and I say directly to this government, I find very offensive your 5% PST on insurance. If you're going to make people buy insurance to drive legally in this province, you should have no right to tax them on top of the regulation you make them buy in auto insurance. When I speak to people, that is a number one complaint: "You tell me I have to buy insurance, and then you tax me on top of the mandatory purchase of the insurance." That, to me, is unacceptable and really bad.

Mr Peter Kormos (Welland-Thorold): It's unfortunate that the issue here is being diverted from the real problem, which is the problem of the excessive cost of premiums. It's unfortunate to have to tax any commodity, including auto insurance.

Am I enthusiastic about imposing a sales tax on auto insurance? Of course not. But the fact remains, notwithstanding what Mr Stockwell would tell you, the problem is that this government didn't implement public auto insurance. The problem is that this government caved in to interests which were entirely alien to what New Democrats and their supporters had believed in for so long until the 1990 election and, I tell you, what New Democrats and their supporters continue to believe in. That is that the real solution to the issue of high premiums and exorbitant costs for drivers is, yes, a public automobile insurance system.

Indeed, daily I receive inquiries and expressions of grievance from people across the province who are confronted with the problem not only of ever-climbing premiums, but of motorcycle operators, for instance, who are simply being closed right out of the market; a regulatory system which is no more capable of keeping the insurance industry in check than it was under the Liberals or before them under the Tories; and a so-called no-fault system which continues to punish innocent victims day after day after day.

The fact is that Bill 164 is a failure, just as 68 was. The fact is that no-fault auto insurance is a great success for the insurance industry, and it's an attack on premium payers and on innocent victims. Tired old song: So be it. The fact is that the evidence is there. The problem isn't the tax; the problem is the absence of a public automobile insurance system.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Dufferin-Peel, you have two minutes.

Mr Tilson: I thank the members for responding to the comments I have. All I can say, particularly to the member for Durham West, is that I represent the riding of Dufferin-Peel in the provincial Legislature. I have no say as to what a Tory federal government's doing or what a Liberal federal government's doing.

I can tell you that all I know is that business in the province of Ontario is getting more and more difficult to undertake. There's a myriad of taxes that have been created by this government and by the previous Liberal government, taxes that people don't understand for policies they simply don't want.

Since 1985 the Liberals and the NDP have levied 65 new or increased taxes in this province, and this Bill 138 is one of them. Ontarians have absorbed $7.6 billion in new or increased taxes since 1985. That's a lot of taxes. From 1985 to 1993, personal income per capita in Ontario has increased by 53.5%, but the per capita provincial tax burden has been increased by 73.3%.

You people have the nerve to say that you're creating jobs in this province. What you're doing is, you're burying the employer. You're burying the employer by strange taxes that you've created, and Bill 138 is one of them.

In 1985, provincial tax revenues equalled 8.8% of the Ontario gross domestic product but will amount to 11.2% of our GDP this coming year. The average Ontario family paid $663 more in additional taxes in 1993 than when the NDP took office. So again, defeat this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further debate? No? If not, the member for Oxford.

Mr Sutherland: I just want to conclude the debate on this bill by saying a few things. Many of the Liberal members talked about decreasing taxes and their concerns about it. They fail to remember the fact that it was the Liberal government that increased the provincial sales tax from 7% to 8% in some of the best economic times. It was they who imposed the commercial concentration tax. It was they who imposed the tire tax. Mind you, let me say the concentration tax and the tire tax are being removed by this government.

Let me say too that with respect to when we get into committee there will be some amendments proposed, one of them related to you-brews.

I just want to comment too about what the Tory members have said about this government driving business out of the province. I look around at my fellow members sitting here, and I see where the economic activity is taking place. I see the member for Chatham-Kent, and Commercial Alcohols Inc is going to invest over $100 million for an ethanol plant. I see the member for Middlesex, and I see what Dimona Aircraft is investing in there. I know there's another plant coming to Strathroy that's going to create new jobs. I think of the $4-billion worth of investment by the auto sector in this province while this government has been in power.

It's very clear: Jobs are coming here. There are many people who do want to invest in the province of Ontario because they know we have a good workforce, because they know it is a good place to invest, they're going to get a good return, they're going to be producing good products for the worldwide market.

Mr Elston: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It's unusual for me to interrupt a member when he is speaking, but we are called to order several times when the issue at hand is not being addressed. Rather than beginning to fight the election on investment possibilities, are we not speaking about a tax measure?

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Oxford, you have the floor.

Mr Sutherland: Let me just say that the member for Bruce wants to interject. He keeps complaining that I'm not participating in debates, and now when I am, he's still not happy. Maybe he's unhappy because we are talking about the reality of what's going on in this province. Despite what the two opposition parties—doom and gloom—want to say, there are many people who want to invest in this province because they know they can get a profit, they want to employ people, and they know that this government is willing to work with them to support them in investing in this province and getting people back to work.

I look forward to when we move into committee of the whole and deal with some of the amendments on this bill. I'd like to conclude the second reading debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Mr Sutherland has moved second reading of Bill 138, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

The Deputy Speaker: Please stop the bells. "Pursuant to standing order 28(g), I request that the vote on the motion by the Honourable Floyd Laughren for second reading of Bill 138, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act, be deferred until immediately preceding orders of the day on Wednesday, April 27, 1994."

Is it the pleasure—

Mr Elston: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: We got into a real problem here on another occasion when people raced up to the Speaker's chair and we were told, "Don't hurry, don't panic." Now what you have done is you have accepted one. We've asked for the deferral not to occur at routine proceedings but to have the matter deferred to a time which is specified in our request, which is 4:15 pm of the clock.

1730

It is, unless you are changing your mind or the mind of the Chair from a previous event, not dignified to race to try to beat somebody else to the Chair so that we can get precedence. If you have accepted theirs but are not accepting ours, I want to know the directions as to how you determine which of these deferrals is to be acceptable. Could you please advise me how you're going to deal with that issue of difference?

The Deputy Speaker: I will answer his point of order first. I agree it was not a nice sight when this happened the last time. At the same time, I must recognize that the first one that reached me was this gentleman and I accepted it as such. You didn't come both at the same time. But that's my ruling.

Mr Elston: So we have to race. We were misadvised.

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It's standing order 28(g) that the whip refers to in the motion to defer, is that correct?

The Deputy Speaker: That's correct.

Mr Stockwell: Standing order 28(g), as I read it, says: "During the ringing of division bells as provided in clause (f),"—I want to be very clear on this because it is somewhat technical—"the vote may be deferred at the request of any chief whip of a recognized party in the House. The Speaker shall then defer the taking of the vote to a specified time..."

"A specified time," in my mind, is 4:15, 6 o'clock, 5:30, whatever. But "a specified time" is not after routine proceedings, because there's nothing specific about the time routine proceedings will end. So therefore we don't have a specified time as to when the vote will take place other than after routine proceedings. Now, as I read the standing orders, it says very clearly "a specified time." That doesn't say "around" or "near" or "close to"; it says a time. If we don't have a time, ideally, of 3:15 or 3:30, then it doesn't conform to the standing orders.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. I'm sure that all the members in the House understand that the Speaker has to rely on the regulations, on the procedures, and this is what I'm doing. It says "4:15." May I advise you that if you feel that it does create some problems, some difficulties for you, members, all that you have to do is refer it to the committee on the Legislative Assembly and bring in a change. That is your prerogative. That is the end of the point of order. Please, let's not start a debate.

Mr Elston: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: When we had the big problem before with three members rushing to the Chair, your directions to this House were that everybody should proceed with decorum and present their material to the Chair.

It turns out that the member for Huron was not even in his seat. He was occupying, out of order, a seat that is generally available to the member for Wentworth North. He sidles up to your chair and walks up and presents you with his document before I could move from my seat, where I am sitting, to produce it to you in some manner of decorum, as you instructed us, as you led us to believe that when we were presided over by the Chair that we should give you, in turn, the requests for the vote and you would consider them. It wasn't first come, first served. If that in fact was your instruction, then we would have all raced to the Chair to be there first. You said, "Don't do that; that will not be the way that this House is operated."

Having said that, can you now advise us, sir, that you will accept none other than the first to reach you? In which case, the next time there is a deferred vote to be taken, there will be three people hovering around the Chair so that they can get their position first on the dais.

Second point: Mr Speaker, I want to ask you this question. In terms of the deferral of the vote, the idea of the standing order, which has been enumerated, which has been spoken about by my friend the member for Etobicoke West, was the fact that it is to be deferred to a time which is reasonable for all the parties in the House; it is not, as a result, it seems to me, to have the government party get its way to defer it to its time period without any regard whatsoever for the convenience of the minority.

I happen to be a member of the Liberal Party of Ontario, which is, with the Conservative Party, the minority in this House. We have a right to have it deferred to a time which is reasonable for our considerations. We have fewer members and we ought to be able to marshall them to a specific time. In this case I have requested 4:15 because that fits not only with the needs of our particular party to have our members back here to defeat this tax bill, but it also happens to comply with the time which is reasonable for the people in the Conservative Party.

It is not open to the Chair, in my view, to make a decision, because the government gave you their deferral first, to make us vote on their time frame because it is convenient for them. In fact, the House must arrange for a time which is convenient to all of us so that the members can be here to vote.

I ask you to clearly identify—

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. Please give a chance to the Chair to listen attentively to what is being said.

Hon Shelley Martel (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): Mr Speaker, on the same point, if I might, I would like to raise a couple of points. First of all, there is nothing in the standing orders that says that members cannot be sitting in other than their own seat when they put in a deferral motion. Let's be clear about that. In this case, the member was not sitting in his seat, but there is nothing in the rules that says he or she has to be to submit a deferral motion.

Second, with respect to the comments made by the member for Etobicoke West, if anyone in this House cares to look over at least the last three years where we have put in deferral motions, they will see very clearly that on numerous occasions the deferral slip has only said "after routine proceedings."

We have operated in this House on that basis at least since I was the House leader, which was three years ago. There is no need for the deferral slip to have any specific time.

Third, I think it's incumbent on all members of the House to be here when there are votes. That is the way we have tried to operate in this House, and I would hope the members of the opposition will have their members here, as we will try to, at a time after routine proceedings tomorrow.

Finally, Mr Speaker, I think you have already ruled with respect to this motion and I would suggest we should probably get on with the business of this House.

Mr Norman W. Sterling (Carleton): In reading section 28(g), I think it was created to allow some accommodation for a party, particularly on an afternoon when it was not able to muster its troops, to allow the division bells to be rung at a later time so that more people in the Legislature could attend and vote on it.

There are two points. First is that perhaps you dismissed the argument of the member for Etobicoke West prematurely in terms of saying it should be a definite time, ie, that it should be 3 o'clock, 4:15, 5:15 or whatever, rather than a time within the legislative process which may take place tomorrow.

As I understand it, the way the government request has been put to you, it is a matter of a point within the proceedings. Therefore, I have no idea, as a member of this Legislature, whether the vote is going to take place at 2:45 tomorrow afternoon, whether it's going to take place at 3:15 or is going to take place at 4 o'clock tomorrow. It depends how long we take tomorrow afternoon with regard to when that part of the process will occur.

I think the whole idea within the standing order was that if a party, and all three parties can do this through their whip—

Interjections.

Mr Sterling: There's really not much sense in me making a statement until you're paying attention.

As I was saying, I think the object of the rule is to let all members of this Legislature know when they must be ready to come and vote in this Legislature. Therefore, the government giving you a notice that it's going to occur some time during the process of tomorrow afternoon's hearing isn't really adequate. I do not know whether the vote is going to take place at 2:45 or 3:45. The whole purpose of the deferral is to give me notice, as an individual member, that that is in fact happening.

1740

The other part which I think you should perhaps consider, Mr Speaker, or the Speaker should consider, is that if you read section 28(g), it says:

"The Speaker shall then defer the taking of the vote to a specified time, but not later than 6 pm on the next sessional day, at which time the bells shall be rung for not more than five minutes."

I contend that if the government chooses to defer the vote on a bill—in fact, if any whip defers the vote—if there is a disparity about when tomorrow the various members of this Legislature want that vote to take place—in other words, the whip of the governing party says one time, the whip of the Liberal Party says one time or the whip of my party says another time—in reading the specific standing order, Mr Speaker, if you had to resolve the dispute, I would say what you should really do is take the latest time which is put forward by any whip in this Legislature.

Therefore, if they cannot come together, then it should come as close to 6 pm as possible. In other words, if one of the parties wants it delayed to five minutes to 6, that would be the time you would choose.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay, thank you. Please take your seat.

I believe I've been patient enough and I've listened to all the arguments. You are bringing good arguments. It's obviously a problem, and it is not for me to decide how it should be solved. It should be solved by the House leaders. Please get together and try to arrive at a decision. My first—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The first document I received was from the member for Huron, who obviously was not sitting in his place. That is a mistake, perhaps, that the Chair may have made. Had there been two people coming at the same time, if you look at the distance, the first one who would have arrived would have been the member for Bruce.

There is a problem, there is a difficulty, there is an issue that you should decide. My ruling has been this one here, and I will abide by this one.

Mr Stockwell: What about the ruling on the timing?

The Deputy Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: Motion for second reading, Bill 110, An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act.

The Deputy Speaker: Mr Turnbull had the floor the last time.

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I didn't hear your ruling with respect to 28(g). I didn't hear your ruling, maybe because the member for Lambton was wailing.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The member for Etobicoke West, please take your chair. My ruling has been made.

Mr Stockwell: What is your ruling?

The Deputy Speaker: My ruling I have just told you. Let me not repeat this. I've asked for orders of the day. The member for York Mills now has the floor.

Mr Stockwell: Not on the race for the chair on 28(g). You didn't rule on it.

Interjections.

Mr Stockwell: If you're going to rule against it, rule against it. Just rule.

Mr Sterling: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Surely every member of this Legislature has the right to raise points of order in this Legislature and demand of the Speaker that he either rule against or for his particular argument. That is what the member for Etobicoke West is asking you.

Mr Gary Carr (Oakville South): On the timing.

Mr Sterling: On the timing.

The Deputy Speaker: I apologize that perhaps I did not express my opinion as clearly as I should. Let me repeat it again. I've said very clearly that the first document I have received is the one I consider, and that's the one that was brought to me by the member for Huron. That is my ruling; that is my decision.

Orders of the day.

Mr Stockwell: That's not my point of order. This is nuts.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for York Mills, please, you have the floor.

Mr Elston: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would ask that you review the advice you gave this House the last time there were multiple deferral notices which were delivered to you at the chair. I think you instructed the House that there would not be any requirement for any racing of these things, that you would not be giving any particular precedence to the first received.

If you are changing that ruling, if you are changing that advice, then you owe us an explanation as to when the Chair decided that it was not necessary for us to race to your chair. Had I known the first to be received would be the only one that would be at all decided upon, I would have gone and stood right directly in front of your chair at the time you called for the bells. That means that we were led to believe we didn't have to be the first document received.

If you could, sir, review the advice that you gave to this House and explain to us when and why you changed your advice, then I would be much more content.

The Deputy Speaker: If it is agreeable to the House, I certainly will look into it and report back to the House.

Mr Elston: You will advise us.

The Deputy Speaker: I will do so. I will advise you accordingly.

We have now gone through orders of the day and I will now recognize the member for—

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: Please.

Mr Stockwell: Mr Speaker, I'm asking that you review the Hansard from what was requested today, because my point of order had nothing to do with the people running up and giving you a piece of paper. That's all you've ruled on. My point of order had everything to do with whether or not "after routine proceedings" was considered a specified time. That was my request on a point of order.

I've not heard your ruling. I've not heard you address my ruling. Three times I've heard you address the ruling of racing to your chair. I understand your ruling. I accept that ruling. All I'm looking for is a ruling on whether "after routine proceedings" is a specified time. I always thought a specified time was a period of time on the clock that we look up at here: 3:30, 4:30. That's a specified time. "Routine proceedings" is not specified at all.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Please let's make sure we settle this once and for all. It has been the practice in the past where it was indicated the day only. That was the practice. Obviously—

Mr Elston: Mr Speaker, on that issue, sir, it says, particular the standing order, the day has nothing to do with it. There is no obligation except that the Chair must accept a deferral no later than the following sitting day by 6. That's not the specified time that we're worried about here, sir, because the standing orders clearly govern that issue. It is "specified time," ie, on the clock, in terms of the vote. I think that you really have misinterpreted the rule in that regard.

Hon Miss Martel: Point of order, Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Yes, I will recognize you afterwards. I will recognize you. Please take your chair.

It says in the standing order "a specified time." It doesn't say the hour. It says "a specified time." At the request of the member for Bruce, I said that I will advise you accordingly. I will advise you as to why the Chair indicated what I just said. So we've called orders of the day. I will now ask the member for York Mills to please debate the bill.

EMPLOYER HEALTH TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT LA LOI
SUR L'IMPÔT PRÉLEVÉ SUR LES EMPLOYEURS
RELATIF AUX SERVICES DE SANTÉ

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act / Projet de loi 110, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'impôt prélevé sur les employeurs relatif aux services de santé et la Loi sur les accident du travail.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): When I last was speaking to this bill, Bill 110, the Employer Health Tax Amendment Act, I was reflecting on the job-killing aspect of this bill.

The fundamental question that we have to ask ourselves is, how do we fund health care? That's a very problematic question, one which throughout the world many governments have struggled with, and there can be little doubt that we have a problem in Ontario. The health care system in this province is in decline. It's widely accepted that the health care system is in decline.

I want to reflect back on the last election when Mr Rae, then Leader of the Opposition, now the Premier of this province, promised nurses an increase in pay. The interesting thing was that here was one of the better promises that they made in the election.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Did they give them the money?

Mr Turnbull: Well, they gave them some of the money, but then they took their jobs away. If one were to go and ask those nurses who are out of work today, I suspect the nurses would sooner have less pay and a job than no job, but that seems to be the path of this government.

It seems that, to a great extent—we're losing the Chair. If you want to adjourn the House and debate this point of order, perhaps you might want to do that; I'm quite amenable.

The NDP government used to make a lot of statements about how they were going to improve health care, but what have they done? They have strangled the health care system in this province. The government would have you believe that in point of fact they have done some very brave things to the health care system, but what have they done? They've closed hospital wards.

Hospitals have responded by saying there are ways we can address these problems. We recognize that the government has a fiscal problem. What about allowing us to maintain those wards in an open state and take in paying customers from the US? The government says, "No, no, you mustn't do that, because that might lead to a two-tier health care system."

The fact is that we have a two-tier health care system. The fact is that if children of members of the government fall ill, I suspect they will have access to all of the technology that is needed. Instead, when the ordinary citizens of this province have a problem, they go on endless waiting lists. People with cancer are told they have to wait for treatment.

This is while we have wards closed down and we have nurses out of work. But the government, because it is so tied to its ideology, won't allow the hospitals to open up those wards and take in paying customers from the US to somewhat help the strains on the health care system. The fact is, as I said, we have a two-tier health care system.

Affluent residents from Ontario who need perhaps a magnetic resonance imaging procedure, who cannot get into a program in Ontario, go to the US. Meanwhile, we have the machines standing doing nothing late at night, in the early morning and overnight. The interesting thing is that we now have a situation in this province that vets go to hospitals and use their equipment on animals in those off hours. The government won't allow paying customers to use that equipment. Oh, that would be bad.

It's fine to let a dog in and to do the procedures in the hospitals using equipment the taxpayers have paid for, that's fine; and it's fine that the affluent residents of this province can go to the US and use the magnetic resonance equipment in the US, which they can have access to in a matter of a couple of days, but don't you dare allow hospitals to charge people to have access to those machines.

It is absolutely incomprehensible and it is just a perfect example of a government that is populated with people who have never managed anything in their lives. The problems are manifesting themselves everywhere in the economy, but particularly in the health care system.

The taxpayers of this province are willing to help. In fact, during the summer of 1993, in my regular newsletter to constituents, I asked a series of questions. One of the questions I asked was: "Would you accept user fees for health services, for example, a $10 charge for a visit to an emergency ward of a hospital?" Guess what? Seventy-four per cent of the respondents said yes. Only 25% said no and there was 1% undecided.

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): How many were there?

Mr Turnbull: I hear heckling from across the floor. The question is, how many responded? A very large number of people responded. I had some 600-odd responses, which is an unusually large response to a mailout survey.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Order. The member for Chatham, please.

Mr Turnbull: The problem is that when we talk about what the people of Ontario are telling us, the government doesn't like it. We have warned over and over again as to the serious nature of the employer health tax in terms of being a job killer.

I just refer back to a news release, and this is dated December 14, 1989. It was put out by Andy Brandt, the interim leader of the Conservative Party. They had done a survey at the time with respect to the health tax. It reads, "Over 63% of employers who responded to a survey on the employer health tax agreed this new payroll tax would hinder and impair job creation in Ontario," says Andy Brandt, leader of the Ontario Progressive Party."

It goes on to say: "Given that our economy is slowing down, I find it incredible that the Liberal government can go ahead with a new payroll tax that its own officials warn will cost jobs in this province," Brandt says. "With that kind of lack of awareness of our economic situation, this government is risking pushing Ontario into a recession instead of an economic slowdown."

Indeed, we have seen the results, partly as a result of the world recession, partly as a result of actions taken by this government and partly as a result of the employer health tax put forward by the Liberal government at the time.

In a presentation made by Ted Mallett, who is a senior economist with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, in February 1994, he stated: "Payroll taxes have become a common method of source"—I guess he meant common source—"of government revenues during the past number of years. Governments wishing to avoid public anger when searching for revenues have relied on payroll taxes to put more of the burden on business operators. The burden of payroll taxes tends to fall most heavily on labour-intensive businesses or those operating at low or negative profit margins. Considering that small and developing companies tend to fit these descriptions, payroll taxes are acting as a brake on business development and job creation." That is the fundamental problem.

We know that we have to revitalize the way that we fund health care and we know that in fact this present government has been strangling many aspects of health care.

In a survey that my party has just put out in connection with the Mike Harris task force on creating jobs in the small business sector, we had a survey of 19,500 businesses—

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Is a quorum present?

The Deputy Speaker: It is 6 of the clock, but if you want to bear with me for a minute, please.

Mr Turnbull: It being 6 of the clock, I'll adjourn debate, and it means that, I believe, I still have some seven minutes left on the clock when we continue.

The Deputy Speaker: I have reviewed the case that you brought to my attention, and I must point out that the letter that was brought to me by the member for Huron was signed by the member for Huron and should've been signed by the whip.

Interjection: He is a whip.

The Deputy Speaker: It should've been signed by the chief whip. Therefore, I have no other alternative than to recognize the notice that was brought to me by the member for Bruce.

It being 6 of the clock—

Hon Shelley Martel (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I might have a copy of the motion that was put forward. It was my understanding, not only in this case but in others when the governing party has put forward the notice for deferral, that these have been signed by the acting whip for the day in the assembly. In this case, the member for Huron was acting in the capacity of whip on behalf of the whip and, as such, he has signed his name to this. I suspect, if the table were to look at other motions that have been put forward by the government and accepted by the Speaker, they will see that this has been similar practice to what we have done in the past. I would ask the Speaker if he would have the table review this matter, review the other motions that have been put forward by acting whips and get back to this House tomorrow on the ruling.

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The rules are very clear, though, and the rules state that the motion for deferral of a vote must be signed by the whip. It can't be signed by anyone else, not the deputy whip or anyone else, so I would ask you, Mr Speaker, to—

The Deputy Speaker: Please, I just want to let you know that I will look at it again. Please. This is a complex issue. Obviously, there is a problem—

Mr Stockwell: On a point of order—

The Deputy Speaker: No more points of order, please. It's past 6 of the clock.

It being past 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock tomorrow afternoon.

The House adjourned at 1802.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

VIOLENCE

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): Communities across Ontario have been shocked and frightened in the last few years by increasingly random acts of violence which defy our comprehension and challenge our tolerance.

We've now reached a point where action must be taken, concerted action by all three parties in this House, by all levels of government, by every community, by parents, by teachers, by everyone, because we all have a stake in this society and we are all part of the solution.

I should not have to remind this House that violence in our communities is a non-partisan issue. My leader, Lyn Mcleod, recently proposed a non-partisan approach to this problem. This is not the time to play political games. We have absolutely nothing to gain in this way.

Collaboration is essential and we can find a common ground upon which to launch new initiatives, initiatives that would reassert respect for human life, for the dignity of all individuals and for private and public property.

We do not want law and order at any price, yet we can no longer tolerate random acts of violence. To implement long-term solutions, we must attack the roots of crime, address the multiple social and economic causes of crime. We cannot afford Band-Aid solutions. Greater control over guns and bullets is a good starting point.

Let's work together on this issue. Let's do something.

EDUCATION PROGRAM EVALUATION

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): Fifty-five thousand 13- and 16-year-olds randomly selected from English and French public and separate schools around the country are participating in the first national test in reading and writing launched by the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada.

The purpose of the school achievement indicators program is to collect information that will help determine how effective our education systems are in relation to Canada-wide standards.

In 1991, the Minister of Education stated that the government would not participate in the national testing, stating that tests did not reflect Ontario's curriculum or demographic profile. This decision was almost universally condemned in newspaper editorials across the province, and by parents and by educators. This decision was made at a time when the public was demanding more accountability from our education system.

Our party vigorously, strongly supported a national testing program, and on December 10, 1991, the second

Minister of Education—with our strong urging, I might add—Mr Tony Silipo, announced that Ontario would participate in the school achievement indicators program.

Our wish today is to urge this government to develop a core curriculum for Ontario for elementary and secondary schools which sets standards for each grade level and establishes testing at regular intervals to ensure attainment of those standards. I believe that an education system that is accountable and provides excellence must be a priority for the students, the parents and the whole, entire Ontario community.

VOLUNTEERS

Mr Mike Cooper (Kitchener-Wilmot): I rise today to recognize some individuals from my region. As we all know, last week was recognized as Volunteer Week, and on April 19 I had the privilege of participating in the volunteer appreciation evening held by the Waterloo region branch of the Canadian Mental Health Association. This is the 75th anniversary of the Canadian Mental Health Association, and the association has been in the Waterloo region for 33 years.

Currently, there are over 500 volunteers in the Waterloo region, and each of these volunteers makes a very important contribution to our community. All the volunteers prove that a caring community is the answer.

In line with our government's mental health reforms, the Canadian Mental Health Association encourages community involvement, participation and maintenance. Volunteers are able to help make this a reality.

Volunteers give a very important part of themselves. They make a commitment to their community and to those they help. Volunteering is as natural a self-expression as talking.

The evening was an acknowledgement of the impact these volunteers have had on our community and all our lives. It was a pleasure to be a part of this event, and I just want to say thank you to all the volunteers. Their work, their efforts and their dedication is evident in everything they do.

The awards presented included length-of-service awards, outstanding volunteer contribution, honorary membership, as well as pins and certificates for one to seven years inclusive and for 10 years service.

These people are outstanding individuals in our community and I would like to take the opportunity to thank all our volunteers and the Waterloo region branch for their efforts in the community.

CONTAMINATED SOIL

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): The Malvern remedial project, a project jointly sponsored by the Ontario Ministry of Government Services and Energy, Mines and Resources Canada, recently announced the final stages of removing radioactive soil from McClure Crescent and nearby McLevin Avenue to a temporary site at Passmore Avenue and Tapscott Road, where the material will be stored, sorted out and shipped to a storage site in Chalk River, Ontario.

This was a commitment I made on June 19, 1985, to remove this contaminated soil from the area. In anticipating that the process may take a long time, in 1986 the Liberal government of the day purchased 40 homes that were affected. We are just months away from when the process will begin. The residents who are still there are very concerned and should be commended for their patience and endurance. They just cannot wait any longer to have that soil removed.

The efforts of Gord Laschinger, the director of real estate of Management Board, should not go unmentioned. His competence and understanding of the issue allowed the matter to be dealt with efficiently. Brad Franklin, the senior public affairs officer for the low-level radioactive waste management office, kept me informed constantly.

I'm concerned that the mayor and some councillors are having second thoughts about this. I hope they get on with it and make sure that this soil is moved immediately.

SCHOOL BUS TRANSPORTATION

Mrs Elizabeth Witmer (Waterloo North): I recently had the opportunity to meet with members of my community representing School Bus Ontario, an organization which believes that safety must be the first priority of student transportation.

There is no doubt that Ontario's present school bus transportation network, which is the result of decades of fine-tuning of regulations and policies, offers the safety and security that is expected by the students and parents of this province. The alternative to school buses is to require children to use local transportation systems. While this may be acceptable for older high school students, I share the coalition's concern about the hazards which younger children may be exposed to.

On a school bus, routes are planned around the location of students' homes and schools, eliminating the need for children to transfer buses. It is unlikely that children can get off school buses at the wrong stop. As well, on a school bus, students are not allowed to stand up.

Finally and most importantly, since children ride only with their peers on a school bus, they are safe from harassment or crime while on the bus and cannot be followed by adults intending to harm them.

Therefore this group, the School Bus Ontario coalition, has asked that in order to preserve safety and security, yet reduce total spending on student transportation, long-term restructuring of this vital public service is essential and that no further reductions of student transportation funding occur until such time as restructuring initiatives can be implemented to realize greater cost efficiencies.

I support safe transportation to and from school.

NORTHERN ECONOMY

Mr Len Wood (Cochrane North): I'd like to provide this House with an update on job creation and job sustainability in northern Ontario.

As we know, provincial government activity, in partnership with communities and the private sector, has helped to stabilize the northern economy. Overall, the government has created and maintained thousands of jobs and has developed innovative approaches to economic development. Increased training and education have helped the north develop the capacity to continue diversification and become part of the new information-based economy.

In Kapuskasing, the province facilitated the employee and community buyout of Spruce Falls Power and Paper Co, saving 800 jobs, and in Thunder Bay, the employee buyout of Provincial Papers saved 700 jobs.

Loans and loan guarantees from the province and the northern Ontario heritage fund have allowed sawmills in a number of communities to survive in the downturn of the 1990s and return to profitability.

Since 1990, there have been 31,000 jobs created and supported in northern Ontario through the various Jobs Ontario programs, youth employment and provincial investment in companies. In Cochrane North alone, our Jobs Ontario Training program has helped to create 603 long-term jobs in cooperation with the private sector. We also have two aboriginal training brokers who have created 46 jobs since they started a year ago. This particular program has created over 2,700 jobs for all of northern Ontario. The Ontario native community infrastructure program created 300 jobs since 1991.

Hydro-electric generating stations also have created a number of jobs. The Negagami-Shekak project has just got the go-ahead. It will create 123 construction jobs and 400 indirect jobs.

CAMPING FEES

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): Last Monday, Mike Harris questioned the government about its intention to start charging fees to boy scouts and girl guides using provincial parks. Harris noted that the government was so desperate that it was willing to go after six-year-old kids.

The Conservatives see this change as a new kind of user fee, yet though seemingly opposed to user fees in the parks, they are in support of user fees in other areas such as health care. The question is, what will Mike Harris do if six-year-old Bobby hurts himself while camping and has to be rushed to the local hospital? Under a Tory government, will Bobby's parents have to pay for the services of a doctor or for health care? Mike Harris says yes. Mike Harris doesn't think little Bobby should have to pay for camping, but isn't opposed to charging him to use the health care system.

Harris also noted that the campers could participate in activities around the park instead of paying daily fees, a kind of workfare. How does that work? Does little Bobby have to sign a commitment that he's going to work before they allow him into the park or do they check little Bobby's pockets to make sure he's taken out enough paper in order to allow him to leave the park?

Is this the same Mike Harris who thinks it's okay for Helle Hulgard to stay at home and collect welfare instead of working? Mike Harris wants boy scouts and girl guides to work for their campground fees, but people with good-paying jobs can quit and let the system support them.

JOB SECURITY

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): My statement is directed to the Premier and it concerns a fax I received yesterday, April 26, from a Mr Allan Deegan, vice-president, CN North America. Mr Deegan indicates that CN filed a notice of intent yesterday with the National Transportation Agency of Canada to cease rail operations on the Newmarket subdivision, Bradford to Washago, and on the Midland subdivision, Orillia to Uthoff.

In 90 days or less, following the filing of the notice of intent, Mr Deegan said CN will formally apply for permission to abandon these lines. He said CN invited proposals from short-line operators for five lines in Ontario including the Barrie-Collingwood and Midland-Uthoff lines. Mr Deegan said, and I quote, "Potential bidders withdrew from this process when changes to the Ontario Labour Relations Act were enacted." Thousands of jobs will disappear in Ontario because of the NDP government's job-killing labour bill, Bill 40.

Premier, you pledged that this session of the Legislature would be about "jobs, jobs, jobs." The word "jobs" came out of your mouth dozens of times during your recent speech to the NDP provincial council.

Premier, I urge you to table and support the private member's bill introduced by my colleague from Simcoe West, which amends the successor rights portion that makes it uneconomical for short-line operators to take over abandoned rail lines. Ensure that workers can keep their jobs, jobs, jobs. Your Minister of Jobs has said no to jobs.

LES COOK

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): I rise today to pay tribute to Les Cook, a former mayor of the city of Woodstock who passed away last week.

Les Cook dedicated his life to public service. He spent a career with Canada Post before retiring in 1985 as a postal supervisor. He spent his spare time driving a school bus for the Oxford County Board of Education.

But as importantly, he believed strongly in involving himself in local politics. For 21 years, Les represented his neighbours and friends at city hall as a city and county councillor, plus three terms as mayor. He retired from the political scene in 1991 but remained an ardent observer. Often you would see letters to the editor in the local paper from Les as he offered his views on a problem.

But Les's contribution to his community and country stretch back further than his terms in public office. He spent more than six years overseas with the Royal Canadian Regiment and the Canadian Provost Corp during the Second World War. Upon his return, he remained a faithful member of the Royal Canadian Legion, Branch 55, Woodstock, and for many years was the sergeant of the colour party.

Tributes to Les poured in from the many people who had served with him over the years. They painted a picture of a tireless worker, dedicated to doing his best in the public interest.

Les Cook's contributions to his community were many and they will not soon be forgotten.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Yesterday, during the division bells on second reading of Bill 138, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act, the Speaker received two letters of deferral pursuant to standing order 28(g). The Speaker, according to practice, accepted the first letter he received as the prevailing one. Following this, several members rose on points of order as to the decision that had been made.

Essentially two points were raised. The first was that the Speaker should not accept the first letter received but should adopt some other method of determining acceptability. The second point raised dealt with the question of what the words "specified time" are interpreted to mean in the standing order. I will address both of these points shortly.

Before I do that, however, I want to return to the further events of yesterday. Members will recall that it came to the attention of the Speaker that the first deferral letter received did not meet the requirements set out in standing order 28(g), which states:

"During the ringing of division bells as provided in clause (f), the vote may be deferred at the request of any chief whip of a recognized party in the House."

While it is true that on at least one previous occasion a deferral letter signed by a member other than the chief whip of a recognized party was accepted, it is my view that standing order 28(g) is very clear and can only be interpreted to allow acceptance of a deferral letter from the chief whip of a recognized party. I therefore have no alternative but to find that the deferral letter received yesterday from the acting government whip is out of order and cannot be accepted. The vote on the question of second reading of Bill 138 is accordingly deferred until 4:15 pm today as requested in the deferral letter signed by the chief whip of the official opposition pursuant to standing order 28(g).

Turning now to the point raised with respect to the words "specified time" in standing order 28(g), I can only say that in this House for the purposes of this standing order, "specified time" has consistently been interpreted to mean either a time prescribed by the clock or a time in the proceedings of the House such as "immediately following routine proceedings" or "immediately prior to orders of the day."

1350

I now wish to address the question of which deferral letter is to be accepted by the Speaker when more than one is received. It has been our practice in this House that the Speaker accepts the first deferral letter received. It is obvious to me from the events of yesterday, a close reading of standing order 28(g) and previous occurrences in this House that this practice does not encourage dignity or preserve decorum appropriate to this chamber.

It is clear that a change is required, and it is my view that such changes are best made by consultation with members from all parties. Therefore, pursuant to standing order 106(i), I am referring this question to the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly for its consideration and expeditious report.

Members should be fully aware that should circumstances similar to the events of yesterday occur before the committee makes its report, the Speaker will determine the method of selecting the prevailing deferral letter.

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Thank you very much for your presentation, sir. On the issue of when to choose the properly filed deferral notice, I commented yesterday, and it was taken as notice by the then Speaker, that the member who initiated the delivery of the government's notice of deferral was not in his own place. In fact, if he had risen in his place to initiate a speech or an intervention, he would have been ruled out of order and not recognized.

It is my view, sir, that when someone who initiates any event, any legal proceeding in this House, does so from a position or place of seating other than his own, he should be treated in exactly the same way as though he were intervening orally in the proceedings of the day: called to order, sent back to his seat, and then asked to proceed with whatever legal intervention in the proceeding he or she may wish to make.

I think that would have also solved some of our problem yesterday. It probably would not have eliminated the need for a foot race, because that eventually was all that we are now left with: The acceptance of the first filed is now obviously the way things will be until the House, through its Legislative Assembly committee, decides.

For me, we thought we had a decision taken earlier by a previous Speaker. In fact, I looked up the date and everything, and it was the sense I had that maybe there was to be a different manner of delivering our notices of deferral.

In any event, I think it is important for you to take notice of the fact that all of the proceedings, however or whenever they are to occur under the auspices of the standing orders, must be so done and conducted in accordance with order in the House. If somebody pretends they are to be delivering some message to your chair in accordance with 28(g), they should do so from their own place and not, as I suggested might happen from here on in, having a bunch of people camped out on the dais in order to be first on your list. I think you should make some decision with respect to that. I don't think you have any option but to declare that people can only initiate interventions here from their own seats, for instance.

I think you should be very clear that perhaps there is something that should be worked on in relation to what is most convenient for all of the people. I rose yesterday and intervened by saying that just because the government got its deferral notice there first meant that we as the minority then had to put up with whatever the government instructed us. That to me is not the way the deferral notice is to work. The deferral notice is supposed to mean—well, it's not convenient for people now, but it should not be made less convenient for the rest of us just because the government was able to get its to you in time.

So there are several issues of which I think you should take note.

Preliminarily, I think you should declare that no one can initiate a proceeding here when he or she is out of order, that they be called to order and dispatched back to their place to initiate the event from their place of order. I think that, as a preliminary matter, might help some things be resolved.

I think you should also take into consideration that where there is a dispute as to timing of votes which are important—this is a tax bill; this is a confidence item. It's not likely that the matter will be defeated by the few numbers of the opposition who now occupy this place, but because it is a confidence matter, I think it is imperative that if there's a disagreement as to time, perhaps the convening of a meeting of House leaders should be taken so we can work on the appropriate time so that the best result, in the sense of the House being most highly attended, can be arranged.

Those two points in particular I think are significant for us at this point.

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): Just very briefly on the issue of specified time, while I appreciate that in the past there have been letters that have suggested that a deferred vote be held in accordance with a certain spot in our business sheet, I would suggest to you, having spoken to the member for Carleton yesterday, who was the representative from our party who helped draft the change in the standing orders, that "specified time" was never intended by the draftspeople in all three parties of this Legislature to refer to anything other than a specified time; that is, a time on the clock.

If someone were to say, "What time is it now?" if you're walking down the street or here, nobody would say, "Oh, it's before orders of the day." They would say, "It is three minutes to 2." It seems to make abundant sense to me. The government doesn't seem to agree. Maybe when they have their cabinet meetings or their caucus meetings, they say: "It'll be on Tuesday before orders of the day. That's when you're supposed to come to caucus." Our caucus says, "It's Tuesday morning at 10 am." I don't know how the New Democratic Party works on that principle. It's kind of vague and it's certainly not specified and it's certainly not a time.

I would suggest to you, Mr Speaker, that you might want to refer the issue of "specified time" to the Legislative Assembly committee as well.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): On the point you've ruled on in terms of specified time and that the House leader for the third party has raised, the House leader for the third party stands in his place and contradicts himself.

The opposition parties in this House have delivered deferral notices to the Chair to conduct votes "immediately after routine proceedings." Both the opposition parties have done that to the government. So it is the precedent of this House—

Mr Eves: We are in agreement: We have done that. We're not talking about standing order 28(g).

Hon Mr Charlton: No, no. When this issue originally arose here last fall, it was because the opposition parties intentionally deferred a vote until after routine proceedings, not to a specified time, and that caused the government to lose the afternoon on a particular matter. The precedents in this House for the last three years have seen the House defer votes on a regular basis to after routine proceedings. The procedure the government used yesterday, as you've set out in your ruling, Mr Speaker, is no different from that.

On the other matters raised by the House leader for the official opposition, Mr Speaker, I look forward to hearing your comments on them because they are probably legitimate questions that should be resolved.

Mr Elston: One other point: I did forget to raise one other issue with you, sir, and that is the question of the business of the day. We have a precise listing of what goes on here. In fact, it's delivered to us each day. What all this is about is exactly as the member for Hamilton Mountain has indicated: It is the struggle over when you get a full day's work so that time allocation motions will be seen to be valid in this place.

The whole reason the decision has been taken to refer this to a time that is before orders of the day is so that once orders of the day are called, he can get a full afternoon's debate on 120, thereby fulfilling his requirements under his time allocation motion.

This is one of those very fine-line issues. In fact, in this place, if we were to go through this with someone who has nothing in terms of knowledge of how this place works, we would divide our day down into routine proceedings and orders of the day. What is happening now, of course, is that we are trying to create some kind of twilight zone. The deferred vote is not a routine proceeding and the government wishes it not to be an order of the day, yet, legitimately, if we deal with this and we take it off our Orders and Notices, it has been the dealing with of an order. Basically, we can't have it two ways. It can't be dealing with an order and not dealing with an order. It may be that this will help us deal with some of the issues, but in my view, we cannot come to this place and say we have routine proceedings and orders of the day, and another thing called "convenience zone" so that whatever must be done can be done.

From my point of view, Mr Speaker, it is either an order or it is not an order. If we vote on it, if we take a proceeding, it is the conducting of an order of the day. Perhaps you might think on that, because if we have a deferred vote which does get dealt with, then it seems to me that is and has to be considered an order of the day and the first item of business conducted by this place. I don't know how we can have a vote that is not an order.

Hon Mr Charlton: Mr Speaker, to the additional point which the House leader for the official opposition has raised, you've already ruled on that matter. It was ruled on last fall and we've been dealing with that question, I think, rather appropriately.

As I said earlier, I would be happy to hear your comments on the other two matters that the House leader for the official opposition has raised, because they are questions that should have some definition and some understanding for members of the House.

The Speaker: To the three House leaders, all three House leaders have spoken quite eloquently on precisely why I have referred this matter to the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly.

May I say and underscore a portion of the ruling which I made today: The spectacle of members racing to the dais with a piece of paper is unacceptable to me in terms of maintaining the appropriate dignity and decorum which this chamber deserves. While this matter is being dealt with by the Legislative Assembly committee, should there be an occasion for a deferred vote, the Chair will have a method of dealing with it that is not simply first come, first served. I trust that all members are fully aware of that.

Hon Elaine Ziemba (Minister of Citizenship and Minister Responsible for Human Rights, Disability Issues, Seniors' Issues and Race Relations): Mr Speaker, I believe we have unanimous consent to remark about the elections in South Africa.

The Speaker: Do we have unanimous agreement? Agreed.

ELECTIONS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Hon Elaine Ziemba (Minister of Citizenship and Minister Responsible for Human Rights, Disability Issues, Seniors' Issues and Race Relations): It is indeed a great honour for me to stand in my place today and speak on behalf of the government of Ontario as we rejoice and celebrate the end of apartheid, the end of discrimination and racism, and the beginning of new freedoms, and certainly today the freedom of elections in South Africa.

Apartheid was a tool in South Africa to use in the form of racism and discrimination. It dehumanized 16 million people. It prevented them from fully participating in their country and it made them live in abject poverty that we as citizens in Ontario viewed with horror.

It took away these people's right to be able to participate fully in things that we in Ontario take for granted, occasionally, such as being able to express themselves, to be able to participate fully in their choice of a political party, to be able to vote, and to be able to have a choice in decision-making in how their government should be run.

We are extremely pleased that today, as we view from here in Ontario, many of us on this side of the House have both privately and publicly expressed support for ending apartheid and making sure that we came to a point and place in time that people would be able to participate, as we do in Ontario.

We all have two vivid memories of the events which have led up to this particular day. We have seen in more recent times the Sharpeville massacre, which we mark every year as the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. There were demonstrations which were usually followed by bloody violence in Soweto township, and there were revolting conditions under which the majority of the people of South Africa lived, not just the poverty but the fact that they were dehumanized and they were unable to participate in equality and in fairness.

But then we started to see a change, in time. As we in Ontario put aside our political partisanship, we can all take pride in the fact that as Canadians, as citizens of this great province, we were able to turn the tide of events and we were able to put pressure on South Africa to end apartheid and therefore end racism and discrimination.

We participated in a boycott of South African products. We participated in rallies and demonstrations, voicing our concerns not only here in Ontario but at the United Nations. We participated in international events, putting pressure on the government of South Africa to review its practices and its policies and to bring in a free and democratic society.

More recently, the government of Ontario was also able to help in this new process. Just recently, in February, Jacob Zuma, deputy secretary-general of the ANC, who is a candidate for the position of Premier in the province of KwaZulu, Natal, and Felix Delamini, who is the principal secretary of the ANC, visited and shadowed our Premier. Not only did they shadow the Premier and see how a Premier is able to operate on a day-to-day basis, but they visited many of our ministries, participated in briefings to see how government in Ontario works, were able to view us here in the House, and were able to ask various ministries questions about how governments operate and work in a democratic society.

In addition, just recently—in fact, in the last two weeks—Ontario hosted eight public servants in training as part of an international program for South African civil servants. This mentoring program was for two weeks, whereby each person spent time with and shadowed a senior manager of a particular ministry.

This is surely an example of how Ontario has been trying to respond to the growing concern of making sure that the new democratic process will work and will continue to work. We're very pleased that we've been able to participate in this international movement to see South Africa become a democratic nation.

On this day, as we watch, we are still very concerned that we want to make sure that racism and discrimination are ended all around the world, not just in South Africa but here in Ontario as well. We wish all of our brothers and sisters in South Africa Godspeed and goodwill and we pray for them that this new process will work, and we will be there for them to make sure it does work.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): On behalf of my caucus, I am pleased to join with all members of this House in congratulating South Africa on its first multiracial elections in that nation's history.

These elections mark the beginning of the end of three centuries of apartheid, a policy of oppression, a policy that divided a nation. This is another of those days that few of us expected to see in our lifetime. Who among us would have expected to see a free Nelson Mandela campaigning to become President of South Africa?

It was wonderful this morning, on television, to watch Nelson Mandela cast that first vote and it was marvellous to see the joy in people's faces as they lined up for hours just to have that privilege of casting their first vote, and to see the woman who dressed in her finest as she went out to celebrate what for her was the greatest day of her life.

As people around the world celebrate these elections, the people of Ontario and indeed all Canadians can be especially proud of the role we have played in achieving this historic event. From Sharpeville to Soweto to the imposition of sanctions in the late 1980s, we have stood solidly behind freedom and democracy and racial equality in South Africa.

The creation of a non-racial democracy has been one of Canada's main foreign policy objectives since the 1960s, and today Ontarians and Canadians are still at the forefront. In addition to Canada's team of 12 observers, there are 58 others from non-governmental organizations in South Africa right now, helping to ensure the freeness and the fairness of the elections. We thank them for their work and for their commitment.

The road to freedom has not been an easy one for South Africa, and even today images of violence are mixed with the images of joy and the reality of celebrating a unique achievement. We know that making democracy work in South Africa is not going to be easy. As Canadians, we will continue to be there, offering our assistance, advice and encouragement so that the fledgling roots of multiracial democracy will take hold and grow strong.

Democracy in South Africa could not have been achieved without the leadership of people like Nelson Mandela who were able to inspire not just South Africans but people around the globe. I think we all remember Nelson Mandela's visit to Queen's Park three years ago, when tens of thousands of people came to the rally. I believe that said a lot about the way that Ontarians feel about the fight for freedom in South Africa.

We must also recognize the important role played by F.W. de Klerk, who heard the demands for change and who saw that apartheid was no longer viable for South Africa.

But most of all we must congratulate the people of South Africa for their tremendous resilience and perseverance and their vision of a free nation. Their struggle has been long and painful and too often tragic, but they were determined that their struggle would not be lost and they have emerged victorious.

This is a day that should make all of us stop and understand once again how precious democracy is, as we see others who have been prepared to fight for and to die for and to cherish the right to vote that we too often take for granted.

Let us hope and pray that as the voting takes place this week the people of South Africa will not be intimidated from exercising their newly won rights by those who wish to continue the violence and the hatred of the past. Whatever the outcome of these elections, we must hope that peace will prevail and that the people of South Africa will begin living in harmony, free of the fear and anguish that have gripped their nation for so long.

We extend to the people of South Africa our best wishes for success in these elections as they begin building a new country, one that, as Nelson Mandela said this morning, will bring prosperity and hope for the future.

Mr W. Donald Cousens (Markham): I'd like to thank our leader, Mike Harris, for asking me to speak on behalf of our caucus on this very important issue and would share strongly in the statements that have been made by the Leader of the Opposition and by the government.

A historic event such as the free election in South Africa will be a day that is remembered for ever. It marks the end of apartheid, the beginning of a new democracy and a fresh start for freedom and hope and a new life for the people in Africa.

The Berlin Wall was built in August 1961 and came down in November 1989, some 28 years. Yet today the walls of segregation that have been built over time are at last coming down. The 340 years of an era of dominance in South Africa that has distinguished white from coloured and white from Asian are now coming to an end.

The walls of apartheid were formally erected in 1948 and laid down a structure separating racial groups one from another and ensured no resistance to the rule by a minority.

Today the South African nation has a new Constitution, a new flag and a new democracy. The walls of prejudice are as large as any that humans can build, and yet, like the walls of Jericho, with faith and much suffering those very walls are now broken.

When you think of democracy, I remember what J.A. Corry said in 1951:

"If the democratic ideal of the supreme importance of individual personality is clearly understood and firmly held by the bulk of the people and if enough persons with an informed intelligence participate actively in democratic politics, the needed controls can probably be devised and the required caution is likely to be exercised."

With democracy there are no guarantees, only the possibility of greatness. The step towards democracy in South Africa leads us to wonder how well it will succeed; it leads us to hope that the new president will be blessed with good health, a long life and the support of the minorities; it leads us to pray for peace and happiness and harmony.

I want to share with the Legislature an experience that brought me to South Africa. Markham was one of the centres where people were voting. They were voting in Oakville and Toronto, London and Ottawa. When I arrived around 7:30, there were still four hours of people in the lineup yet to vote.

There you saw people from all over different parts of Africa. They came from Bloemfontein, Standerton, Capetown, Durban, Johannesburg and other South African communities, standing in line together, coloured, white, Asian, going up that line to do something they'd never done before.

They came from as far away as Barrie. There was a Salvation Army lieutenant from Fenelon Falls. You had a mixture of people from Scarborough, Willowdale. They were all Canadians who have dual citizenship and the chance to participate in what was going on within South Africa.

It was interesting as well to see, at the very end of the line—and members of this Legislature will be impressed at this particular fact—our own chief electoral officer, Mr Warren Bailie. Ontario's ambassador for democratic process across the world was at the end of the line making sure no one else got in if they came after the clock had stopped, when they could be there for their own historic moment to vote in the advance polls.

I saw the identification cards that people had with them, with the little K up in the right-hand corner which meant they were coloured, so if they were on a bus or in a washroom or in a restaurant or on a beach where they shouldn't have been, the police could set them apart. There they were last night, and I'd like to share some of the quotes of the people.

Mrs Sherry of Scarborough, who has lived here in Canada for 26 years, said she felt "over the moon like Bishop Tutu."

Lynton Friedman of Thornhill, 17 years in Canada, called this a "historic moment, yet scary." He didn't know what would happen.

Colin Daniels, who has lived in Markham for three years, said: "I've waited all my life to vote.... A few hours in line means nothing to me."

Natanya Shevel of Thornhill, who has been in Canada for one year, said, "It's wonderful that people who have been waiting their whole life are now taking part in this process."

Les Bulkin of Willowdale, eight years a Canadian, said:

"For myself, I am pleased that the people from South Africa are able to participate in forming the future. With the position there as volatile as it is, I am sure everyone who has left can only hope that things will work out for the country."

Fatima Ebrahim of Thornhill said:

"I am elated and excited to be able to vote. It's the first time I've ever been able to vote in a South African election. Since 1982, when I became a Canadian citizen, I have voted in all Canadian elections."

Selwyn Janit of Thornhill, who has lived in Canada for five years, said that it's the most wonderful experience because he can say he is voting for the first time without conscience.

David Marcus of Thornhill, who has lived nine years in Canada, said:

"From a South African perspective, it is appropriate that one person has one vote. From the sheer numbers, it is also appropriate for black rule. To have stability in South Africa is to have a strong government. It has been unbelievable, the brain drain from South Africa. The highly skilled and educated people who had an impact on the country have left and the leaders there now are there by default."

One final quote from Jay Dayaljee, who is classified as an Asian in South Africa but now lives in Markham as a Canadian citizen, who said:

"I saw no hope in South Africa. Botha went with the status quo and I knew there would be a power struggle created by apartheid. People need education to bring them up to a standard and to have true equality."

May I say that this gentleman, in Canada for six years, now owns his own house, has launched a successful career, has his own small business, something he could never have done in a lifetime in South Africa.

This new government will have the almost overwhelming task of dealing with the problems of homelessness, unemployment, staggering illiteracy rates in education.

But Canada has played an important role in this long journey to today's election through our sanctions, through diplomacy and through the will of the Canadian people. 1420

Today I would like to do something in this House that is rare for someone from our side of the House. I want to give special commendation to our Premier, who has on this issue stood apart as one strong voice for the people of South Africa. He is not in the House today to hear me say it, but I have to compliment him. Our party has supported him strongly in his efforts to break down these walls of prejudice and hatred.

The Civil War in the United States is a parallel to South Africa. It's a parallel to the move to democracy for a people. I'd like, then, to draw upon the words of Abraham Lincoln in the Gettysburg address of November 19, 1863:

"That this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom and that government of the people, by the people and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

May that be our prayer for South Africa.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I wish to thank the Minister of Citizenship, the honourable Leader of the Opposition and the honourable member for Markham for those very sensitive and thoughtful remarks on this important occasion.

I wish also to draw members' attention to the fact that the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, with a strong Canadian presence, has been in South Africa and remains there as election monitors, and following the election will provide post-election seminars for the newly elected members of Parliament. The efforts of your Commonwealth Parliamentary Association you can be most proud of.

ORAL QUESTIONS PUBLIC SAFETY

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My first question is for the Solicitor General. It has now been more than three weeks since the senseless shooting at the Just Desserts café crystallized the growing concern about crime and safety. Tomorrow marks three weeks since I urged that those growing concerns about crime and safety be referred to the justice committee of this Legislature so that we could address what actions we as legislators could take to help people feel safe in their homes and in their neighbourhoods. Three weeks, and we are still debating the agenda for that committee.

I recall that in May 1992, when riots in Los Angeles set off incidents of looting and rioting on Yonge Street here in Toronto, we congratulated the government that within 72 hours the government had taken action and had set up the Stephen Lewis task force. There was a sense of urgency then. But now, even with the Just Desserts killing, with the drive-by shootings in Ottawa, with people in Chatham being concerned about incidents of gang-related violence, there seems to be no sense of urgency.

My question to the minister is: Why was the government willing to act almost immediately in response to the Yonge Street riots and yet you refuse to take any action now? Why will you not deal with these concerns, today's concerns, with that same sense of urgency?

Hon David Christopherson (Solicitor General): I reject the suggestion that we haven't taken the type of serious response that the member offers. I was on my feet yesterday in response to the acting leader of the official opposition on exactly the same question and I would respond again the same. On the very day that she offered up the idea that we would talk about referring the matter to a legislative committee, I embraced the idea on behalf of the government and said we were quite prepared to talk about that.

I'm not aware at this point that there's any particular finger-pointing going on as to why there isn't agreement on the agenda. We were very close to an agreement and then some ground shifted. That is not unusual in politics, but I remain adamant that this government and my colleague the House leader are prepared to spend whatever time is necessary meeting with opposition members to put together an agenda that all three parties can live with, that would have us dealing with, in a constructive way and in a meaningful way, the role Ontario can play, recognizing, as the honourable member does, that most of the initiatives are in the hands of the federal government. They have indicated that they are planning to present a package of proposals, and we have indicated that we are prepared to receive those proposals and respond very quickly and very effectively.

Mrs McLeod: I do remember that the minister embraced my suggestion with some enthusiasm. That's why I'm so frustrated that three weeks later there is still no agreement about the agenda. I simply don't believe there is a reason to continue to stall in getting on to discuss issues and to take important action.

Yesterday the Premier accused my colleague who raised this issue in the House, my colleague the member for Renfrew North, of playing politics in continuing to raise this issue. I cannot understand how we can be accused of playing politics in raising an issue which is in the forefront of people's minds, one of their greatest concerns. I simply don't believe it is playing politics to urge this government to take immediate action on such an important issue.

I remind the minister and the government that we as legislators have an obligation to do everything possible to make people feel more safe. I urged that this issue be referred to committee because I believed we needed to take urgent action. The fact that we have not been able to agree on an agenda, that it is three weeks later, does not take away from the fact that urgent action is still needed.

We have made one proposal for a specific action to regulate ammunition sales. The police say it's a good idea, and it has widespread public support. Will you take at least this one step that could be accomplished right now and pass this bill making it more difficult to buy ammunition, for criminals to get bullets?

Hon Mr Christopherson: It really does leave one wondering whether or not the original offer and the way it was meant was truly sincere, given that what I'm hearing here is very similar to what I received last week from the Tories, and that is the candle being burned at both ends.

On the one hand, the opposition parties have specific issues they want to talk about in committee, and we are having those discussions in an attempt to reach an agenda. As far as I know, they're still happening. I haven't received any official notice that those discussions are finished and that no one is any longer interested in a legislative committee. Yet honourable members in the opposition parties rise in their place and ask: "Why aren't you taking action on the very area you've asked us to work with you on?"

With all due respect, either the opposition parties want to deal with these issues in a non-partisan legislative fashion or they don't. If you don't, then this government will move unilaterally on those issues. I have said they are good ideas. I've said we're prepared to look at them. If you don't want to talk about them in committee any more, for whatever political agenda that suits, then please rise and say so, have your House leader confirm it to our House leader, and we'll get on with doing it.

Mrs McLeod: Mr Speaker, exactly.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Mrs McLeod: That is exactly the issue. We want to deal with the issues that matter. We want this government to be urged to take action. We did not propose the referral to the committee so that we could spend three weeks negotiating what would be on the agenda, negotiating what we would be allowed to talk about. We certainly did not refer it to committee so that the minister could take whatever time was necessary to decide what he would talk about.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Mrs McLeod: The time necessary is for ever, and we are never going to get on with dealing with the issues at all. That was not the purpose of the referral to the committee. There are a whole range of actions that could be taken to restore people's sense of safety in their communities. It is quite clear that the minister has no support from the members of his cabinet or his caucus to deal with these important issues.

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Chatham-Kent, please come to order.

Interjection.

The Speaker: The member for Sarnia, please come to order.

Would the leader place her supplementary, please.

Mrs McLeod: I believe that we need to stop the endless wrangling over the agenda so that we can get on with dealing with the issues. We continue to put forward the range of actions that we believe could be taken. We have suggested and proposed legislation that restricting bullets is one example. We have called for clear directives on sentencing regarding violent crime and gun-related offences. We believe we need to deal with these issues.

We understand that the government doesn't want to deal with community policing, we understand that the leader of the third party doesn't want to deal with ammunition control, and we are concerned that if we can't agree on an agenda there will be no action at all.

Minister, will you assure us today that we will get past the wrangling and get on to action? Do I have your commitment that we can at least sit down and talk about community policing and the control of ammunition and sentencing issues?

Hon Mr Christopherson: I reiterate again, very sincerely, in the interest of trying to reach back to the offer that she originally made and the tone, this government is prepared to sit down and talk about an agenda that all three parties can agree on. Any suggestion that we haven't been prepared to do that does not reflect the history of what has happened in the last three weeks, and the honourable member is sitting right beside the person who can give her those facts if, indeed, she needs them.

If they don't want to talk about these things, then I wish they would say so. As I've said earlier, we will move on these issues. This cabinet, this caucus is committed, and has been, to the issue of public safety and we will continue to do so whether or not we get your support on how we do it.

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): On a point of personal privilege, Mr Speaker: The member has represented me as having stood in the way of a broad discussion of the topics on crime. He has suggested that we have been holding up the discussions. In fact, that is not true.

On another point of order, Mr Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Elston: —was heard to say, and I heard her perfectly clearly on this side, to call my member, the leader of our party, a fraud. I think you should ask that member for Ottawa Centre to withdraw because she is bringing into very high disrepute—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. I ask the House to come to order.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. To the member for Bruce, he raises two points. On the first one he does not have a point of privilege, which he will know, but indeed there is certainly a difference of opinion and that's quite evident.

On the second point, if there was unparliamentary language used I did not hear it. However, as is the practice, if the member identified, the member for Ottawa Centre, believes that she did use unparliamentary language, she has an opportunity to so withdraw those remarks.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): Mr Speaker, if the House leader of the official opposition believes—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —that it was unparliamentary, I withdraw it.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Because of the shouting I could not hear what the member said. It is now time for the second question.

FIRE SAFETY

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): I'll refrain from further rebuttal and come back to the issue tomorrow, because my second question is indeed for the member for Ottawa Centre, the Minister of Housing.

Minister, this afternoon your legislation legalizing basement apartments is going to be going through the final stages. This afternoon is the last chance that we have to amend this legislation. This bill, and you know it well, does nothing for the safety of tenants living in existing basement apartments and this year already we have seen three tragic fires resulting in five deaths.

My colleagues and I have put forward amendments which we believe would provide protection for tenants and would help to prevent more tragedies from occurring. You refuse to consider them. I still don't understand how you can steadfastly refuse to even consider these amendments, and one last time I ask you if you will explain to me why you refuse to take action that would clearly protect against future tragedies.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): I withdrew earlier comments about the Leader of the Opposition. However, I recall now why I felt impelled to use a word in a way that the House leader for the Liberals suggested was unparliamentary.

The tone and the accuracy of what the Leader of the Opposition is saying proves once again that they play with issues like this.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. Minister.

Hon Ms Gigantes: The Leader of the Opposition should know that the games played yesterday by the opposition mean that Bill 120 won't be dealt with this afternoon, or maybe she hasn't talked to her House leader at this time.

Further, she also knows that until apartments in houses are legal in this province, they cannot be safe. If she wishes to keep them illegal, I wish she'd be honest enough to say that.

Interjections.

The Speaker: It will be of great assistance in trying to establish an appropriate decorum in the House if language which is provocative was not used. I would ask the leader to place her supplementary.

Hon Ms Gigantes: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I truly feel that when a man representing a riding in this House expresses anger you understand that, and I hope you will understand it when a woman does.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. Would the leader place her supplementary.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: As a woman in this House, I would like to dissociate myself from the insinuations just made by the Minister of Housing.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. It was not my intention to upset anyone, but I would appreciate it if the House would come to order and if the Leader of the Opposition could now have an opportunity to place her question.

1440

Mrs McLeod: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I have no doubt that you will understand when I, as the leader of the party, who just happens also to be female, take offence that this entire debate has just occurred.

If this minister would prefer to deal with my tone rather than deal with my concern, I would then ask her to deal with the tone of the letter from the coroner who happens to be investigating one of the three basement apartment fires that resulted in deaths in the last four months.

He wrote to you, Minister, because he has great concerns that your legislation will not prevent more of these tragic events from occurring. He's telling you what we have tried to tell you and what fire chiefs from across this province have told you: that simply legalizing basement apartments will not make them safe.

Our amendments, Minister, would require existing basement apartments to be registered. They would give the municipalities the tools to ensure that existing units, those units you are about to make legal, would meet fire code requirements. That's the issue we are talking about and that's the concern we keep raising. Unless you accept our amendments before that legislation is passed, it will be too late.

The coroner pleads with you to amend the legislation before it's too late. Will you accept those amendments and will you fix that legislation before it is passed into law and tenants are left without protection?

Hon Ms Gigantes: Associated with Bill 120 are changes to the fire code which will provide for fire separations, for adequate fire alarm systems, for adequate means of escape from apartments in houses. In fact, the recommendations of more than one coroner's jury over the years have been very helpful to those officials gathered together by the fire marshal of Ontario who proposed the changes to the fire code which will come into effect with passage of Bill 120.

I will say again to the Leader of the Opposition, she has suggested that we are suggesting that passage of the bill and removal of the zoning question from discussion of safety of apartments in housing is somehow going to make every apartment safe. It will not, and what will be required is to have apartment owners and apartment dwellers know they are in a position—

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): You don't care.

The Speaker: The member for Mississauga West.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —where the apartments are no longer considered illegal because of zoning and they are in a position to seek help to bring apartments up to standard. That is the only way we are going to have safety, and to insist that we pass from a situation where zoning makes them illegal to one where lack of registration makes them illegal does not help, and the Leader of the Opposition knows that.

Mrs McLeod: This might once have begun as a debate about zoning; it is now a debate about safety, and I cannot make this minister understand that.

Minister, last year alone, 30% of basement fires just in Mississauga involved basement apartments. It is the people in those situations, living in those existing units, who are going to be left vulnerable when you pass your legislation. They are left unprotected.

This is not about politics. This is about fire chiefs who want to prevent disastrous accidents from occurring. This is about a coroner who is investigating a recent death and who says to you that he doesn't believe your law will prevent another one from occurring. That's what this is about. Our amendments are simple. They're simple to implement. We want to see a registry for existing units. We want municipalities to have the power to ensure that those existing units meet the fire code requirements.

If you will not pass these amendments, if it's because they come from an opposition party, even though these are broadly supported, even though a coroner is pleading with you to pass these amendments, will you please tell us what you're going to do to protect the tenants who now live in existing basement apartments which you are about to make legal and which are not safe?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The situation currently is that there are over 100,000 apartments in houses in the province of Ontario which are called illegal because of their zoning. Bill 120 changes that situation. It then allows the process in which property owners, municipal inspectors, fire officials and tenants can address the question of bringing apartments in houses up to safety standards.

Mr Mahoney: Wrong. You were right to a point; you're wrong.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Mississauga West.

Hon Ms Gigantes: That is the only way we're going to achieve safety.

Mr Mahoney: She doesn't know what she's talking about.

The Speaker: The member for Mississauga West, come to order and allow the minister to complete her response.

Hon Ms Gigantes: There is no magic wand, and the Leader of the Opposition should not pretend there is. It's going to take work to undo years of a situation in which an underground economy was created in basement apartments, side apartments, attic apartments, many of which are unsafe.

We want to get to work on that. We're giving municipalities more power for inspection. Fire officials know the kind of code they now will be armed with. It's going to mean the gradual, step-by-step improvement of health and safety standards for tenants and for property owners in this province.

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My question is to the Minister of Housing. Minister, the Toronto Star reported this morning that you have recently written off $10 million in loans to the Supportive Housing Coalition. Why?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): I believe the Star report was accurate and the way the leader of the third party has expressed it is not. There were two loans to the Supportive Housing Coalition that were written off. They were written off because since the period going back to 1988, they had not produced affordable housing. The likelihood of their being able to produce affordable housing on the sites involved, which were under a program called the land-loan guarantee program, looked to be very bad. I decided that the time had come to call it quits with those projects.

Mr Harris: The question was, they wrote it off, and I asked why. So I was quite right in my question. Thank you very much, Minister.

The taxpayers of Ontario spend over $1 billion a year on government-subsidized housing and they deserve to know that their money is being spent appropriately. For the last five years or so, we have been raising these issues, back to the Patti Starr days, of project after project after project where taxpayer dollars have been wasted, where there has been mismanagement of taxpayer dollars rampant and rife in the government-assisted housing programs; case after case, property after property, where taxpayers are being gouged. This morning was just another example in the long litany of waste of taxpayer dollars, dollars that should be helping those who need affordable housing.

What has been revealed during the past week doesn't of course give them much comfort that anything is changing. We do not know just how far the recent rot that has been uncovered at just two agencies extends. Therefore, Minister, will you support terms of reference for the public accounts committee inquiry that include all government-funded housing agencies in this province?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The leader of the third party alleges that over $1 billion is currently spent in subsidizing what he calls subsidized housing. If he's talking about the non-profit program, the amount of provincial dollars currently spent is $575 million annually. I wish he would get the figure straight when he talks about it. That supplies housing in an affordable way to about 120,000 households currently.

It's a very good investment. It's a good investment because now is the time when people need affordable housing. People have never had a greater need in this province. It's a good investment because currently we're providing about $2.6 billion to allow people who receive social assistance to rent apartments in the private market. I hope he will take that into account too when he next talks about this subject. We spend far more on shelter allowances, a rental subsidy program, if you will, than we do on non-profit housing, and we don't get any new affordable housing for it.

If the leader of the third party was aware, the public accounts committee of this Legislature has been going through a review of the non-profit housing program of the Ministry of Housing for several months now, and that review will continue in terms of the reports back by the ministry and discussions with members of the public accounts committee. I understand that the schedule is being framed up as we speak. The discussion has gone on in the public accounts committee about when the ministry will next be coming to discuss the program.

Mr Harris: What the public accounts committee is investigating is a narrow scope of the ministry and the ministry involvement that the auditor has identified, not the groups, where all the fraud, we now find out, the abuse, the waste and the mismanagement, have been taking place.

Minister, I've asked a page to deliver a proposal to you. Too many times we have seen your government and then the predecessor government use its majority on legislative committees to cut off debate and effectively muzzle the opposition in its inquiries and investigations. I have sent over a proposal for terms of reference for the public accounts committee to get to the bottom of what appears to be a far-reaching problem in government housing in Ontario. It includes giving the committee the power to requisition annual reports, financial statements and all other documentation relating to the spending of housing agencies.

Are you prepared to support these terms of reference for the inquiry that's going to take place in public accounts so that we can get to the bottom of the mismanagement and the waste of taxpayer dollars rampant in the government housing programs of this province?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The non-profit housing program in the province of Ontario has existed through three governments, not just two. It was begun in fact by a Conservative government in this province, and it was to replace a program which had outgrown the style of society, which was the Ontario Housing Corp public housing building program.

It's a program, the non-profit program, which provides a financing mechanism for non-profit, community-based groups to be able to undertake the development and management of mixed income developments of housing, which provides some rent-geared-to-income assistance for people most in need of housing in Ontario.

It is not fair and he has really no right to be able to suggest that the program is a program that is replete with fraud. There have been incidents in which some agencies—

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): Of course he's got a right. He was elected. What a stupid comment.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order, the member for York Mills.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —which this government does not own and which are accountable, not to him and not to this government but to their non-profit incorporated boards—

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Those agencies exist in the community—he may not like it—but in fact they are not organs of government. Our responsibility to the public in Ontario is to make sure that our contractual arrangements with them are accountable. That is what we will do and that is what we have proposed the public accounts committee feel free to do in the case of Houselink, the Supportive Housing Coalition and indeed the whole non-profit program.

The Speaker: New question, the leader of the third party.

Mr Harris: I assume that answer means you will give direction to your majority to stifle the opposition on the committee.

ONTARIO DRUG BENEFIT PROGRAM

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My second question is to the Minister of Health.

Yesterday, AIDS Action Now brought its frustration with your government into this chamber, and today, Minister, I want to bring that frustration on to the floor of the Legislature. Joining us in the members' gallery is Brian Farlinger, co-chair of Aids Action Now.

Minister, we are all aware of the financial pressures on your ministry. What that means is that you must set priorities.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Mr Harris: Your inaction, for example, on health card fraud alone costs 10 times more in waste than AIDS Action Now and others are requesting for treatment of catastrophic illness. Over the din and yelling and screaming and ranting of your backbench members, Minister, will you tell Mr Farlinger and others if drug funding for catastrophic illnesses will be a health care priority in the budget to come down next week?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): As I'm sure the leader of the third party is aware, I am not in a position to discuss what will be in next week's budget, but I am very interested to have the indication from him that funding for AIDS, drugs for people with AIDS, is a priority of him and of his party.

Let me say to him that for this government, the funding of the Ontario drug benefit program has been a priority. We spend over $1 billion a year on a program that provides free drugs to seniors, to people on social assistance and to people with catastrophic diseases in the most generous drug program of any province in this country.

I know the needs of people with illnesses who have catastrophic drug costs, and as we have expanded our drug programs, as we have done, we have also tried to manage them in a way that prevents the 16% growth in the cost of the program that occurred between 1983 and 1993. Of course, establishing new programs is difficult within that climate, but certainly if we find that we can do that, priority for AIDS drugs is one to which I'm very much committed.

Mr Harris: We've had several other announcements come from you and other ministers that have obviously had a higher priority. You would agree with me, from your comments, that the priority for persons living with AIDS is access to treatment to improve their quality of life.

In January 1993, the former Minister of Health, Frances Lankin, told the Toronto Star she hoped to have a comprehensive policy in place before your government's mandate expires. It is now over a year later and we have seen nothing. We have heard nothing interim. We have heard nothing from you or from the former minister or from the government.

Minister, for many members of Mr Farlinger's coalition—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Mr Harris: —time is not on their side of living up to the commitment that your former Minister of Health made. Could you tell us when you plan to live up to that commitment?

Hon Mrs Grier: I'm surprised that the leader of the third party is not familiar with the discussion papers, the reports that we have done, the discussions we have had with a number of groups about reforming the drug benefit program.

I hope he also is aware of the commitment to providing treatment for people with AIDS, again where this province has shown leadership across the country, whether it be the Wellesley primary care clinic, the opening of a new clinic and expanded clinic at the Toronto Hospital, clinics in Windsor, in Ottawa, in Hamilton, the provincial advisory network that we've set up, the anonymous testing program. We spend $40 million a year, and that excludes doctor's fees, hospital services and drug costs, on helping people with AIDS deal with their problem.

I would remind the leader of the third party that it was his party, at the federal level, that brought in a bill known as C-91, legislation that increased the price of drugs exponentially to all of the provinces and has made it ever more difficult for provinces, no matter how much they want to do so, to live up to their expectations of what they would be able to do.

Mr Harris: Yes, Minister, I'm aware of the litany of committees, of reports, of recommendations. Yes, I'm aware that constantly when you're embarrassed by inaction, you point the finger anywhere around the world, to any individual, somewhere other than right here at home in the Ontario Legislature, in the Ontario government and the lack of priorities that you, your ministry, your cabinet and your Premier have had in this area.

In November 1991, your government set up the Ontario Advisory Committee on HIV/AIDS, I might add to the unanimous support of this Legislature and all members of the House. Its purpose was to review programs, care, regulations and other issues affecting victims of this deadly disease. Minister, that group has been working for well over two years, yet you have taken no action in any of the areas that it has been addressing and asking you to take action in.

I guess, Minister, I have to ask you, after this period of time, if the purpose of the committee is simply to study, to assess facts, to have more committees, to have reports, if it's anything more than window dressing to hide the fact that you do not have a policy yet. You don't have a policy to address the concerns—

The Speaker: Could the leader conclude his question, please.

Mr Harris: —of victims of AIDS in Ontario, nor have you set any deadline for recommendations from this committee.

I am asking you, Minister, will you set such a deadline? Will you set a commitment that I assume would be supported by all members of this Legislature to take action now?

Hon Mrs Grier: I'm very interested to know of the leader of the third party's interest in the work of the AIDS advisory committee. I don't know whether it is a new-found interest, but let me assure him that in fact there has been extensive work done as a result of the recommendations and the work of that advisory committee.

We spend, as part of our special drugs program, $9 million a year in order to provide drugs for people with AIDS. I recognize that there is more that could be done. I recognize that there are new drugs that come on the market that would help people live with AIDS.

On the other hand, as our government wrestles with trying to deal with the enormous fiscal problems of this province, we have to manage our funds as carefully as we can. We would all like to say that we could continue a 16% growth in the Ontario drug benefit program; we're not able to do that.

The management initiatives that we have taken and that have enabled us to expand the program, not as much as we would like, but to expand it and still live within our means, are ones that I think have significantly helped people living with AIDS.

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): I have a question for the Minister of Housing. She has confirmed that the Ontario government and taxpayers have had to write off $10 million worth of costs incurred with two projects sponsored by the Supportive Housing Coalition in the city of Toronto.

Can the Minister of Housing confirm that there is a third project which has had to be abandoned, this project at 55 Kildonan Road in the eastern portion of the city of Toronto, another project supported by the group in question, Supportive Housing Coalition? Can she confirm that third project has been abandoned and can she indicate the costs involved there?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): It is correct that a Cityhome project—it was not a Supportive Housing Coalition proposal but a Cityhome project—at 55 Kildonan Road was in fact written off at the end of last year. The amount of that write-off was for—I don't find the number right here in front of me. I'll search for it while he asks his supplementary question.

Mr Conway: The beat goes on. The Provincial Auditor has pointed out the problems in this area. My information is that the Kildonan project comes at a very considerable cost to the Ontario taxpayer.

Let me ask this question: The audit on the Supportive Housing Coalition which was made available to your government in March 1992 makes it plain that no additional allocations from the Ontario government should be made to the Supportive Housing Coalition unless and until the myriad of problems that are identified in this audit are cleaned up. Can the Minister of Housing assure this House that no further allocations have been made in the interval between March 1992 and this date to the Supportive Housing Coalition for any of these kinds of projects?

Hon Ms Gigantes: In fact, the Supportive Housing Coalition projects to which he referred earlier are projects which may proceed on another site. What we did was write off the land-loan acquired sites because the costs associated with those sites were not acceptable. They of course were acquired under the Liberal government of which he was a member.

HOUSING LEGISLATION

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is to the Minister of Housing. We have just gone through a month of public hearings, at the expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars in committee, reviewing Bill 120. The Minister of Housing has tabled amendments today which reverse motions that were passed in that committee, bearing in mind, of course, that that committee has a majority of government members on it.

What I would like to ask this minister, because in opposition I certainly know that she believed in democracy, she believed in representation of the people and she believed in the committee system, is how she can defend spending thousands of dollars in this sham of public hearings for a month, only to reverse one little step that was made to amend the legislation to respond to the public input that you invited.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): All the public input that was made to the committee was taken very seriously by me personally and by the Ministry of Housing people who have worked to develop Bill 120. It is certainly not without precedent in this Legislature that an amendment passed in committee will not be referred or transferred into amendments in the Legislature when we deal with it before third reading. This is quite normal and I'm sure if the member from Mississauga South searches her mind, she'll recollect many other incidents of that kind.

Mrs Marland: Obviously, this minister's idea of what is normal and what we think is democracy are totally at odds with each other.

This minister does not defend a process that has a history in this place. The very fact that this minister is willing to take away the rights of voting members on a committee, a standing committee, a committee to which they appoint their own members, a committee hearing at which their own members voted on and passed a very important motion which meant that a particular aspect of a program in connection with care homes, a program which is funded by two of the government ministries, will now be in jeopardy—this minister stands in this House today and defends that process, a process that her ministry, the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Community and Social Services funded.

Madam Minister, I would like to ask you why you are happy to see those programs which are affected by a six-month limitation on care homes destroyed by your reversal of that motion.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I'm not sure exactly what the member for Mississauga South is referring to in terms of amendments, but I'd suggest to her that throughout the consideration of Bill 120, all sides have looked at the issues involved, particularly as they respect care homes, to make sure that the programs that are offered in the very many excellent care homes that exist in Ontario are continued.

1510

Those programs address the needs of people who may be elderly, sometimes quite fragile elderly people, people who have disabilities, either physical or in terms of their development, people who are psychiatric survivors. We have discussed these issues very carefully to try to ensure that all the matters that surround the questions about service in care homes in Ontario are addressed satisfactorily. We want to see the services in Ontario's care homes maintained and improved, and that is one of the very strong purposes of Bill 120.

Mr Speaker, while I'm on my feet, could I correct the record? I said in answer to a question from the member for Renfrew North that the Kildonan site was not a Supportive Housing Coalition site. I was neglecting to remember that it was originally a site proposed for development by the Supportive Housing Coalition. It was subsequently taken over as a project by Cityhome.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The Minister of Finance has a reply to a question asked earlier by the honourable member for Etobicoke West.

GO TRANSIT

Hon Floyd Laughren (Minister of Finance): The member for Etobicoke West asked the Premier a question yesterday dealing with GO Transit refinancing, and the Premier, in an act of awesome generosity, referred the question to me.

I should tell the member for Etobicoke West that the province is not and never intended to get out of paying any taxes as part of the GO Transit refinancing transaction. Let me explain that all provincial governments and their agencies, as well as the federal government, are currently exempt from withholding tax for payments on international debt financing transactions. As this transaction is a refinancing of GO Transit equipment, no withholding tax is applicable and the existing withholding tax exemption is sufficient to look after this particular transaction.

These types of transactions are also quite common in the marketplace, including governments, and we are not the only ones doing them. In fact, the Quebec government has proceeded with two similar transactions in the last couple of years.

Perhaps I could await a supplementary to go on before I explain any further to the member.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): There are a couple of questions I would like to ask. Why then did your ministry request that the federal government exempt it from this specifically? A request was in fact made to the federal government, as I understand it, through your ministry.

Second, you say you're exempt. Tell me something, sir. Would the Bermudian company Asset Finance Bermuda, which bought it and then formed a company and flipped it—

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): You don't mean that.

Mr Stockwell: Well, that's as I understand it from your ministry again, that they formed a company, passed it through Asset Finance Bermuda, passed it through to this company that they formed immediately upon closing. Why then did that take place? As I understand it, sir, with all due respect, the ministry officials told me that subject to those two companies forming the way they did within Bermuda, they then became exempt from the withholding tax that would have been applicable. Had they not done that, it would have been applicable to the Bermudian company, Asset Finance Bermuda.

Further to that, sir, when I questioned—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member place his supplementary, please.

Mr Stockwell: Well, there were a couple of questions there. When I placed the call to your ministry officials, I asked them, "Would this particular tax have applied had they not structured it this way?" The response I got was yes, and that in fact the federal government didn't give them a clearance that it wouldn't apply.

The question is: Did the federal government say, "No, this doesn't apply to tax"? And why did they structure in this way? What were they avoiding if it were not the withholding tax?

Hon Mr Laughren: I think that's a good question. The member for Etobicoke West is quite correct. There was an inquiry made of the federal government about the whole question of withholding tax exemptions on these kinds of transactions. I'm not a tax lawyer myself, but my understanding is that if it had been a sale and leaseback arrangement, there might have been a withholding tax, but this was a sale and sale back to the Ontario government. The reason for doing it that way was simply that it's the best way for us to manage the whole transaction, and I might add, save the taxpayers of this province money without costing the federal treasury any money whatsoever at the same time.

MEMBER'S COMMENTS

Mr Gary Malkowski (York East): On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: The member for Leeds-Grenville just made inappropriate comments to one of the interpreters while I was leaving the House, and I would ask him to withdraw that, please.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The Speaker's at a loss in that I did not hear the alleged remark. If the member so identified believes he said something inappropriate, then he has an opportunity to withdraw the remark.

OHC CHAIR

Mr Joseph Cordiano (Lawrence): My question is for the Minister of Housing. In 1992, Minister, you decided to take the position of chair of the Ontario Housing Corp from a part-time job to a full-time job paying $90,000 per year. You also decided to appoint your close personal friend Nancy Smith to this position. In addition to being a close friend of the minister, Nancy Smith is also the individual who found the minister a job after she was defeated in 1987. I suppose this is the minister's way of helping out the economy, by creating full-time jobs out of part-time jobs for her friends. Minister, do you think the public can call this appointment anything but pork-barrel politics?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): I wonder just how mean-minded this kind of stuff can get. This is absolute nonsense. Nancy Smith was a member of city council in the city of Ottawa when I applied in 1982 to be hired by a volunteer committee working on behalf of the city council of Ottawa. I was among many candidates. The volunteer committee selected me.

When it came to seeking to fill this important post of the Ontario Housing Corp on a full-time basis, which our government felt was warranted given the neglect of previous governments for the Ontario Housing Corp's valuable portfolio and very important human communities in this province, we sought advice from many sources and we interviewed several excellent candidates. Nancy Smith was picked by a committee on which I did sit but on which I certainly was not a majority vote. I was among other people on a committee, and I was one vote on that committee. The other people on that committee unanimously chose Nancy Smith.

Mr Cordiano: It's interesting, because on top of the $90,000 salary and a newly created full-time position, Nancy Smith also spent some $50,000 on transportation and accommodation over the past two years.

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for Durham West, come to order.

Mr Cordiano: This is why this is important, because taxpayers are shelling out $1,100 a month to rent a luxury apartment and over $11,500 per year to travel to and from her home for Nancy Smith. She lives in Ottawa.

People are sick and tired of hearing about the lack of accountability in the Ministry of Housing, in the way things like the Houselink non-profit project are spending money that just gets blown out the window, and they're tired of hearing about the government spending money on its friends.

Don't you think it's time to clean up your act and become more accountable to the public for the very few dollars you have to spend in the Ministry of Housing? After all, the money isn't endless, and you should be more circumspect in the way you spend your money. This is what we're saying.

There's a lot of expenses here for this person, Nancy Smith, who is spending this kind of money in her position going back and forth from Ottawa. That's a lot of money for taxpayers to spend each and every year.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Could I remind the member that the appointment of Nancy Smith was reviewed by the legislative committee that reviews appointments. It was the view of that committee that Nancy Smith was an entirely appropriate appointment. Furthermore, at that stage, I know of no questions that were asked by members of the committee—and I've read the Hansard—about the terms of her contract.

She does not earn $90,000; she was appointed at less than that. Her salary has been subject, as all of ours have, to the social contract. She has indeed been given travel expenses in lieu of selling a house and moving a household to Toronto. Once the equivalent of moving a household, under Management Board guidelines for an appointee of the nature of that position, has been filled, there will be no more expenses permitted.

The member has his facts wrong. The member is a member of a party which had ample ability to question all the matters he's raised in the appointments committee—

The Speaker: Would the minister please conclude her response.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —and he's being terribly silly in his accusations.

The Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.
ASSISTED HOUSING

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew North): On a point of privilege, Mr Speaker: I regret to inform the House—and I seek your guidance—that the Minister of Housing I believe has inadvertently misled the House about the property at 55 Kildonan.

I have just spoken to the project manager at Cityhome, a Mr R. Gauzitis. Actually, my staff has just spoken to him. He has confirmed to my staff that in fact that never became a Cityhome project, that there were some discussions, but in fact it remains with its sponsor, the Supportive Housing Coalition.

My question remains: Is it true that the province there as well is on the hook for, I believe, $3.5 million to $3.7 million worth of costs?

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): First, to the honourable member, I know that with his respect for Parliament, he would not want to use unparliamentary language. Indeed, earlier on there was a discussion around the very point he raised, and the minister at that time did rise to correct the record. The member does raise an important point. However, he knows he should not use the term "misled the House." I would ask the minister now if she has a reply to the concern raised.

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): I will verify the situation. It may be the case that discussions which I had assumed had concluded with Cityhome acquiring the project did not conclude there. I'll be quite happy to report to the House on that. The fact is that the property was not approved as a project. Therefore, I think all the information he was seeking has been provided, except inasmuch as I can't confirm at this stage the exact situation with the proposal itself.

MEMBERS' COMMENTS

Mr Gary Malkowski (York East): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to ask for your guidance when a member of the Legislature is harassing my interpreting staff by saying, "She earns $60,000; she can hurry up." I would ask for your guidance with this.

Interjections.

Mr Bob Huget (Sarnia): On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order. Would the member for Sarnia take his seat, please.

Mr Huget: Point of order.

The Speaker: Would the member for Sarnia please take his seat. If he has a point of order, I will hear him.

Mr Huget: Withdraw.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): I will withdraw.

The Speaker: Order. I can only deal with one point of order at a time, and I am asking the member for York Mills also to take his seat.

First, the member for York East rose on a point of order. I appreciate the concern which he has brought to my attention. I must say to the member that I did not hear the words which he alleged to have been spoken. Earlier on, the member raised a similar point of order, to which I offered the member for Leeds-Grenville an opportunity to withdraw the remarks if he believes he made unparliamentary remarks. He chose not to do so.

All I can ask is that members always try to use language that is courteous and not intemperate in any way, nor demeaning to any individual in the House. All members are deemed to be honourable and I trust they will abide by that title that is given to them, "honourable members."

The member for Sarnia had a point of order.

Mr Huget: I do, Mr Speaker, but the member for York Mills has indicated he wishes to withdraw a remark. If he does so, I don't have a point of order.

Mr Turnbull: Yes, Mr Speaker, I wish to withdraw my comment.

The Speaker: I appreciate it.

Mr Malkowski: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm asking for your guidance in this when a member harasses a member of the interpreting staff. I'm asking for your guidance when another member is harassing the interpreting staff. I need your guidance here.

The Speaker: The member has made a very serious allegation. On the one hand, I cannot assist him directly because I did not hear the comments he refers to. However, I take the member's concern seriously. I would suggest that the member has a number of alternatives available to him, one of which is to take his concerns to the Legislative Assembly committee; second, perhaps to discuss this matter directly with the member for Leeds-Grenville; or third, to request his House leader to raise this matter with the other House leaders.

Finally, I can say to the member that always, whenever there are intemperate remarks made or unparliamentary language used in the House, I deal with them, but I cannot deal with remarks that I do not hear. I understand full well the deep concern which the member expresses.

PETITIONS

EDUCATION PROGRAM

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I have a petition signed by more than 850 people from my riding and all over eastern Ontario who are concerned about cutbacks for funding of the Special Program Opportunities for Knowledge in the Educational System, or SPOKES. The majority of these signatures represent students in the program. The petition reads:

"We, the undersigned, implore you to reconsider your cost-cutting strategies. We urge you to reinstate funding for the program at 100% so that it may continue to meet the needs of the consumers it serves."

I've already contacted the Minister of Education and Training on this matter and I hope he will soon respond. I have also affixed my signature to this petition.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Ministry of the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearm owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

TOBACCO PACKAGING

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I've got a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario in support of plain packaging of tobacco products.

"Whereas more than 13,000 Ontarians die each year from tobacco use; and

"Whereas Bill 119, Ontario's tobacco strategy legislation, is currently being considered by the Legislative Assembly of Ontario; and

"Whereas Bill 119 contains the provision that the government of Ontario reserves the right to regulate the labelling, colouring, lettering script, size of writing or markings, and other decorative elements of cigarette packaging; and

"Whereas independent studies have proven that tobacco packaging is a contributing factor leading to the use of tobacco products by young people; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has expressed its desire to work multilaterally with the federal government and other provinces, rather than act on its own, to implement plain packaging of tobacco products; and

"Whereas the existing free flow of goods across interprovincial boundaries makes a national plain packaging strategy the most effective method of protecting the Canadian public;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly as follows:

"That the government of Ontario continue to work with and pressure the government of Canada to introduce and enforce legislation calling for plain packaging of tobacco products at the national level."

I affix my signature to this in full support.

HOUSING LEGISLATION

Mr Gilles E. Morin (Carleton East): I have a petition that comes from the residents and family members of Bearbrook Court Retirement Residence in Gloucester:

"We are consumers who will be directly affected by Bill 120.

"Whereas this government has ignored thousands of letters and postcards sent in 1992 opposing the concepts of this bill by ourselves and other seniors in other retirement residences across Ontario; and

"We have been effectively denied the opportunity for a direct oral presentation to this committee by the time constraints you have imposed; and

"We feel strongly that our residences should be regulated under the Ministry of Health or Community and Social Services and definitely not under housing legislation; but

"We nevertheless realize you intend to use your majority in the Legislature to pass this bill despite the objections of consumers."

The petition goes on. I am very glad to affix my signature to this petition and I approve totally of its content.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario

Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"I/We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

This is signed by about 60 people from different parts of Ontario.

Mrs Joan M. Fawcett (Northumberland): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Ministry of the Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I have signed the petition.

Mr Leo Jordan (Lanark-Renfrew): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, strenuously object to the Ministry of Solicitor General's decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"I/We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I affix my signature to this.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): I have a petition that's addressed to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and may include sadomasochism, paedophilia, bestiality etc, and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all such references should be removed from the code.

"Therefore, we request that the House refrain from passing Bill 45."

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): I too have a petition from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, petition Premier Bob Rae, Solicitor General David Christopherson and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

I agree with this petition and affix my signature thereto.

GAMBLING

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): I have a petition signed by members of the United Church of Elgin:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Christian is called to love of neighbour, which includes a concern for the general wellbeing of society; and

"Whereas there is a direct link between the higher availability of legalized gambling and the incidence of addictive gambling; and

"Whereas the damage of addiction to gambling in individuals is compounded by the damage done to families both emotionally and economically; and

"Whereas the gambling market is already saturated with various kinds of government-operated lotteries; and

"Whereas large-scale gambling activity invariably attracts criminal activity; and

"Whereas the citizens of Detroit have since 1976 on three occasions voted down the introduction of casinos into that city, each time with a larger majority than the time before;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario cease all moves to establish gambling casinos."

I'm affixing my signature in support.

SCHOOL PRINCIPALS

Mr Paul R. Johnson (Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings): I rise to present this petition on behalf of the Honourable Fred Wilson, member for Frontenac-Addington, from several hundred of his constituents:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, believe the daily presence of a principal in each of our schools is fundamental to the education and wellbeing of our children, we are firmly opposed, therefore, to the Lennox and Addington County Board of Education's concept of removing any principals from our community schools, including Centreville, Enterprise, Tamworth and Newburgh public schools."

The member for Frontenac-Addington has affixed his name.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): I have a petition that was sent to me by many people from Chesley, Ayton, Durham, Hanover and Mount Forest, and it's to the Honourable Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all such references should be removed from the code."

ANTI-TOBACCO LEGISLATION

Mrs Ellen MacKinnon (Lambton): I have a petition here from an organization known as ALOHA, which stands for Association of Local Official Health Agencies (Ontario):

"Dear members of provincial Parliament:

"ALOHA is the collective voice of Ontario's public health agencies. It provides leadership and expertise on the management and delivery of efficient and effective public health services and advocates for the role of public health agencies and on public health issues that promote community wellness.

"We, the undersigned, the medical officers of health and associate medical officers of health, have a responsibility for the public's health in Ontario. The use of tobacco continues to be the number one preventable cause of death and ill health in Ontario. The promised Ontario Tobacco Act intended to prevent this from continuing to be the death of the next generation has still not reached the Legislature.

"We call on members of the provincial Legislature to ensure that this legislation is brought forward and passed during this session of Parliament. Each delay represents too many thousands of needless deaths and illness."

1540

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly:

"Whereas the government of Ontario has stated that multiservice agencies, the new single, local point of access for long-term care and supportive services, must purchase 90% of their homemaking and professional services from not-for-profit providers, therefore virtually eliminating the use of commercial providers;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We protest the action to drastically reduce the service provision by commercial providers and respectfully request that the impact of this policy decision, including a cost study, be performed before any further implementation."

This is signed by a number of people in my area, and I am proud to affix my signature as well.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mrs Marland from the standing committee on government agencies presented the committee's 20th report.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Does the member wish to make a brief statement?

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): Mr Speaker, I really do not have any comments. The decision of the committee was unanimous, and we were all very happy, including the Chairman, with the appointments.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 106(g)11), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON REGULATIONS AND PRIVATE BILLS

Ms Haeck from the standing committee on regulations and private bills presented the following report and moved its adoption:

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Shall the report be received and adopted? Agreed.

EMPLOYER HEALTH TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPÔT PRÉLEVÉ SUR LES EMPLOYEURS RELATIF AUX SERVICES DE SANTÉ

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act / Projet de loi 110, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'impôt prélevé sur les employeurs relatif aux services de santé et la Loi sur les accidents du travail.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): The member for York Mills, I believe you had the floor.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): The question of health care funding is problematic for any government. We're seeing the problems that the US government is having, wrestling with the health care system, which indeed it urgently needs to change. It has been asserted by members of the government that the US should be looking at the Canadian health model, but the fact is the Canadian health model isn't working.

We now have a situation that doctors across this province are desperate to get out of the system, and many of the best surgeons in the province are being lost to the US simply because of the stubbornness not just of the provincial government but also of the federal government.

I noted in today's clippings that in fact the NDP government in BC is being threatened by the federal Health minister with withholding of funds unless they comply to the letter with the Canada Health Act.

It's time for radical changes in the way that we fund health care because the problem is that there isn't adequate access to treatment on a timely basis. We have the situation that the affluent are going to the US to get treatment or to get some procedures in the US, such as electromagnetic resonance scanning, which are not available on a timely basis here in Ontario.

It can be arranged within a couple of days in the US and the affluent are going, and not just the affluent. Some of the very well connected people in politics in Canada are going to the US for treatment. We only have to look at the example of the former Liberal Premier of the province of Quebec, who went to the US. Why? Because they didn't have the trust in the system here and they couldn't wait.

The fact is that some of our health care facilities are being used by vets in the evening because the equipment isn't being used by our health care professionals. Instead it is being made available to vets at the same time that the very same equipment is urgently needed for the backlogs. So indeed we have a two-tier system in Ontario at this moment. The sooner there is intellectual honesty applied to this question, the sooner we might begin to start to address the very serious concerns.

I mentioned yesterday in debate that we have the situation that the nurses got a much-deserved increase in pay after the NDP came into power, one of the few things I applauded you for. But immediately you started closing hospital beds, beds that could quite easily have been made available on a paying basis to US patients who would in fact potentially find the Canadian facilities attractive because they could be priced at a rate which was competitive with US hospitals, which would give a cash infusion into our medicare system that we urgently need and would allow the specialists to at least make some extra income and not attract them down to the US. I don't believe it would detract, as the concern is expressed, that in some way these specialists would only concentrate on the people who were paying. I don't believe that.

I must say that the riding I represent, the riding of York Mills, probably has the largest concentration of doctors and specialists in the whole of the province. I would suggest probably more doctors live in York Mills than in the whole of northern Ontario and I can tell you that these doctors are alarmed at what is happening in our health care system.

Only last night, after a meeting on an entirely different subject, I was introduced to a doctor who absolutely pounced on the opportunity to speak to a politician about what was going wrong with the health care system. During the social contract, we had the spectre of the government essentially dealing with hospitals which had already made savings on more or less the same footing as those hospitals which have not achieved any savings.

Instead of the government looking at a cost per procedure and saying to each hospital, "You must comply with these costs"—given the fact that there would be some variance according to the size of the hospital because there are some economies of scale and, in addition to that, the fact that the most difficult cases are typically referred to large teaching hospitals in the urban areas, we would have to make allowance for those procedures.

But other than that, why not make those hospitals which are not efficient comply with those cost standards, instead of across-the-board cuts, which is what this government has got involved in? I don't believe that the government has done it with any evil thought in mind. I just believe that they are ill-advised in the approach they're taking to health care.

In a survey which I conducted during the summer householder for 1993, 74% of the respondents to my survey, and I asked many questions on a whole host of subjects, said yes to the question, "Would you accept user fees for health services, for example, a $10 charge for the visit to the emergency ward of a hospital?" and 25% no and 1% was undecided. I had an unusually large response to this questionnaire and I'm talking about the response of some 600 or 700 people who took the trouble to answer this questionnaire.

I believe there is a mood afoot, that people recognize there are some serious problems in the health care system. Nobody wants to pay more money for anything—that is the nature of people—but there is an acceptance that maybe we have to bite the bullet.

Rather than saving on the availability of technology, for example electromagnetic resonance machines, perhaps we should be paying a small user fee. That's anathema to the government, but nevertheless it is a way of us trying to get some much-needed funds so that we can ensure the continued viability of our health care system, which we can be proud of, which has been built up over a long period of years but is beginning to be eroded by all the cuts that have been engaged in by this government.

I believe these are practical solutions to the problem.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): I want to respond to the member for York Mills. Let me say that when he talked about what his constituents said about using user fees, he didn't make any comparison in terms of what the economic status is of his constituents and those in other ridings. I think that needs to be taken into account when we're talking about user fees.

He talked about the efficiency of the health care system. He talked about people going to the States to use MRI, CAT scans etc. I want to bring to his attention a recent study that I heard on the news—it appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine—which indicated that there are probably too many CAT scans and MRIs being done unnecessarily. So if we really want to look at how we're going to improve our health care system, we can't just say, "There automatically should be more MRIs and CAT scans." We've got to look at the efficiency of them.

I know in one community, before they had a CAT scanner, the waiting list was three weeks. After they got a CAT scanner, their waiting list went to six weeks. That doesn't make a lot of logical sense.

In terms of the third party talking about the employer health tax and the cost of health care, I want to remind him again, because he talked about driving jobs away, that the cost of health care for employers in this province is far cheaper than in the United States.

I would cite to you, when we were looking at the underground economy, I believe the Institute of Chartered Accountants was in and said that basically when you look at the tax burden, when you include health care costs, because when you compare taxes of course in the United States, technically they're not paying taxes for their health care, but if you take in those health care costs, the costs of doing business aren't really any cheaper in the United States.

In terms of managing the health care system, my only question to the member for York Mills is, can he tell us why health care costs increased on average 10% a year during the 1980s, and why finally it was this government, not the Liberals, not the Tories, that got a handle on the health care system and finally started providing some real management to that system?

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): This debate on Bill 110 I guess could rapidly evolve into a full debate on health care. In fact our communities probably would sustain us in a direction that would allow us to discuss health care.

I have to tell the member for Oxford, and I'm not going to talk about whether he's involved in the proper debate or not today, but his government, our government, the Liberal administration and the Tories have been struggling with the one real problem which has beset our health care system.

I disagree with Mr Turnbull. It's not because our health system is not functioning. In fact our biggest difficulty in this province is because our health system works. Our health system does intervene and it does save critically ill individuals. It has intervened in a way which means that severe trauma victims now require extremely intensive care, and some of us here know that.

It isn't perfect, I understand it's not perfect, but to say that our system doesn't function, that we cannot save individuals and our health care system isn't functioning properly or that any government hasn't paid a lot of attention to the administration of health is bumb. Everybody's been concerned about the rising cost of health care.

I'll tell you, if the people of the province of Ontario want a cheap health care system, all you've got to do is say, "Don't respond to anybody's needs." Anybody who suggests that we can respond to our collective health care needs by forcing individuals to shoulder all the cost or some of the cost before they even access the system in my view is wrong.

They are wrong-headed, because in this province and in this country it is my clear belief that there is a collective understanding that we come together to help people in trouble, and what can be more troubling than when somebody is beset by a very bad situation, either by the happening of an accident or the beginning of an illness?

Let's get on with making this thing a good debate.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): When I hear the member for Oxford saying that perhaps there are too many of certain types of procedures being done in this province and that's what's causing the health care costs to grow to what they are, I would say to that member, I sincerely hope you never have to wait the way thousands of patients are waiting for procedures around this province.

For you to suggest that there is one unnecessary medical procedure involving an MRI or a CAT scan is disgraceful; it's absolutely disgraceful.

I have had patients in my own riding, one particular one I can recall right now who needed a pacemaker, a simple two-days-in-the-hospital procedure. She waited six, seven months to have that simple procedure. In the meantime, she kept having to be hospitalized at $700 a day because her condition was so grave and so serious that she couldn't stay at home. So for $700 a day, in and out of hospital for six and seven months, waiting for a procedure to be done that in fact involved two days.

Now we have a health care system in this province where we are deciding electively by bureaucrats and by this NDP Bob Rae socialist government who will have certain procedures. We are now deciding by the government whether you're too old for a bypass, whether or not you should have free testing for prostate cancer.

This government has taken everything out of health care under the word "humane." We now have a health care system that is going to play God, is playing God in deciding who will be deserving of having a surgical remedy that has cost millions of dollars in medical science to develop.

Hon Shelley Wark-Martyn (Minister without Portfolio in Health): Let me respond to the members' comments about beds closing and doctors running out of Ontario. As someone who has worked with doctors in the past and as someone who had to travel far with a sick child to Toronto's Sick Children's Hospital at a time earlier in my life, I know what it's like to access health care, to not be able to access health care. Let me tell you, this government has done more to allow people to access affordable, appropriate, accessible health care.

The issues in northern Ontario have not changed a lot over the years. I remember 10, 13 years ago advocating for better coverages in northern Ontario. This government has moved. We've got acquired brain injury patients now coming, living in Ontario.

Just this week I was at the Robin Easy Centre in Ottawa, where we opened a transitional living centre, which we never had here in Ontario. Later this week I'll be in Thunder Bay doing the same thing. We're bringing those people, those health care dollars back to Ontario, which both of these parties in opposition could have done many years ago if they had put their mind to it instead of putting all their money into institutions which the dollars will show you in the records.

Mr Turnbull: I seem to have hit a raw nerve. I will quote from the Economist survey on health care dated July 6, 1991. It says, "The big American gripe about Canada is that the tight cost control, especially on capital spending, has led to rationing in the form either of waiting lists or of shortage of equipment. Some claim that Canadians use the more generous United States as a safety valve, crossing the border when Canadian queues get too long."

The fact is I know of these examples, and I will also speak to the fact that we can still find marks on the ceiling where they had to peel Mr Rae off the ceiling when he was in opposition when Frank Miller tried to close some hospital beds. Then my good friend the member for Bruce I think had somewhat the same experience. In fact we've got two marks on the ceiling.

This government hasn't done the job. We know changes are needed in the health care system. There are queues and there are very serious queues. We have doctors who are not being allowed to admit patients who have terminal conditions into hospital.

Why? Because they have exceeded their quota for admissions for that year. Fact, because I have a friend whose wife is in that circumstance and they had to admit her under a different doctor's name.

That is disgusting. I never believed that in this country we would see that kind of situation, but that is a fact and that is what you've brought us to, instead of admitting that we have to search for alternative solutions.

It is quite right; the member for Oxford said there is an economic difference between the people in my riding, but they are prepared—

The Deputy Speaker: The time has expired. Further debate?

Mr Elston: I wasn't going to speak on this until we started getting into health care and having the Tories put their position on the table talking about the type of rationing that occurs here. I tell you, it doesn't matter whether it was during Bill Davis's time or Leslie Frost's time or David Peterson's time or Bob Rae's time: There are circumstances when there are not enough resources to provide everybody with immediate relief. But let's not go reading a bunch of bumf printed by some anti-health-legislation group in the United States talking about how fragile the Canadian health care system is.

Listen, I would far sooner risk having an illness or a serious accident in this province than in any part of the United States of America because, I'll tell you, I do not have enough money to be able to survive in that type of position in the United States of America.

I cannot for the life of me understand who in their right mind would stand up in this Legislative Assembly—and I'm sorry; my friend from York Mills is usually fairly diligent in his research. But who, I say again, would in their right mind stand up and expect us in this province, we who have a tradition of cooperative and collective action in terms of coming to grips with personal tragedies in terms of providing equitable assistance, to buy some kind of a United States solution to our health care industry?

Mr Turnbull: I didn't suggest that, and you know it.

Mr Elston: He says now that he isn't suggesting that. Well, he's getting darn close to it. He was reading out the material that pretty well sounded like he was advocating having the economic ration hammer come down on the—

Mr Turnbull: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member, I believe, is impugning motive in that.

Interjections.

Mr Turnbull: Mr Speaker, allow me to finish my point of order. The fact is that because of various procedural difficulties, my speech has been spread over three different days, and it can only be in the context of the total speech that this member can possibly form a judgement.

The Deputy Speaker: This is not a point of order. Please take your seat.

Mr Elston: I apologize if I've misconstrued the member for York Mills's speech, but I can tell you what happens in this place. The Tories are particularly good at it, and a whole bunch of people are as well. What they do is they take excerpts of their speeches and they will start off and they'll say: "Here's our health policy today. You see, I raised this issue in the House." Mr Tilson did that when he was speaking to my water bill, for instance. He read out the opposition to my private member's bill on water extraction, and I know that's going to be sent out to the water truckers' association, for instance.

What I want to put clearly on the record—and it happens. All of us do it. Let's not be feeling like we're too—

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): Where are you going to send your speech?

Mr Elston: I send it to everybody. And you know something? I sent my bill out to the water truckers.

Mr Tilson: You know you're wrong on your whole philosophy. The municipalities can't win and—

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The member for Bruce, please take your chair. I would ask that whenever you deliver a speech, you address it to me, please. This way, we'll prevent people from heckling.

Mr Elston: I want to just say that the reason I came into this debate was to try and set straight what I think the real attitude of Canadians and Ontarians is towards health care. There is, in my view, a very broad-based tradition of cooperation in the communities which most of us come from. It doesn't matter so much whether we're rural or urban, but particularly from my point of view, having been raised in Huron county and now living in Bruce county, there is a real sense that when there is distress in our communities, then it is not just one individual who feels that distress but the community feels the distress. That was one of the primary motives for people coming together and, yes, being pushed by some people and being pulled by others into a collective response to personal tragedy, which was somehow to be alleviated, at least the best we could, by collectively putting our funds together to address the circumstances as best we could.

I take issue with those people who think that the best way to respond to that collective need to protect the community in times of tragedy, trauma or illness is to charge an admission fee. I don't like the idea of having to buy your way into the community support at your hour of need. That's my position. It's a personal one. I've seen families that have been torn apart by personal tragedies dealing with the psychological scars left from the very difficult times of having to suffer through accident and disease. That, in its own end, is enough for anyone to have to handle. But to be handcuffed by the type of economic bankruptcies that occur as a result of having to spend a lot more money to buy your way into the club, in my view, is not something that our society has ever found acceptable.

I understand more than anybody else the very difficult times we are in with respect to our money. In fact, that I guess is really what this debate should be about, whether or not we are collecting the money in the proper case through employer health tax. But, boy, I think it's time that we had best make it very clear indeed that it is not proper for us to start talking about having to pay an admission fee so that you can buy the community's support. I don't like it in those terms, and maybe that's the best way to describe it so a lot of other people won't like it either.

I'd like us to confirm again that the community will come together and help each other out in times of difficulty. That's not a lot to ask. It is for some people, however, a lot to ask to make the first payment, to admit that they need to be sustained by other people because the second part of the dichotomy is this fierce individualism that we still have in many of our communities; we're glad the community is there and we'll put our own resources behind those people who need us, but sometimes we have an unwillingness to ask for the help ourselves.

I just don't think through debates on employer health tax or on the WCB or other places that this bill takes us is the proper place for us to have individuals making speeches about how acceptable it is to have user fees being introduced into this Legislative Assembly and into the province of Ontario. I just don't believe in my heart that we are really addressing the issue that we've got to talk about.

The one thing that is really key for me more than anything else is that we make our peace with the fact that in Ontario we are different than the Americans. We are a people who have, through joint cooperation and joint effort, come together to forge, out of a very inhospitable, sometimes a very cold climatically located country, a very warm community of genuine interests. That's what we should be confirming here. We shouldn't let somebody try and introduce their philosophical bent to charge people entry fees so that they can get the community to help them with their health coverages. I maybe shouldn't rail too much on that one point but that is my first concern, about allowing that to overtake this debate.

The second concern is this: When people start talking about how bad our health care system is, they should know that it is a far better system than I have been able to locate in very many other centres of the world. I think that we as a group—I would like all three parties at some time to have a joint resolution that says we've got a genuinely fine system that has problems, problems all of us can agree on.

I was the Minister of Health for a while, so I sometimes feel unhappy when one member or another, and there have been a couple today, says, "We are the only government that ever did anything about it." Well, you strive every waking hour. Ruth Grier is probably now inundated with some kind of briefing on what's happening at a nursing home. She may be finding out something that's happening with the drug benefit plan. She may be finding out something that's happening at a hospital. But as Minister of Health, you are doing nothing almost your entire career but trying to find ways of dealing with the problems of the day and making your circumstance better. We are sometimes more successful than others, but we've all struggled under that.

A real problem, as I tried to say in my two-minute intervention to the previous member's speech, was that basically we have been too successful. If you want a cheap system, don't do anything and then it won't cost us anything. That's of course not acceptable to me. In fact, I told a group of American insurers that, from my point of view, the biggest problem for them was to figure out how to get more people into their health care system but to acknowledge that it won't make it cheaper for anybody.

If you're going to be successful in health care in very many ways, treating cancer, treating heart disease, for instance, if you're going to be successful in reviving accident victims, having to open places that will house people with acquired brain damage, then you are going to end up with more costs. You'll have to sustain more costs and you will have, as a result, a need to extract more money into our public system to pay for those costs.

You want it to cost less? Then don't intervene. Don't intervene. You want a cheap system? Don't go and save the person in the car accident. You don't want an expensive system? Then don't intervene with somebody who has cancer. If you want a cheap system, don't call out the ambulance to answer any emergency. If that's what you want, then tell us.

I want a system that is operated so we will intervene to save the people in car accidents. I want a system that will intervene to help people with respect to the treatment of cancer or heart disease or any of the maladies that afflict or offend any of the people who live here in our province of Ontario. That being said, it needs money. It needs money.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): Lots of money.

Mr Elston: It's true. The member from Etobicoke West is right: It does need money.

But it seems to me that as a society, we should dedicate ourselves to intervening in the places that we properly can and that we can make really good interventions, interventions that make the difference. You know, it does make a difference to those people who don't have very much money if you require them to pay for the first treatment of almost anything.

I digress for just a moment. I watched a program on an American station not that long ago about juvenile leukaemia, and maybe some others saw that: A mother who had a child in a hospital in the United States for about 14 months, an amazing young fellow who had gone through those treatments, had been up and had been down, had watched some of the people in his room pass away. A marvellously keen attitude. He had a chance to go to anyplace in the United States—

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPÔT PRÉLEVÉ SUR LES EMPLOYEURS RELATIF AUX SERVICES DE SANTÉ

The Deputy Speaker: If some of the members want to leave the House, please do so now.

The member for Bruce, you had the floor.

Mr Elston: There for a second I thought you were naming all the other members. I wasn't sure what was going on.

Anyway, there was a young man who had been in a cancer treatment program in the United States. He could have chosen to go anyplace in the world, as I was saying before the vote was called, and he chose to go home to go fishing.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Bruce, would you please wait for just a minute. There are too many people standing. Please, if you want to carry on conversations, do so outside of the House. We'll wait patiently. The member for Bruce.

Mr Elston: Can I try again? In any event, I was taken by the story, because the young man put up a great struggle over a 14-month time period, but at the end of the day he passed away at his own home.

But the real contrast, of course, between that story in the United States and the one here in Canada was that the mother being interviewed said that they had lost all of their retirement funds, they had to sell their house and they had to pile the bills in a corner in boxes. In fact they had to make choices about which bills they did pay, and they paid only the bills that were absolutely necessary so that they could make sure they could get the drugs to keep their young son alive.

As I was saying in the previous part of this discussion on this bill, it is an expensive system but it makes sure that people don't have to go through episodes like that. It means that they are somewhat more free to endure the pains that are associated with personal tragedy of accident and illness. In Canada, I think that should be again underscored as part of our social and cultural fabric.

I think that there can be a lot of debate about whether or not the employer health tax way was the best way to get money into our public health care system. In fact I think probably in debating it again, perhaps the most beneficial way would be to look more at going into the income tax system to fund the entire health care system than it would be to have an employer's checkoff tax.

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation and Minister Responsible for Francophone Affairs): You'll have some fights there with the Tories.

Mr Elston: The member for Lake Nipigon is probably right.

A lot of the money is now raised for our health care system through the income tax system. The one thing that the employer health tax has done is that it has got some money into the system, but it really hasn't allowed us to carry on with the rest of the development of our economy. It has in some ways punished some of the employers in this province because they have had to pick up some paperwork and other things that they never had to do before.

I think there has got to be a real debate about whether or not the employer health tax actually is the best and most efficient way of getting money into our public coffers, the fairest way. The member from—

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): Down east.

Mr Elston: No, he's not down east; he's the Minister of Agriculture. A dear friend of mine, Mr Buchanan, who knows a bit about the health care system, is taking notes on this, and you know something? He should take notes on this.

In fact we should take notes on a lot of the things that have been done in the past because, quite frankly, they aren't now perhaps the best way of doing the things that we used to do. There is a whole series of those things, and I think maybe the employer health tax might be one of the things that maybe shouldn't be done.

If we could get to substituting income tax or whatever—

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): Which tax?

Mr Elston: Mr Cooke from Windsor-Riverside asks which tax.

Hon Mr Cooke: Five points.

Mr Elston: The member for Windsor-Riverside says that he's looking at five points on the income tax. But I can tell you that the only side of the equation is not to just raise the taxes all over the place; it is to consider how much punishment goes on to areas of our economy that cannot sustain them.

The good thing about income tax is that at least it is raised from people who are making money. The problem with the employer health tax or any kind of payroll taxes is that they come off the top. It doesn't matter if you make money; you've still got to pay them. If you are thinking of hiring an individual, your payroll goes up, your employer health tax goes up.

This extension of the employer health tax to people like lawyers and accountants will mean that there will be new ways of trying to limit the liability of people to tax. I think the big problem for me is that we really have a culture now that is geared more than anything else to trying to avoid tax exposure. When you bring new people into the tax net, they will spend a lot of resources, rather than spending them on productive acquisition of some kind of inventories or equipment, in trying to avoid the tax.

There has got to be a study someplace by somebody that tells us how many dollars are taken out of our productive economy every year by trying to get the best advice on how to avoid the government's tax person. That's a problem for us. We can extend taxes to every area in the province by extending the employer health tax if we want, but a lot of money will be expended trying to avoid that and people will write off amounts of money against other taxes in their attempt to avoid the extensive expansion of these new taxes.

For me, what we should be doing is looking at other means of collecting taxes. I'm not talking about user fees. I don't want the member for York Mills or other places to suggest that a user fee is an acceptable substitute. I don't find that acceptable whatsoever. I don't think it is a good deterrent to accessing health care services by those people who do it now as inappropriate users, as some would claim; it is in fact a deterrent to those people who actually need the service in a timely fashion.

I am, as a result of this, opposed to this portion of Bill 110. I'm opposed to the bill. I think what this bill has allowed the government to do is walk away from the real debates about some of the other expenditures it makes.

Perhaps they should be looking at the style of delivery of services they are undertaking in a whole series of areas. Perhaps they should be looking at providing a much tighter list of services. Already in the health care field there has been some elimination of service by the Minister of Health.

I'm not talking about eliminating that type of review to see if every care package delivered now in the province is appropriate. I think we always have to go through and look to make sure that our care is appropriate. But I am asking the government perhaps to examine other program areas that are no longer now necessary.

We've got into a discussion in the last few days of a couple of programs that have not worked very well in the housing area, for instance, and I guess what we should probably be able to say is that when we are not able to perform well in that area, it means perhaps that the funds that would have been allocated in the future for those types of problems might very well be addressed towards the problems that we do know we do a good job at, and we do a good job at health care.

We do have a problem with resources. We do have a problem with how many beds we need, because nobody really knows that. We do have a problem with the number of machines that are available to do all kinds of treatments.

Dialysis, for instance, is one that has been a perennial problem. You catch up, you think, and then all of a sudden there are more difficulties that are associated with the diseases that require dialysis. There are problems with respect to the number of machines for treatment of cancer, and that is a problem.

But perhaps that means for us that we make a decision to do the things we do well by allocating our resources first and foremost to where we make a real difference to the people in the province, and it is a real difference that we know we can deliver to those people by making sure that our health care system is funded in a way that is appropriate and effective.

Just one other point which wears me down a wee bit. The member for York Mills read a little treatise from someone, and they had pointed out that there were particular benefits in having the United States next door as a safety valve for our problems. Well, people from the United States come up here all the time too, and they get relief from problems that we are able to help them with. It's something I feel kind of proud about, because people coming here accessing our system is I think the best indication that we've got a good system.

But it is the code words that are used around the discussions in health care which bother me most. It is the trying to destabilize some of the things we do very well by claiming, as the member for Oxford read out, that there are inappropriate uses of machines, so ergo—he didn't say this, but presumably the next step would be, we don't need that many machines. He didn't say that, but if you say there are inappropriate uses of machines, you'd probably say we don't need as many of them.

We have got to get our hands on something that allows us to have a benchmark of discussion about the validity of our health care system and the treatments. We are always running around in circles with somebody who's trying to undermine the whole system, setting up these straw people they can knock down when in fact they aren't relevant to our debate.

We've got to get a handle on having the baseline discussion about where we are with our health care, the baseline discussion about what is appropriate, and maybe we'll never catch up with that, because even among the practitioners in medicine or nursing or dentistry or chiropractic, that is always a discussion of continuing and evolving difficulty for them.

For me, I think it would be essential, with the increase in the employer health tax that is about to occur here, necessary for a very strong statement of principle coming from the Treasurer, from the Finance minister who is sponsoring this bill, that he and the government are dedicating themselves to allocating the funds not for chipping away at the edges of the service but in fact for making it better.

I understand how we cast our press releases. I'm in the middle of looking at the reallocation of policing resources by the Ontario Provincial Police around my riding. One of the places that is now in question is whether or not a detachment will remain at Lion's Head. The concern is quite frankly that there will be good service.

We just lost a patrol yard with the Ministry of Transportation of Ontario out at Tobermory and the press releases that come out are: "Yes, you've lost the presence of the Ministry of Transportation. Yes, we're considering moving out of the detachment at Lion's Head, but don't worry, the service will be better. We won't be there as much, but the service will be better."

I would like somebody to talk in terms of the truth in advertising that we all need as public policy individuals. The fact is if people aren't around, they're not around. If people aren't there at first hand to see what the road conditions are like, then it's not as good as it used to be.

If the police detachment is not there full-time, then the perception is, and probably the reality is, that when Murray Elston goes to drop into what used to be the detachment and nobody's there, then I know the service is not as good. Maybe there are two people in cars out in the middle of nowhere.

The same thing with health care. You can't keep chipping away at this and a little bit off here and another piece off there and tell people that with this chipping and this clipping at the edges the service is going to be better. Let's be honest with the people.

If it is unavoidable, because there are problems financially, then let's confess the problem is that we can't afford to do what was done before. Likewise, if somebody can come up and say, "We used to do this procedure and it is no longer necessary," I'm going to applaud the people who take that out of service.

We did it at one time in the Ministry of Health when I was there and I got a lot of static because I said it's no longer necessary to pay for taking wisdom teeth out of people's mouths unless you had to go into a hospital circumstance where you required an anaesthetic.

If you can do it in a different way and a better way, then that's okay. The member for St Andrew-St Patrick, I just recall, probably would have some firsthand recollection of those discussions.

We did that because we wanted to move to providing service to children generally, but also to a lot of people who needed work on their jaws as a result of having been born with birth defects. You could get medical treatment for curing the palate and all of that, but you couldn't get the dental work covered, and $20,000 for parents at that time we thought was really a lot of money and the kids really were affected in a very bad way. But we had to make a decision.

The fact was that the medical and dental technology had moved to a stage where people could be successfully treated without a great deal of problem or cost in a way which we felt would then allow us more appropriately to help parents deal with the cleft lip and palate problem. That's the type of decision we have to be prepared to make, I think.

Let's get it very clear. In my debate today I am asking the question about whether or not the employer health tax was a right decision at all. To be quite frank, I think the evidence from my part of the country is that it has been a most unpopular tax. It has been a most impairing tax from the small operator's point of view because, when you have no margin to operate on, this means more comes off the top.

I also want it very clear that today I am calling upon the Finance minister to again underscore the commitment of the government to a genuinely high-quality health care system, not one that is going to be chipped away at the edges; not one, by the way, that allows people to opt their patients out of the system, because allowing some of these private clinic operations or taking this procedure off the list or letting the doctors charge $90 for an annual health check for the drivers of school buses—you know, school bus drivers don't get paid a whole lot of money, but anywhere from $45 to $90 is being charged in some areas by people because that is now a delisted service as far as the Ministry of Health is concerned.

That's a bit of a burden, and we require it. We require those people to have the health checks because they're driving a publicly licensed vehicle with school children and we think it's necessary to make sure the people are in good health. I think it's a good public policy to make sure of that, so why are we forcing low-paid people to pay that $45 to $90 each time they have to have that check?

I think that's bad public policy, I think that's wrong public policy, because it's not that the people feel they need the health check; it is that the government feels they need the health check. In fact, I think we all think it's a reasonably good idea.

Let's rededicate ourselves to quality. Let's rededicate ourselves to understanding whether or not we have the appropriate vehicle here to get the money.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr Robert Frankford (Scarborough East): I always enjoy listening to the member for Bruce and I know he has a lot of familiarity with the health system. I was very interested to hear his analysis of the types of tax that should be used.

Clearly we both agree that there should be a prepaid arrangement, and I use the word "prepaid" rather than "insurance," because I think we have got stuck with the insurance model and I personally feel that's a lot of the problem, that the insurance model works with procedures, fee for service. I personally have great reservations about that, as have many of my colleagues.

I think the member probably would agree in private that the employer health tax was a quick-fix way of moving to a tax-based system from premiums, but it does have its drawbacks, and one of them is the inequity which we are addressing in this particular bill.

One other failure which I would like to mention is the fact that by moving to a tax-based system, we eliminated, at the time, even the possibility of a premium arrangement. Right now we can see the drawback of that because of the people who are temporary residents or in some ways are lacking full status, who now are suddenly finding themselves without coverage and who, those I've had quite extensive discussions with, would be very eager to be able to pay a premium so that they could share in the same arrangement we have. They could just get a card for the period that they're here in return for an actuarially appropriate premium. This would also be of great assistance to the physicians and the hospitals here, which could just seamlessly bill people for necessary health services.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): I listened very attentively to my colleague for Bruce, and again it reminds me how fortunate we are in this House to have individuals with this experience and this kind of intelligence, those who have walked the direction of a full understanding of the subject.

The only unfortunate part about this Legislature is that sometimes when we hear this advice I often wonder if it is taken into consideration. I'm going to sort of reassure myself that I have confidence in the system, that the minister is listening, because what the member has done here is reassure us about the kind of health system that we have in place and that it's not bad, that we can also improve it, but that we must make sure we're going in the right direction.

The fact is that I had the opportunity in 1985 to watch this member handle one of the most delicate issues of the day at the time, the famous doctors issue, and the fact of how well he handled that and how they came to respect him because of his integrity.

I hope the members on the opposite side, the government side, who are listening, that you understand, that you go back over Hansard—we've got time—for some of those suggestions that he has made, because I feel that it's only the direction of improving that system. Of course he pointed out how concerned he is that this is the right direction we are going.

Mr Speaker, I saw you bowing your head too in agreement and many members of the government side agreeing in some of these suggestions. I just want to say to you how fortunate we are; even my good member for Scarborough East was agreeing fully with what he was saying. Again, what a fortunate opportunity we have in having this member in this House.

Mr Stockwell: There's no doubt the member who spoke, the member for Bruce, has a good understanding of the issues at hand, and I suppose it's very difficult to publicly accept this reality, particularly if you've brought in the particular employer health tax, but the reality is that it wasn't a saving grace. It was not, in the end, a policy taken by the government that resolved or brought the issue to a head and in fact tackled the issue.

Sometimes we bring forward recommendations that we call progressive, and the government opposite often spoke about progressive changes. I guess the dilemma that I have with "progressive," the only point that I can make with respect to the progressive change is that it seemed to me in the old days of the Liberal government in the beginning and then the Conservative government's 43 years that the premium system under the OHIP plan seemed to work better. It worked better, in my opinion, because there were a little better checks and balances in place.

I'm not saying that this card—

Mr Frankford: Twenty-three million cards.

Mr Stockwell: There were lots of cards, but there weren't that many active cards. They weren't active because the premium was put in place.

You argued recently about the insurance premium plan. Maybe there's a hybrid here that we can bring in this card, employer health tax, with some sort of premium, but I will guarantee this House that you will not get the system under control as long as it's simply a payroll tax because a payroll tax just deals with numbers. There are no people involved. There are no real people insured, and it's just a number based on your payroll, which has no relationship to what we're supplying people with, and that's health care service.

So until that's resolved, I don't think you're going to resolve this issue.

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): As I listened intently to my friend from Bruce, who usually plays right wing when we play hockey, sound like a left-winger today, I understood through his conversations he does support a health care system publicly funded and publicly administered.

He talked about communities collectively coming together, and I can only reflect on my own community. When Michelle Wright, who is a well-known country singer, came back to our community to help us put together a CAT scan in our community, I remember even times that I sat on the dunk tank while people threw balls at me for two bucks, and helped to raise the funds for it.

I must reiterate, because the member made reference to the member from York Mills reading from a document and I happen to have a document that seems to be circulating across this country, and it says:

"A comprehensive re-examination of Canada's health care spending is required. Without doubt, part of the immediate pressure on the program has arisen from the decision of the Conservative government to steadily withdraw from health care funding, thus passing costs on to the provinces..."

"A Liberal government will...in the renegotiation of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, engage with the provinces in a major re-examination of the funding of the health care program..."

I know the member for Bruce, who spoke very eloquently today from a left-wing perspective of a community—and I only say that jokingly. I know where he actually sits in this and I think it's to the centre right a bit, but to the centre, he tries to, but I know the member would be and I think all of us are concerned about our health care system. I know a lot of people would demand more. In rural communities, like my own, we have to travel to Windsor and London for the services, and we'd prefer seeing the services in our community. It's a matter of cost-effectiveness and cost-efficiency that has to be put in place.

He talked about the story that was about the person with leukaemia. I can recollect with that because my sister at the age of nine died with leukaemia in our own home, and I understand the costs that are associated with that.

1650

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Bruce, you have two minutes.

Mr Elston: There are some pretty good suggestions, I think, about us looking at some other things that we should do. The member for Scarborough East's suggestion, for instance, that we have a way for people to enter our system when they're here temporarily is not a bad suggestion. It seems to me that it's something we could take a look at. The thing that obviously you have to be careful of is that people don't try to get into the system when they know they've got a very bad pre-existing condition. But all of those things we can check.

I like when people want to have access to our system, because that type of endorsement is hard to get from our own people, who I think really have become familiar and comfortable with our system and also demanding in a way which is kind of a credit to the people who work in the health care system.

I do believe, and I agree with the member for Etobicoke West, that the health care tax is not appropriate. Where it really did work, and this an interesting thing about the employer health tax, we used to lose a lot of people when they moved from one job to another. If I was working at GM or something and I fell out of the group coverage, then I had to apply with the 104 form to get myself re-enrolled. I could be lost. I maybe didn't bother until I found out that my child was sick with appendicitis or whatever it might be. So we had to chase that person. The administration was hard. We had cheques to cash; we had all of that administration. There were some benefits that were picked up, but at the end of the day, the premiums aren't the easiest thing to administer and you can't chase people down.

The employer health tax got us away from chasing individuals and making sure that nobody falls out of registration once you're enrolled, and that, I think, is a real benefit. The place that it does hurt is for those people who have no margin to work with in the small business sectors. That is where it really is a punishment and that's where it is regressive, because those people probably could have gotten a premium exemption under the old system. That's difficult.

I think we should re-examine and I'm sure that there will be a re-examination of this system. Right now, I think my vote will be just in protest of the extension of it.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate? The member for Don Mills.

Mr David Johnson (Don Mills): This bill has a number of interesting aspects. Last week at a town hall meeting—

Mr Anthony Perruzza (Downsview): David, we haven't heard you for a while. Come on.

Mr David Johnson: The member is pleased to see me speaking. I am pleased to see the member in the House. Thank you very much for your comments.

Mr Stockwell: You might regret that statement.

Mr Perruzza: Breathe a little life into it.

Mr David Johnson: All right, we'll do what we can.

Last week at a town hall meeting I raised the fact that this week we were still discussing tax increases from the budget of 1993, and that's exactly what we're doing here today on two counts.

Earlier this afternoon we had a vote on a bill that implemented the provincial sales tax on auto insurance. All those people in Ontario who are delighted with the 5% increase on their auto insurance—and there must be one or two somewhere; I haven't found them yet—can thank the debate we've had over the last couple of weeks and can thank this government for implementing a bill in the 1993 budget which is still debated right up until this afternoon. The provincial sales tax on home insurance; the provincial sales tax on various employee programs, insurance programs, that sort of thing; the provincial sales tax on sand, gravel, building materials, and on and on it goes: That was a bill that we voted on earlier this afternoon. That was a bill that came out of the 1993 budget and, believe it or not, we're just dealing with it today.

It's interesting; when we talk about the 1993 budget, people assume that is way back in the past, dealt with, a nightmare that's behind us, and yet how many days of debate have we had on the 1993 budget?

Mr Stockwell: Two days.

Mr David Johnson: The member for Etobicoke says, "Two days." That's the kind of priority this government puts in terms of the financial status of this province, the financial situation of the province: Bringing in $2-billion worth of tax increases—another two; two is the key number here—and two whole days of debate is what's permitted on it.

Mr Stockwell: A billion bucks a day.

Mr David Johnson: A billion bucks a day. You know, it's really frightening that that's—

Mr Perruzza: How much is that in dollars?

Mr David Johnson: The member is interested in dollars. That's actually $4 billion over the three budgets that this government has brought in: $1 billion in tax increases in the first, $1 billion in the second and $2 billion in the last one.

Here we go on another tax increase from the 1993 year, yet next week on May 5 we are going to see a new budget for 1994.

Mr Perruzza: It's an exciting day for Ontario next week.

Mr David Johnson: An exciting day? It'll be an exciting day if for once there are no tax increases. Has the message sunk in? I think it has. I hope it has. We'll be waiting. The taxpayers are waiting.

The members opposite are wondering what the public mood is. Last year, I might say, during the budget process, the Progressive Conservative Party went out and talked to the people, and I'll tell you the feedback we got on the budget last year, if I could repeat it in this House: the people are sick and tired of the tax increases.

I bring to the members opposite a little education on this matter, because I know they haven't been quite so anxious to hear this message. I bring to them a letter from a constituent of mine. This is a letter I received yesterday from a constituent.

Mr Perruzza: Send it on over, will you?

Mr David Johnson: To the member for Yorkview, it's entitled "The Excessive Tax Burden in Ontario and the Excessive Tax Spending of the Provincial Government." That's bang on. My constituent says, "I wish to send a strong message to you and your government." This is the unfortunate part of the whole letter: They wish to send a strong message to me and my government. Well, I can assure the people of Don Mills and the people of Ontario that this government opposite is not my government. This is the government we got saddled with in the election four years ago, but this is not my government.

The resident goes on to say, "Cut taxes," and this is in bold. I think those watching on television will be able to see this: "Cut taxes. Cut spending." Perhaps the members opposite can see that. This is the feeling out in Ontario today. This is the feeling that's not being reflected in the two bills, the one we voted on today and the other that we're debating here at this instant.

He says, "We face the highest tax burden anywhere in the developed world here in Ontario," and he's almost right. You may find one or two countries in the world higher taxed than right here in Ontario. "We are mad as hell and we are not going to take it any more. My wife and I are fairly productive members of society. We paid over $30,000 in income tax alone last year. However, we plan to move to the United States, to get out of here at the earliest opportunity."

There is a message there, and we can choose to ignore that message. We can say, "Here we have a right-wing reactionary, a person who's not proud of his country."

Mr Perruzza: Come on, David, breathe a little life into that one.

Mr David Johnson: To the member for Yorkview, I can tell you that many people are sick and tired of tax increases and they feel very strongly about this, to the extent that is being expressed in this letter.

Mr George Mammoliti (Yorkview): Downsview. He's Downsview, I'm Yorkview. Yorkview. Downsview.

Mr David Johnson: The member for Downsview. Thank you.

"If you cut taxes and make this country more amenable to the investor and the worker, then just maybe I'll sell off some of my US holdings etc. A primary focus for people nowadays is structuring investments to get the money out of Canada. Are you hearing the message?" No, they're not hearing the message.

"Tax evasion is no longer frowned upon by the middle-class citizens. Our wages have fallen well behind inflation over the past few years and yet at every opportunity you legislators increase our taxes.”

Interjections.

Mr David Johnson: That's a fact. Through the heckling, that is an absolute fact.

There was a number I quoted, speaking to the bill that increased the provincial sales tax: Wages over the past few years, I believe it's 10 years, since 1985, have increased by 53%. The level of taxation that we are experiencing here in the province of Ontario has increased by 73%. That's 20 percentage points higher in tax increases than wage increases.

1700

So the constituent of mine is bang on. He's raising a point.

The members may feel this is funny, the members may feel this is worth heckling, but I can tell you, the people will not be silenced. Come the next election, if this government doesn't pay heed, it's going to pay the price, the price it's paid in the by-elections up to this point. Is it any wonder why the government achieved 6%, 8%, 9% of the vote in the by-elections? This is one of the reasons right here and it's being expressed by a constituent of mine.

Another of the reasons this debate is of interest is because it can be construed as a debate about health or it can be construed as a debate about taxes, and we've heard both angles debated here today. I've heard some words about a health program that are a little disturbing to me. The member for York Mills was attempting to bring some sanity, some reason into this debate, and certain statements were made questioning that. I think he had every right to be concerned.

Personally, I have been involved, in my years in municipal life, with the health system in the borough of East York. I've been a member of the Toronto East General foundation, the Toronto East General hospital, located in the borough of East York, servicing the citizens of East York, servicing some citizens in North York, servicing some citizens in the city of Toronto, in the city of Scarborough. I have always been thoroughly impressed with the role our hospitals have played in our community. I've been immensely impressed with the way the hospitals have undertaken the social contract program.

This program was put upon them without proper consultation in the first instance, and this program has cost the hospitals in the province a great deal of their revenue. The hospitals in Ontario rely on that revenue to provide the services to the people they serve. Notwithstanding that, the hospitals have gone about their work, recognized the money that's come in, cut their services—I shouldn't say “services”; they have cut their costs, and they've been scrupulous about that—they've cut their costs, and in my estimation they deserve a great deal of credit for the way they've handled this situation.

I can tell you, for example, in the Toronto East General hospital they have needs, they have a great number of needs. Just to list two or three, in the surgical and emergency care section of the hospital they need electric beds. It doesn't sound like a big thing, but it's very important. In the critical care directorate they need a great deal of equipment to bring their facilities up to standard. In the maternity, children's, women's and mental health sections, they need incubators and other equipment. They're going about their business to cut their costs, to go out in the community to raise money to provide these services.

We're right to have a debate about health care, but during that debate we should recognize the stress that the professionals in the health care community have been subjected to.

The Sunnybrook hospital is in my riding, the Sunnybrook hospital that services many veterans from the wars and indeed is home to many veterans having served our country. But the Sunnybrook hospital has many different programs and the Sunnybrook hospital has needs. It has needs in the new clinical services wing to improve services to cancer patients, and this is a growing component of the Sunnybrook hospital. The cardiac and trauma patients are needing increased services in the Sunnybrook hospital. The needs are immense: the intensive care units, the operating rooms, the ambulatory care centre, the centralized diagnostic services in the Sunnybrook hospital, and on and on it goes.

These hospitals are in a sense the meat in the sandwich. They are trying to provide the services that are demanded by the public on the one hand with the money that's available on the other hand, and in my estimation they're doing an excellent job.

The North York General Hospital is an example of another hospital. If we want to talk about health services, as we should during this debate, perhaps we should mention the North York General Hospital and the emergency care and the expansion and the modernization that's required in that particular hospital.

Perhaps we should mention the seniors' health care at the North York hospital, the seniors' health care which is a growing component of our life here in the province of Ontario. We are an aging community in the province of Ontario. The services to seniors are required, and the North York General Hospital is a good example of that.

These are some of the excellent health programs that we have today in the province of Ontario. So it's right that we talk about health care services, but it's also fitting that members who have spoken earlier, particularly the member for York Mills, raise the issue of funding.

The situation is, and the situation that I believe the member was bringing to our attention, that of every budget dollar that is required in the province of Ontario, 32 cents goes to health—32 cents out of every dollar. Education takes 17 cents, social services 20 cents, the public debt—the interest, just to pay the public debt, because governments in the past, and I have to say that Progressive Conservative governments have played a role in that as well, but over the past few years in particular, the debt has risen to the extent that today 13 cents out of every dollar in the budget goes to pay the interest on the debt, and nothing else.

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): Just like in 1984.

Mr David Johnson: The member opposite from the Liberal ranks has made a comment about 1984. I want to come to the period following 1984 in a moment. I'll come to the period following 1984 in a moment. But that's the situation we face, that health is 32 cents out of every dollar in the budget.

The revenues, on the other hand—and that's what we're speaking about here today, the revenues coming in from the employer health tax—six cents out of every dollar in revenue comes from the employer health tax. So there's obviously an imbalance there.

The employer health tax in reality is just a source of revenue. If there's a perception that the employer health tax pays for all our health needs in the province of Ontario, then I hope that's dispelled, because 32 cents out of every dollar represents over $17 billion in health needs, with revenues of about $2.5 billion from the employer health tax. That I believe is what was trying to be conveyed, and we need to have a sensible discussion about that.

It's interesting that, looking at another angle of this, this employer health tax—and my colleague from the Liberal ranks harkens me back to the 1980s—was introduced in the 1989-90 budget, but it had good company at that particular point in time. Indeed, in that budget, a Liberal budget, there were 16 taxes increases. This was one of the 16 tax increases.

I might say, for those curious as to what the other 15 were, the personal income tax was raised to 53%. That sounds low today. Today it's actually up to 58%; the total rate, the high-end rate, is the highest in Canada of personal income tax, so it's gone up even further. But that year, 1989-90, 53%, it was brought up to that point.

The gasoline and fuel taxes were increased in 1989-90. The famous tire tax was imposed, the $5 tire tax. I know many of the citizens of the province of Ontario have paid a $5 fee every time they purchased a tire; that tax was put on 10 million tires a year, by all accounts. There was some $200 million generated in revenue through that tire tax, and a very small proportion of that money ever went to the purpose that was intended, which was to recycle tires, reuse tires.

That tax, thank heaven, has now been eliminated, but that tax was included the same year as the employer health tax. A gas guzzler tax came in that year; a five-cent container tax on non-returnable recyclable containers. The commercial concentration tax was implemented in that same year. So there was a whole plethora of taxes that were increased with the employer health tax.

The employer health tax was estimated to bring in over $2 billion in taxes, which it has done. I was not in the Legislature at that particular point in time. My colleagues tell me that the Premier, in opposition, termed the employer health tax to be a cash cow, one that would raise considerable amounts of money. Over the intervening years the tax has generated about two and a half billion dollars a year.

I might say, the land transfer tax—and that's a favourite tax, I'm sure, to many people—was also included in that 1989-90 budget by the Liberal government.

Here we are back in 1989, we have all of these new taxes coming in. We have a new tax, the employer health tax. We have the OHIP premium being rejected, an OHIP premium over which we had some control. Now we have a new employer health tax that is brought in, generating over $2-billion worth of revenue, and the problems began in our health care system.

Right away the health cards became out of control, to the point that today it's estimated that there are somewhere between 500,000 and perhaps double that, a million cards that are not accounted for in Ontario. This is really an outrage. This is an outrage to the citizens of the province of Ontario that there are so many cards that are unaccounted for that are used illegally, that drive up our health care costs, are used by Americans, are used by people coming in from other countries.

The amounts of money that are associated with these unaccounted cards are staggering. The estimates are in the hundreds of millions of dollars. I've seen estimates up to $1 billion in costs—fraud, I would call it, people using cards who are not entitled to use these cards. This is where the control seems to have been lost.

Speaking of control, I was interested to read the auditor's report—and I'll admit, this is the 1992 auditor's report; the auditor doesn't report on every aspect of provincial finances every year—and in the 1992 Provincial Auditor's report under "Employer Health Tax" he stated that, "The ministry did not audit employer payrolls to verify the accuracy of the employer health tax remitted." There was not an audit to verify the accuracy of the employer health tax. Bear in mind, this was some time after the employer health tax had been implemented, so there was time to do the auditing, but the auditing was not done.

"The ministry estimated that lost revenues from both underreported payrolls and from unregistered employers is about $140 million annually." So here we are talking about $140 million in underreported payrolls and from unregistered employees, employees who were not known to the government and consequently the tax was understated. It demonstrates the lack of control in the system.

The auditor says "Several options should be pursued to obtain audit coverage." I think, if anything, today the system is more out of control than it was two years ago when the auditor made that statement.

The auditor went on to say that the "Employer account balances contained significant errors because the system processed remittance forms which had not been properly completed by employees. Consequently, employers received erroneous statements, about $5 million had been incorrectly credited to employer accounts, and collection efforts have been significantly delayed." Again, problems in the control of the employer health tax system. Is there anybody who would say that our health system is financially under more control today than it was when the auditor made those comments in 1992? I would doubt it very much.

What we're talking about today in this bill is extending the employer health tax system to self-employed individuals. I might say that goes against the grain of what's happening in Manitoba, for example. In Manitoba, the government apparently recognizes, in this instance, the burden of payroll taxes on businesses, and businesses—I'll tell you, I've met with the Toronto board of trade, I've met with business organizations representing many aspects of life in the province of Ontario and the message is a familiar one, it's a constant one: Businesses are being suffered by payroll taxes, by the workers' compensation, by the unemployment insurance. Here we are with the employer health tax. This is a message that's coming across.

In Manitoba, what did they do? They raised the exemption rate up to $750,000. So if you have a business in Manitoba with a payroll of under $750,000, you do not pay an employer health tax. That's an encouragement for small business. Why couldn't we look at that here in Ontario? What are we doing in Ontario? We're going the other way. This bill goes exactly the other way. This bill says no, there are people out there—they may be accountants, they be consultants, but they're self-employed people and they should pay a tax.

I suppose you can argue a fairness aspect; some people pay the tax, some people don't. But shouldn't there be a recognition in this day and age, in the recession that we've come through, in the hard times where small businesses are hanging on by their fingernails, where every nickel counts—we're hearing that message and I'm sure the government must be hearing that message—that this is not the right time to increase a tax? If there is a right time, it's certainly not today, to extend this payroll tax to more people. That's the message Manitoba has received.

I was disappointed with the Fair Tax Commission's analysis of this situation. The Fair Tax Commission, I must say, has been roundly criticized for this and, while there are some good aspects of the Fair Tax Commission, there are many, many aspects that are going to be a great problem, and I hope the government recognizes this.

The Fair Tax Commission went the route of suggesting that the employer health tax, which is now a graduated system, should be a uniform system, but should be a uniform system at a high rate generating, I believe, about a quarter of a billion dollars in extra revenue. Well, there's the key. Well, there's the key. The Fair Tax Commission is looking at a way of generating more revenue again. It won't work. We've seen the revolt with high taxes on cigarettes. We've seen the smuggling. When the taxes are out of line, people say: "This is not reasonable. Taxes are too high." The underground economy flourishes.

The home builders of Ontario tell us that 41% of home renovations are paid for by cash. People do not believe that the tax structure in the province of Ontario makes sense any more. They avoid it. Now we're seeing this problem in the liquor industry, with a couple of charges the other day of premises that were purchasing home-built booze, I guess. In talking with the chairman of the LCBO, this is becoming a regular occurrence: It's not just these two premises that are being charged, but tax avoidance is the aim of the game. Why? Because our taxes are too high. Our personal income tax is way too high at 58% of the federal amount. Our employer payroll taxes are too high. It's a burden. We have the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto saying that something has to be done, that our businesses are just overwhelmed by the taxes.

Here we have a bill, Bill 110, which is suggesting that the tax be broadened and more people—I guess accountants and consultants are easy targets; perhaps they're not favoured people of the government, the self-employed. But this tax is not going to generate enough revenue to cover our medical needs; $35 million, I think, is the estimate. It'll generate less. I can guarantee it. People will go underground. There will be more tax avoidance. This is the wrong time for Bill 110.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Questions or comments? Further debate.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): It wasn't my intention, I think, at the beginning of the day to speak to this bill, but there have been some things said today that have prompted me to do so.

I want to start out on a positive note. That might surprise my friends who are starting to chirp over in the corner, but I'd like to start off on a positive note. That is, and I think it was said earlier in the House today, that we do have a good health care system, albeit it may have some problems.

I've had recent experience, as a matter of fact, in our family where there was a time of need, where there was an emergency, and in that instance our health care system performed admirably well. I know there are other instances, and I hear of them each day in Essex South, where there are problems with someone accessing the health care system for a particular problem, but I don't think we should lose sight of the fact that we have one of the finest, if not the finest, health care system in North America and perhaps even in the world.

Health care is a particular concern in my area. A great deal has been said about it recently in that we're undergoing some radical changes in the Essex South and Windsor areas. Windsor is out of my riding, but the health council affects the residents of my riding. There are attempts in Windsor, and I suspect they'll be successful, to make some changes in the delivery of health care that will result in a considerable amount of saving. I think that's one of the areas we should look at: giving better health care, more efficient health care, but doing it more effectively and therefore in some instances less costly.

In Essex South in particular we have the only hospital outside of the city of Windsor and from there to the city of Chatham. It's a small hospital but it's a hospital that I think delivers excellent care.

There are seniors in my riding who are going to depend more and more each year on our health care system. Those residents of my riding are of course concerned.

Therefore, that brings me to the point of the bill that we're discussing today, that being Bill 110, and in particular to the health care portion of that bill. I agree with what's been said here earlier this afternoon by some of us on this side of the House, that this is not the time to increase taxes. As I said before, I think it's the time that we look to save money in our health care system in order to deliver it more efficiently.

Let me give you an example of why I don't think it's the right time to increase taxes. Right now the unemployment rate is at 10.4%. The average real gross domestic product growth over the last three years has been 0.3%. In fact, it's been minimal growth. What I am concerned about is that any introduction of taxes at this time, particularly on the self-employed, will impede any growth we may be hoping for in the near future.

The self-employed aren't only the accountants and the lawyers and the doctors. The self-employed aren't necessarily rich people. Of course, it says in this legislation that self-employed who make less than $40,000 a year won't be affected. I'm glad to see that, because there are a great number of the self-employed who certainly make less than $40,000.

But it's those individuals we're counting on, who we're asking to make an investment in this province, that we may be hindering with any kind of tax increase at present. As all of us have recently gone about this province and asked that we create an environment in which employment can then be created, again, this is the kind of thing that's going to put the damper on that environment. That's going to put the damper on the enthusiasm for it.

There's been some criticism today of the employer health tax and the fact that it's not related to the number of people it serves, like the old premium system was. But I suggest that our main objective is of course to take care of our people. If we always relate the income to the numbers, why, we may never do some of the things we should for the citizens of our province.

A few minutes ago, the member for Don Mills talked about the increases in taxes that may have been put in place by the current government and perhaps by the previous government, which I wasn't part of, but I certainly represent the party.

When the members from the Conservative Party speak about being the great tax eliminators and the great tax fighters—I just happen to have this with me, just happen to carry it around in my briefcase, because I really didn't intend to speak on this today. But during the last recession, and it may have helped extend that recession, in the 1981 Ontario budget presented by Frank Miller of the Progressive Conservative Party, OHIP premiums were raised by 15%, to bring in $120 million.

During the last recession, in the 1982 budget, OHIP premiums were increased by $4 a month for individuals and $8 a month for families, to bring in $170 million. During the 1983 Ontario budget, again presented by Mr Miller and the Tory government in power at that time, OHIP premiums were increased by 4.9%. That resulted in $1.35 for singles and $2.70 per family—

Mr Stockwell: A buck thirty-five.

Mr Crozier: But it adds up—for a revenue of $60 million. These are the tax fighters. He says, "It's only a buck thirty-five," but it amounts to $60 million. The point is that they were tax fighters. In 1984, the Tories increased the OHIP premiums again by 4.9%, another $70 million.

I'm coming to the best part. The interesting thing, and it was my friend the member for Don Mills who brought this up, is that Mike Harris, the tax fighter, supported every one of those tax increases, along with a multitude of others that were on alcohol, tobacco, corporations income tax, social services maintenance tax. That's one that even the current government hasn't been so creative as to bring about: social services maintenance tax. Retail sales taxes were increased while the tax fighter was in office.

What I'm saying is that had I been here then, as I am now, and since we were in a recession then, as we are now, I would have stood up and opposed these increases in tax as well.

Then, in November 1993, just a few months ago, at a speech given to the Ontario Hospital Association, the leader of the third party, Mr Harris, told his audience that he supports user fees for health care. If that isn't a tax on the poor, in many instances, if that isn't a tax on the seniors, then I don't know what is, because a user fee by any other name is just a tax.

What I'm saying in general terms is that it's not the time for a tax increase, if, as it's been suggested before, there ever is a time. So let me make some suggestions. What can we do rather than increase taxes? What can we do, rather than further tax the self-employed at this time, when we want them to invest in our economy, that will allow them to continue to do that? Yet what can we do that will, at the same time, save us money that we can put into our health care system?

I have a card here that was put out by our leader, Lyn McLeod, on changing politics. I'll just take one suggestion from that that may help us in this instance. What we're talking about, if the figures I have are correct, is that we're expecting to raise $35 million with this particular tax increase, and it's going to result in $10 million in tax credits, so we're going to end up with $25 million. How can we find that $25 million without increasing taxes?

We could reduce the number of political staff who walk around this lovely Queen's Park of ours, that's larger, I'm told—and you have to realize I'm new here, so I need the help of my friends across the way—than at any time in history. Let me take that advice and suggest that we could reduce the number of political staff and save $2 million a year. You keep track of this, because I'm not so sure I'll get up to the whole $25 million—but nevertheless.

Take Lyn McLeod's task force on creating jobs. How can we increase our revenues by not increasing taxes, by taking some of the advice of our leader? Our leader said, first of all, and I agree with her, holding the line on taxes to boost business and consumer confidence—just what I said a few minutes ago. We have to create an air of confidence so that things will start going again—perhaps before the member across there was even born. He's such a young fellow.

Mr Hope: Just tells you how young I am.

Mr Crozier: Exactly. We could reduce the deficit by cutting government spending, by eliminating wasteful programs, and we can encourage economic growth again by kind of redefining the role of government. Get the government out of small business, self-employed people's hair, and they'll create more money for you. The employer health tax and workers' compensation taxes aren't the way to get out of their face.

We could ease the regulatory burden on small business. They tell us that then they'll have more time to get out and increase their revenues and consequently do better for the province. But what is this employer health tax going to do? When you put it on the self-employed, it's going to cause more red tape. They're telling us they want less red tape and we're going to cause more red tape for them. So I think that's something we could do.

I have another suggestion. When it comes to our health care system itself, you just take the commonsense approach. Spend your health care dollars wisely. You could eliminate fraud, and that's been suggested here—abuse, duplication and waste. If you could attack those areas, fraud, abuse, duplication and waste, I suspect that you would even save more than the net $25 million that this is going to get you.

I do want to mention the one thing about user fees again. In spite of the fact that Mike Harris and the Tories are in favour of user fees, in spite of the fact that they want to tax the less fortunate and the seniors in our province—because the rich people can afford user fees. No problem for them. We, like some of our other friends in the House, want to stay away from user fees, but we, I think, can simply increase the efficiency in our health care system, and as well, since this bill addresses the Workers' Compensation Act, we can increase efficiency.

People asked me, when I was attempting to get the office that I have today: "What is it you're going to do for us when you go down there, Bruce? Are you going to become like the rest of them and just forget about Essex South?"

I said: "No. I'm going to go down there and I think that we can save a great deal of money by simply becoming more efficient, looking at abuse throughout government, not just the health care system or the workers' compensation, but throughout entire"—

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): You won't forget about the people in Essex South?

Mr Crozier: I won't forget about the people in Essex South. Thank you very much. I know they want to hear that.

"I'm going to go down there and if I can do one thing only, I'll see that they spend their money more wisely."

Applause.

Mr Crozier: Thanks very well. My leader made me the associate Finance critic, or appointed me to be associate Finance critic—I guess I have to make myself that—and also put me on the public accounts committee. So there are the two areas where I can look at government spending. I don't think raising taxes at this time, be it the health tax or in workers' comp or any other area, is the way to attack the problem when we're in a recession.

Ease off a little bit. Back us up from that wall of tax that we've hit. Let's each of us look in our own office, in our own area and in our own ministries where we can save money, and this $25 million net that you're trying to collect here will come to you, I think perhaps several times over.

Thank you, Mr Speaker. As I said at the beginning of the day, it wasn't my intention to speak to this bill, but there have been some things said that I felt the record should be made straight on that I have had the opportunity to do today, and I thank you very much, sir.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): I would like to compliment the member for Essex South in what was his first of many speeches in this Legislature. I think, Mr Speaker, that you, as I know, were listening intently. The member is very adept at his new responsibility, not only as the MPP for Essex South, but also as the associate Finance critic.

I know from dealing with Bruce that he speaks up and loudly for the interests of his constituents, and I think that has come through in what has been his first speech in this Legislature. He brings forward important issues, important issues not only to his own riding but indeed which affect all of the people of this province. He speaks in a manner of determination and of commitment. He speaks intently and intensively about those things which concern him and the people whom he has been elected to serve.

There is no question that in this speech we see an individual who serves his constituents well, and as well serves our caucus well as the associate Finance critic. He brings forward important issues, he brings them forth in a forceful manner, and I would like to just take that moment that is given to me as two minutes to congratulate him on this speech, the first of many in this Legislature over many, many years.

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): I too would like to congratulate the member for Essex South on some of the views that he has put forward as our associate Finance critic. He indicated about serving his constituents of Essex South, and I must say that we have been happy that he has joined our caucus and I know full well that he will certainly continue to serve those constituents.

The member for Essex South brings forth a good point in his main speech. He indicated that user fees by any other name is just another tax. I must say to him that as we take a look at what this government is doing and how it's increasing those user fees, adding those user fees to various different things, we are certainly seeing just another form of taxation.

He indicated a number of times too that our leader has talked about changing the way we do government and changing what we are doing around Queen's Park here. I must say that the member for Essex South will have a much better chance at serving his constituents after the next election when our leader becomes the Premier of this province and is allowed to put forth those ideas that she is presently carrying throughout the province.

He said something which sits well as well with a lot of my constituents. Only yesterday afternoon we were at the Ontario Hotel and Motel Association's luncheon, and when the leader indicated that she too would be looking at the cutting of red tape, reduction of taxation and of course above all the creation of jobs across this province, that message was very well received. I must say that's a message the member for Essex South, our associate Finance critic, has carried forth in a very proper manner as well.

Again, if I just might, I'd like to congratulate him on his maiden speech in the House. I can tell his constituents that he will certainly do a good job on their behalf.

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): I want to join with the other members in the chorus of acclaim for the member for Essex South, whose maiden speech to this Assembly was an excellent one. I know both the thrill and the challenge that can represent, as it was not so very long ago that I too made my maiden speech in here. I actually was unused to the half-hour time segments that there are and I actually could only speak for 19 minutes. However, I've gotten over that now and I can fill out the time.

I do know, and I want to send a message to those viewers who may be watching, that in the member for Essex South, Mr Bruce Crozier, they have an excellent member, a member who will serve them with distinction and ability and talent and forthrightness for many, many years to come, both as the MPP for the riding and, I know, in greater and wiser and better callings, perhaps a cabinet post. You never know. He has the talent, the ability and the experience in his community. That may come as soon as months away, a few more months, this fall or maybe next spring, when the NDP will meet its comeuppance at the hands of the electors.

I know in my riding, much like the member for Essex South's, the electors are waiting for their chance to vote them out and will be, I think, presented with that possibility and will not feel the frustration, for example, they felt when Brian Mulroney resigned and they couldn't vote him out. They're going to get a chance to vote the NDP out, and they're looking forward to it. I think they will get that opportunity, seeing the comparable choice by the kinds of arguments and skill presented by the member for Essex South on behalf of his constituents, who I know will appreciate in the years to come the kind of quality he brings to the job.

Mr Stockwell: On such an important issue as this, it's certainly good to hear from a member who's reasonably newly elected. You forget, I guess, considering the last session that he came in, that this would be his maiden speech. I myself would like to take the time to thank him. It's good to hear from people and the concerns around this province, and those were enunciated very clearly by the member. It was of some interest to hear his rendition of history, certainly during the Conservative years, and maybe ours may be somewhat different. I can only offer my sincere congratulations on his election, because we in this party understand the democratic process.

I would ask, when he speaks again, if he can come back at this issue on another day and work in those actual whole numbers when he talks about the percentage increases to the premiums. It might be of some interest. It would help me certainly when I get up to applaud you next time. It won't be a maiden speech, and you'll find, as Mr Cooke, the Education minister, said, "There are only two times you get applauded by the entire House in this place, and that's when you're welcomed in and when you resign."

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member for Essex South has two minutes in response.

Mr Crozier: There are two things I didn't expect today. One was to speak, and the second was to hear these nice things said.

I don't want to use unparliamentary language, but my colleague reminded me, when he talked about the percentages and the figures—I'm an accountant, by the way, and I've always been told that figures lie and liars figure. I hope not to do that with any of the figures in the future.

But really, I am pleased to have had the opportunity to address the House today. I hope I was able to add something to the debate and not take too much away so that the net result is too little.

Thank you very much. I know that if you receive me this way each time I speak, my stay here will be most pleasurable.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate.

Mr Stockwell: This debate has sort of wound its way through quite a number of issues, and it really entered into a different level, I suppose, when the member for Bruce got up and spoke about the health care system in this province and the way it is situated today: the health, in fact, of the health care system—no pun intended—and how we are going to go about, through different parties, rectifying the situation.

I think the member for Bruce used a lot of nice words on how to fix the system and why we need the system to be as universal as possible and to ensure that with that universality, there will be no tax hikes. I know the member for Essex-Kent just commented on the tax hikes and the need to ensure that we don't have any more tax hikes.

But I guess the rub, as far as I'm concerned, is simply this: Something has to give, not just in the health care system but across the entire finances of this province. Everyone in this House seems to stand at one time or another and express to each other about the greatness of this health care system and the universality of it, and the fact it shouldn't be chipped away at from the outside and user fees implemented in any way, shape or form. Particularly on the opposition benches, it's much easier to say, "No tax hikes and no user fees."

I know the government of the day when in opposition mentioned on a number of occasions that it was thoroughly opposed to any form of user fee, co-payment or any program that involved actually paying for health care. We know that today to be a very different position this government has taken. If you want to get an ambulance in some parts of this province, it costs you money. It costs you money out of your pocket. Many would suggest that that is truly a form of a user fee.

The very difficult problem faced by this government and by a succession of governments, whoever gets elected, is going to be how do you deal with the situation when you have a public out there that says, "We don't want any tax hikes, but we don't want any service reductions."

The only place that they will not debate service reductions appears to be in the health care system. In fact, it seems to be our claim on our culture. There seems to be a move afoot or a mood out there in the general public that what makes you a Canadian is the fact that you have universal access to health care. That seems to be a position proffered by many people out there, and many people seem to buy into it.

What I don't understand, and I put to the government and put to the Liberals and I say it in our caucus on a number of occasions, how can you have universal access to health care and not increase taxes and have no deficit? It doesn't seem to wash. It doesn't seem to make sense.

You've got a health care system that's costing you in the neighbourhood of $17 billion a year. Now you're only collecting about $40-odd billion in revenue. If you're only collecting $40-odd billion, you're spending in excess of $50 billion now, and your health care system costs you $17 billion, that means when you talk about priority spending, you're talking about huge and massive cuts in other sections of this government. Case closed. Debate over. You can't have a $17-billion health care system and collect $40 billion in revenue, roughly, and then say you're going to balance the budget and have no tax hikes.

Although we use some very nice words and although everyone wants to stand up and be counted on health care and say, "I will not touch health care, I don't believe in user fees, I don't think health care is on the table," then you've got to explain to me and the general public out there, if that is the case, what is on the table? Because if health care is not on the table and you're going to reduce this deficit and balance the budget, you've got to put education on the table and you've got to put social services on the table and you've got to put deficit payments on the table. Because when you deal with a budget, as the Treasurer's going to have to in the next week or so, three sections of this budget chew up enough money that he doesn't have to spend another nickel, and that's how he balanced his budget.

Do you realize that? When you get health care, servicing the debt, education and social services, there's nothing left to spend after that, because you've spent it all, let alone every other minister who sits out there, from the Attorney General to Agriculture to Economic Development to any of the other ministries. There's not a nickel left to spend if those three issues are off the table.

We seem to have decided today that issue one that is off the table is health care. Tell me, aside from all the lovely words, and deal with it in practical economic terms, how it is we are going to provide universal access, maintain levels of social services, maintain spending levels on education, balance the budget, reduce the deficit and have no new taxes. That's absurd. That's absolutely absurd. It can't be done, because two plus two equals four and it will never equal eight. That's the only way you're going to balance the budget under that approach: if you try and convince people that two plus two equals eight. And that's the dilemma.

Before we finish with the rhetoric, in my opinion, and the kind of glossy, $10 words about the need for these programs and the sanctity and the fact that they'll never be touched and so on and so forth, fine: You pick your programs that are not up for debate and I'll pick my programs that are not up for debate, and then you go out and tell the public what is going to be axed, what is going to be reduced, what is going to be capped.

We know you're not going to increase taxes and we know you don't want the deficit to go any higher, so my friends across the floor have a very difficult job a week from today. That difficult job is to tell me how they're going to maintain universality and how they're going to maintain all the other programs and how they're going to keep a lid on the deficit, and how they're going to do all that and not increase taxes. I'd say it can't be done.

What is the dilemma? Well, the dilemma is another phrase that seems to be picking up steam as we get closer to the election. It's the phrase of "spending smarter." Some of the other phrases they use are "spending smarter" or "priority spending" and those kinds of things. You know what spending smarter means? Spending smarter means cuts; read "cuts." That's just a catchphrase.

Preston Manning was a good example. He ran in the last federal election and he used to talk about transfers to individuals. Transfers to individuals at a federal level meant—read into that—seniors' pensions. He would cut transfers to individuals; that meant seniors' pensions. They didn't understand that, I don't think, but that's what he meant. So when we hear people talk about "priority spending" and "spending smarter," those are just terms for cuts. And my question is, what are your cuts?

Mr Sutherland: You're not supposed to give away your code words.

Mr Stockwell: These aren't my code words; these are universal code words. The Liberal book was full of them in the last federal election. Your Agenda for People was a litany of code words; there was a code word for everything. What I'd like the people to come forward and say is not how precious this system we have is; I'd like them to come forward and tell me where their priorities are. Where does spending go and where does it not go? Does it not go to education? Does it not go to social services? Does it not go to health? It has to not go someplace, because $40 billion is less than $50 billion, and that's going to happen every day of the week. That's how much money you collect and that's how much money you spend.

I'm going to pick up the action on this debate another day—I'll have 20 minutes to finish—and I want to talk about where my priority spending is. My priority spending involves different things maybe to different people. Yes, I agree with the health care system and I agree with a system that allows universal access, but I will be frank enough to tell you that if I believe in universal health care and universal access, I'm going to tell you there are places that I think we're going to have to stop spending money, big amounts of money.

Mrs Karen Haslam (Perth): Where?

Mr Stockwell: In the next 20 minutes I will tell you where those places are, so I expect the member to be back and taking notes.

I will say today, just before 6 o'clock, just before I adjourn this House, that it's a big day for the member for Yorkview. After one heated debate a couple of years ago I think I offended him, and I'm sorry. I want to just wish his daughter, Nicole, a happy birthday. She's five years old. And I apologize for a couple of years ago.

On that, I will adjourn the debate today.

The Acting Speaker: It being 6 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, April 28, at 10 o'clock.

The House adjourned at 1800.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Mr Norman W. Sterling (Carleton): Madam Speaker, in the absence of Mr Stockwell, I move second reading of Bill 114.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Do we have unanimous consent that the member for Carleton move this motion? Agreed.

PUBLIC SECTOR EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION DISCLOSURE ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 SUR LA DIVULGATION DE LA RÉTRIBUTION DES CADRES DANS LE SECTEUR PUBLIC

Mr Sterling, on behalf of Mr Stockwell, moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 114, An Act to provide for the Disclosure of Executive Compensation in the Public Sector / Projet de loi 114, Loi prévoyant la divulgation de la rétribution des cadres dans le secteur public.

Mr Norman W. Sterling (Carleton): It's unfortunate that my colleague the member for Etobicoke West, Mr Stockwell, was not able to be here with us this morning due to an emergency which arose only a short time ago.

Mr Stockwell's bill outlines a method of requiring those in the public service at the executive level to have their salaries disclosed in a public fashion. I believe this was in response to the requirement by this government that the top executives in private industry be required to have their salaries disclosed in a public manner.

When that bill was brought forward, I believe that many in this Legislature, on all sides of the House, felt it was proper that those people who are in a trusted private category of leading large corporations should indeed have their salaries made public. We found it strangely odd on this side of the House that while we were requiring people in the private sector to disclose their actual salaries, we were not requiring that of public servants.

At the present time one can ask a member of the government to disclose salaries of various and different people within the government. Unfortunately, what has transpired is that you get back from the government a salary range, and those salary ranges can be quite wide.

For instance, not too long ago I had asked for the salary of an employee in a minister's office. I was informed that the salary range was from $41,000 to $61,000. Well, quite frankly, that would make up a range of some 35% of the total salary and is unsatisfactory. In other words, there is a great difference between an executive assistant to a minister being paid $41,000 or an executive assistant being paid $61,000.

As we go up the scale in terms of deputy ministers, going up to the level of deputy minister and senior bureaucrat, those ranges would even be much wider than the ones that I was exhibiting there. In other words, you might have a range from $100,000 to $135,000.

It's our feeling that everyone in the public service earning over a base rate of perhaps $45,000 or $50,000 should have their salary made public. This was the position my party took during recent hearings on freedom of information and privacy in the Legislative Assembly committee during the winter recess, when we were looking over the municipal freedom of information and privacy bill. We believe, quite frankly, that the taxpayer has the right to know what the compensation is for everyone over that category.

It's odd that this was the position of the former Progressive Conservative government prior to 1985. It was only when the Liberal government took over that they started to hide information about what they were paying their particular civil servants. Many of the members of the Legislature here don't recall the change that took place over 1985 when government changed. What in fact had happened at that time was that the new Liberal government coming in in June or July 1985 hired many people out of the press gallery and was quite embarrassed about the very large salaries it was paying off to many of the former press gallery who were there prior to 1985.

In order to hide what those individuals were being paid by ministers, they changed the rules. They said, "We will not tell you how much we're paying to buy off the press," in terms of what happened in 1985. If you recall, back in 1985 and 1986 and 1987 it was a fairly astute political thing for the Liberals to do, because during that period of time the provincial government did enjoy quite favourable press from the press gallery, and quite frankly they just bought them off.

Part of the way they bought them off was to hide what in fact they were paying out as compensation in order to buy off these members of the press gallery. But the people in the press gallery knew what in fact the Liberal government of the day was doing in buying them off. So many of the people who replaced the people who did get into the executive assistant levels of the then Liberal government were pining to go from that place above you, Madam Speaker, down underneath where all the executive assistants sat, because they were being paid quite handsomely.

The Liberals changed the rules so that the public didn't have access to what public servants were being paid. As a result, not only were the Liberal hacks of the day being protected but so was everybody else being protected in terms of the public service as to what they were being paid.

Our position, as I said before, reverts back to where we were prior to 1985. We believe that everybody over a certain level in the public service, not only for the provincial public service but for each municipality and each school board and each agency, their salaries should be revealed to the public as well. I don't understand why the taxpayer shouldn't know that.

It's unfortunate that this has to be redone, that we have to go back. This is only the first step, by Mr Stockwell, the member for Etobicoke West, and that is to take the very, very high levels of compensation given to the executive people who are involved in government and reveal their salaries.

That's the thrust of this bill. It's a matter, I guess, of accountability. It's a matter of freedom of information, allowing the public taxpayers to know in fact what they're paying the high-ranked civil servants of our province.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Thank you to the member for Carleton for speaking on behalf of Mr Stockwell. Now each party will have 15 minutes in rotation to debate.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex South): On a point of order, Madam Speaker: I'm relatively new in the Legislature, but it seems to me that I was told or I learned somewhere that it was the government's responsibility to maintain a quorum.

The Acting Speaker: You're asking for a quorum?

Mr Crozier: I would have thought that they would want to do that this morning with this very important business before the House.

The Acting Speaker: Would the clerk determine if a quorum is present, please.

Senior Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals (Mr Alex McFedries): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Senior Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Journals: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Now we may proceed with the debate. I will recognize the member for Essex South—Kent.

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): One more time: Chatham-Kent.

The Acting Speaker: Chatham-Kent. Please proceed.

Mr Hope: There we go. I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate this morning and to comment on the bill as brought forward by Mr Stockwell, the member for Etobicoke West, who is not here. It's unfortunate that situations did prevail, but I will make my comments. I was looking for the theatrics in the 10 minutes that the member for Etobicoke West would have presented to us this morning to liven up our morning, but unfortunately he didn't present us with that graceful gift that he has of theatrics.

Before I begin, I must reiterate right at the beginning of this that I will be voting in favour of this bill, but I do have some major concerns with it.

First of all, as I read the lengthy bill that is presented before us, which is one page, it says, "This act applies despite the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act." I ask myself, where does this stop? Does it go on unendingly, without even taking in individuals' freedom of information that they are allowed to reveal and the privacy that is beholden upon people?

We're talking about paycheques of people who collect salaries paid by tax dollars. What if in the information the member opposite who has presented this bill finds out that in the top five is not what he's looking for? Does he come back, introduce another bill and say, "No, no, exactly what I want is the top 10 instead of the top five"? Maybe he discovered that a couple of the salaries that he was looking for are missing. So what does he do? He might step back in the House and introduce another bill, which says, "I need the top 20," until he finds what he's searching for.

It raises a number of concerns to me and it frustrates me that I don't know where the member opposite is coming from. Let's say the information he's looking for in the top five is not there. Does he then step back into this House and repeatedly introduce bills until he finds what he's looking for in the salaries of individuals, maybe names of individuals he's looking for?

I'd just ask the member, and unfortunately I can't, what is his purpose behind this bill. Is the purpose to reveal the salaries that are paid to public servants by the general public, the taxpayers of this province, or is it specifically to deal with only five top people? Is he specifically looking for a name of an individual or the salary range that might be there? I have to ask that serious question, and hopefully the member for Carleton might have the answers for me for the member for Etobicoke West. But I think that's very important.

I did have the opportunity to participate in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Statute Law Amendment Act, which was debated during the winter sessions. One of the concerns that I would like to see is, why aren't the agencies, the municipal governments, all people, covered by this piece of legislation?

If we're talking about revealing what the actual people who are paid by tax dollars collect, then let's put it all on the table to make sure that everybody has the right to know about salaries that are being paid. That is very important if we're to talk about the need of people to understand what salary ranges are.

As I looked at the bill, I guess I was hoping to hear that in the 10-minute presentation the member for Etobicoke West would have made, which makes it very difficult for us to understand where he's coming from with it. I understand where the member for Carleton is coming from. Yes, he was on the committee. Yes, he presented his feelings as an individual, a member of the Conservative government, of what he would like to see, why it was removed in the past during the Liberals. Why did the Liberals change it and cover that up? I'm not saying there was any wrongdoing; I'm saying they had legitimate reasons for why they felt that salaries should not be revealed.

But it would sure be nice for me, as a new member in this Legislature, to understand that, because I myself look at this bill and it says, "the five highest." What if it's the highest 10 the member wants? What if it's the highest 20 the member wants, until he finds exactly what information he's looking for so he can carry on with his theatrics in this House and present some corruption case that is there?

But I also ask maybe what—

Interjection.

Mr Hope: No, I ain't going to ask that one.

Mr Bob Huget (Sarnia): Let me. I'll ask it.

Mr Hope: You'll ask it? Okay. I really would like to know—in principle, I understand what he's trying to do: revealing to the public. I say it has to be broader information dealing with agencies that have been established by the governments. A lot of the general public don't know of the salaries that are being paid; municipal governments—what exactly their salaries are being paid. People know what our salaries are in this Legislature and I believe the general public, the taxpayers, ought to know what all salaries are.

I think in coming with a piece of legislation that only deals with specific five—I wonder, where does it stop? Does it keep being reintroduced, like 10, 20, 30? What's the end result? "This act applies despite the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act," which raises a number of serious concerns around how much actual information is there.

I know other members in here wish to comment. I do wish to say to the member for Carleton, I hope you have all the theatrics the member for Etobicoke West has so you can explain exactly what he's trying to get at with this bill.

Mr Bernard Grandmaître (Ottawa East): I just want to take the next two or three minutes to respond to not only the member for Chatham-Kent but especially my colleague from Carleton. I find it very—not distressing, because this is, after all, Thursday morning; we'll all be going home this afternoon. But having to listen to the member for Carleton talking about the Liberal Party buying off people—imagine.

Interjection: I cannot believe he said that.

Mr Grandmaître: Yes. I can't believe this. After all, they had the best teachers in the world, especially Bill Davis. Bill Davis invented buying off people in this province. Just to keep your mouth shut, Bill Davis would create a commission and pay you fabulous dollars, but keep your mouth shut. That was the motto of Bill Davis. Today, this member has the gall to stand in his place and to preach to this House how good the Conservatives were and how bad the Liberals were. I find this incredible. Saying that the Liberals invented buying off people—it's a good thing I had a good breakfast because, I'm telling you, my stomach is weak right now; very, very weak.

I will be supporting this, because it's a friend of mine; it comes from Mr Stockwell. That's the only reason I'll be supporting this bill and not because of the comments of my colleague from Carleton.

In response to my colleague from Chatham-Kent, at the municipal level, I would like to tell you that all executive members of the municipalities are hired by bylaw and the salary or salaries are mentioned. So at least at the municipal level, where I have more experience than at the provincial level, we're much more open.

But again, I want to remind you that when the Conservatives, or a Conservative, tells us all about buying off people, I can't argue. They have the mould; they invented the mould and they will continue to do it. I just want to remind you, don't be fooled by what the member for Carleton told you.

Mr Allan K. McLean (Simcoe East): I welcome this opportunity to stand in support of my colleague the member for Etobicoke West—his Bill 114. The bill is to provide disclosure on compensation for the public sector. If this bill passes, it would provide for the disclosure of information relating to the compensation received by the most highly paid officials in government. In the ministries, it would also include the directors and officials in crown corporations and members of the ministers' staff.

I congratulate the member for Etobicoke West for bringing this important matter to our attention because my constituents in Simcoe East tell me they believe many highly paid officials in government jobs are ripping off the system when they themselves are trying to survive on a smaller paycheque and on fixed incomes. I want to make it clear that I have dealt with many highly paid officials in government ministries, directors of and officials in crown corporation, and members of ministry staff who work very hard. They put in long hours, and I believe they are worth every cent they're paid. But I also know there is always a small group of people who take advantage of the abuse in government that they work for because they believe they're working behind closed doors of a large bureaucracy where no one will take the time to actually find out what they are accomplishing.

Ontario taxpayers deserve and are demanding government officials who are effective and accountable to disclose. Taxpayers understand better than most the need for government to provide services in an efficient, responsible and financially sound fashion.

Another area of concern of my constituents, and a costly concern at that, is that this government has awarded a host of party-affiliated people with high-paying jobs in numerous offices of the government. So I'd like to take you back to the first throne speech of November 20, 1990. Bob Rae, who campaigned on promises of openness and accountability, said the following:

"My government's first challenge is to earn the trust and respect of the people. My government's integrity will be measured by the way this government is run....Our task is to guard against institutional arrogance and the abuse of power..."

I would suggest that Bob Rae got it wrong. His first challenge, his constant challenge, has been to make excuses for the institutionalized bungling of his government and to rationalize why abuse of trust and waste of taxpayers' money has become the dominant characteristic of his administration.

I believe we can take a step in the right direction by restoring faith in the public and government by supporting this legislation and providing for disclosure of information relating to the compensation received by the most highly paid officials in government. We in this Legislature are obligated under law to disclose our financial affairs. As far as I'm concerned, that's the way it should be. But I also believe this policy should be extended to non-elected officials who are appointed to highly paid government jobs with little or no say on the part of the people of Ontario.

I also believe this legislation should be expanded to include public disclosure of all expenses of highly paid officials in government ministries, directors of and officials in crown corporations, and members of a minister's staff who are provided with credit cards for use while conducting government business. It is suspiciously like pulling teeth to get this credit card information. Whenever I put a question on the order paper, in fact, there have been times when I have never received this information under the former Liberal or the current NDP governments. What's the big secret? What are they hiding? Could it perhaps be that not all of the credit card billings are related to government business?

We at one time had total disclosure over all salaries of $30,000. Any employee of the government who made over $30,000 was in the book. We saw it in the public accounts book; we get that every year, and every employee's salary over $30,000 was disclosed in that book. It was the Liberals who did away with that.

I would urge the members to support this resolution from my colleague the member for Etobicoke West on this important issue, because I believe it will lead to making Ontario the province of opportunity again. Since 1985, Ontario has been living in a tax-and-spend nightmare designed by the NDP and implemented by the Liberals. Do you remember when that wedding was on, 1985 to 1987? David Peterson, Lyn McLeod and Bob Rae have worked together to make Ontario the most heavily taxed jurisdiction with the most highly paid government officials in North America.

Yes, I remember. I remember in 1985 when I looked at the members of that press gallery and when I looked at the increase in parliamentary assistants' wages. At that time the top parliamentary assistant wage was $42,000. The new Liberal-NDP administration increased that to $62,000 so they could hire half that press gallery, and that's exactly what they did.

1030

In 1990, since the NDP has come to power—

Laughter.

Mr McLean: Well, you can laugh about it all you like, but I'll tell you, the people out there who are paying the taxes are not finding this very funny.

You have now increased that $62,000 to $84,000. I understand the new House leader hired a new staff at over $70,000 with no experience at all. Is that the way you waste taxpayers' money?

Why are we not disclosing what these people are making? I say today, the way salaries have changed, perhaps anybody over $50,000 should be disclosed so they would know what they're getting.

This resolution that's before us today, Bill 114, is only a start. He wants the salaries of the five highest-paid officials in each government ministry and their names; the salaries of the five highest-paid directors of each corporation and their names; the salaries of the five highest-paid officials in each crown corporation and their names; and the salaries of the five highest-paid members of political staff in each ministry, including the Office of the Premier, and their names.

This bill does not go far enough. I think for anybody who is receiving salary from the taxpayers of this province, there's nothing wrong with having their salary disclosed. We don't mind having our salary and our expenses disclosed. So why is it wrong for the civil service to have their salaries disclosed?

I remember $30,000 used to be the cutoff salary. Anybody over $30,000 was disclosed. Today that should be $50,000. Anybody over $50,000, their salary should be disclosed.

Then we go on and we look in the public accounts book and it gives us these travelling expenses. That's in the book for different ministries. They have their yearly travel expenses; their names are here. So there we are, and we have other payments, for materials and supplies in each ministry. That's all printed in the book. What's wrong with having the salaries of the senior civil servants printed in the book? I see nothing wrong with that.

I remember when top salary for a deputy minister was $85,000.

Mr Hope: What year was that?

Mr McLean: That was 1985. Today we have a salary for a deputy minister from $103,000 to $150,000. There's almost $50,000 in there that—I presume most of them are at $150,000. I think Robin Sears is about $145,000. I don't know where he is, whether he's a deputy minister now or not. I think he's maybe in Tokyo.

We owe it to the taxpayers to come clean. What's the matter with telling them what's really happening in government? What's the matter with the civil servants telling the people, when they're driving a government car, what the cost of that is? Do we know? We don't know. But the people are asking that question, and I'll tell you, the people have a right to know.

Since this government came to power, as I said before, we have been the most heavily taxed jurisdiction with the most highly paid government officials in North America. Do you believe that those salaries should be disclosed? I do, and the people in my riding do, and I don't know of anybody who doesn't.

We owe it to Ontario's taxpayers to support this private member's bill. I think it's a step in the right direction, because it does bring accountability. That's what we want to see, but obviously the other two parties don't.

Mr Pat Hayes (Essex-Kent): When you look at this private bill and you listen to the speakers from the opposite side of the floor here, you would think the people who have worked for them over the years were all volunteers.

The thing is, paragraph 1(1)4 in this bill: "The salaries of the five highest paid members of political staff in each ministry, including the Office of the Premier, and their names."

I find that rather interesting when they want to just have this bill deal with the ministries, deal with government employees. I think the members, if they're so concerned, should be disclosing the salaries of all their political staff that they have, and even some of the ones we don't really know about. I think that should be brought forward.

The two opposition parties: When you sit in here from day to day, they remind me of the little kid who makes a mess and then comes to mommy and says, "Will you clean that up for me?" We're having a hard time cleaning up the messes they have created over the years, but we will continue to do so. This government has been more open and up front in disclosing people's salaries, and we've had more public meetings and brought more things out in public than any previous government has ever done in this province.

We support the bill from the member for Etobicoke West in principle, and of course I'll be voting for it.

I have some familiarity with this issue, having had the pleasure of sitting on the Legislative Assembly committee this last intersession and looking at the municipal freedom and protection of privacy act. But after looking at the act, I wonder why the member hasn't broadened the scope of his bill. Why aren't you looking at the public broader sector as well?

Bill 114 covers ministries, crown corporations and ministers' offices. It doesn't cover any government agencies, colleges, universities or transfer partners. I think if we are looking at the question of executive compensation, we have to look at the subject as it applies right across the government. When I speak about right across the government, I'm also including the opposition.

Ten years ago everyone who earned more than $40,000 had their salaries published in the annual report of the public accounts committee. Of course the Liberals changed that. For what reason, I don't know. Some people might call it a coverup, I don't know. Some people might've said, "We don't want to make the Tories look too bad on some of their golden handshakes that they've had over the years."

Interjections.

Mr Hayes: They've come through with the range, and this is what I'm saying. There was a system in place, and yet the Liberals come back and say, "Well, we got to take that out and we got to make a range because we don't want anybody to have that information," but it's interesting they come here today and they want all that disclosure.

But if you worked in the public service 30 years ago, your salary was on the public record. With the size of the public service growing, it was becoming quite cumbersome to publish everyone's salary.

Of course when we talk about the privacy of the 100,000 government employees, and on top of that the 900,000 broader public sector workers, these things all have to be taken into consideration.

When you look at the question around publication of salary figures, do we want the top five published? Do we want the salaries of everyone over a certain benchmark published? Do we want them available but not necessarily published? These are just some of the questions.

The issue of compensation disclosure was discussed at length in the committee. I can remember my friend from Bruce talking about problems with people getting salary figures from employees in the municipal sector, and I know my friend from Dufferin-Peel was talking about setting a cutoff below which salaries would not be published. So they're talking a little different tune here today.

I also know that the member from Dufferin-Peel, for example, isn't here today, but he would probably point out that his private member's bill demands that the top five salaries paid to executives of unions should be made public.

I'd like to kind of clear that up, which I did in the committee or I attempted to. Those salaries for top union executives are public. They are set by the union membership at a convention, and they are spelled out in the union's constitution. Those numbers are readily available to the members of the union who elect those executives.

The biggest problem I have with this bill is the fact that again the members opposite are offering a piecemeal solution to a larger problem. This is one of the things that this government has faced. We said, "Let's get rid of all these ad hoc programs from previous governments and piecemeal solutions and throwing dollars at things." That's why this government is in the process of doing long-term planning, long-term programs, for the benefit of the people of this province.

If we pass this one as it stands, can we expect another bill dealing with school boards, another bill dealing with universities and colleges and another bill on municipalities? These members just want to keep coming back with their little piecemeal legislation.

This bill does need amending. I will support it because I agree with the notion of executive compensation disclosure, but I feel this issue would be better served as part of the review of the provincial Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Municipal Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and I'm glad to see the members on the other side finally flipping in the right direction for a change.

Mr Crozier: I am always surprised each day I come into the Legislature. We're talking about compensation today, and you know what they always tell you: Advice is worth what you pay for it. The member for Downsview, when I took what I thought was my right in the Legislature, came over and had the gall to chastise me for what I did, when I called the point of order. Fortunately, as I said, I didn't pay him anything for the advice, and it's just exactly what the advice was worth.

I'm also surprised that the members for Carleton and Simcoe East would talk about the Liberals and the NDP and their taxing policies. If my history is correct, Mike Harris, the tax fighter, and some of his cohorts, voted for the second-highest tax grab in provincial history, $1.8 billion. So I am surprised that they would criticize anybody else and that they would even consider criticizing the press as being able to be bought off. I believe in the freedom of the press and I don't think that would ever happen in a lifetime.

Notwithstanding all of that, I am also in support of this bill. I only wish Mr Stockwell were here this morning to hear me say it, because there isn't very much I agree with him on.

When I was elected, I expressed to my constituents that it was my intention, for one thing, to go to Queen's Park and monitor all areas of public spending. I went to the people in Leamington and Kingsville and Essex and Harrow and Amherstburg and over on Pelee Island. They're all concerned about government spending. I was very pleased when my leader, Lyn McLeod, appointed me as the associate Finance critic and also appointed me as a member of the standing committee on public accounts.

Mr Bill Murdoch (Grey-Owen Sound): Who was that leader again? What was her name?

Mr Crozier: That was Lyn McLeod, my leader, Lyn McLeod.

I support any initiative for disclosures on public spending. I frankly can't imagine any party or any government that wouldn't want to be forthright and honest and disclose all manner of public spending. I agree with my friend, the honourable member Mr Hayes, that perhaps this bill should even go further than it does. I'm sure Mr Stockwell would welcome any initiative on the government's part to expand the bill. I'm sure we would all appreciate that. It goes to the heart of the public's right to know. The public has a right to know how their hard-earned tax dollars are spent.

Some of the members of the Conservative caucus, the one from Simcoe East, would probably have us go back. They want to go back. I don't want to go back to the day I made $160 a month. I don't want to go back to those days.

Mr Murdoch: You were overpaid.

Mr Crozier: I know I was overpaid. I've always said that if I were paid what I thought I was worth, they couldn't afford me, and if they paid me what I was really worth, I couldn't live on it. So there's nothing wrong with a range that's in between.

I'm most interested in subsection 1(1), paragraph 5:

"Details of the benefits received by the persons referred to in paragraphs 1 to 4, including special purpose loans, loan guarantees, an arrangement for the payment of $100,000 or more on dismissal or retirement and generally any arrangement that adds substantially to compensation."

That is where the real meat of this is, because that's where the deals were made. Back in the Conservative days, they might not have paid them much up front, but the deals are where you make the money. I want those disclosed as well. It's the taxpayers' right to know what everyone makes in public service and I have no objection to it.

I hope this bill, when it passes—and I'm being optimistic that it will pass and there's no doubt in my mind that it should—will bring under scrutiny particularly these special arrangements that too often have been made in the past and may have cost the government hundreds of thousands of dollars. I feel the spirit of this bill is one that will be informative and will result in a more accountable government.

Mr Murdoch: Certainly I am pleased to be able to be here today and speak on this bill. It is unfortunate that Chris isn't here, but I know he would have liked to be here.

It's amazing what we hear from the Liberals. That was quite a speech about not knowing different things, and that the payment up front is more important sometimes than what they pay the people. I guess we could talk about Ellis-Don and Patti Starr and people like that. The Liberals have a lot to come good for, but we certainly do appreciate their support on this bill.

Mr Crozier: I may change my mind. Be careful what you say.

Mr Murdoch: He mentions that he may change his mind, so I won't go on any further. I'd hate to see you do that.

I also don't think Chris's bill goes far enough. I could agree with Mr Hayes across the floor.

Mr Grandmaitre: Bring in amendments.

Mr Murdoch: As my good friend from Ottawa says, we may have to bring in an amendment. Maybe when I talk to Chris, we will do that.

He's talking about the five highest-paid. I think everyone's salary should be known. Our salaries are known. They seem to take great delight, when our expenses come out—the media like to get into that and talk about all that. They love to pick on us as politicians. I don't see why the salaries of everyone who works for the province and everyone who works for the government shouldn't be exposed to the public, because they are public servants and they should be. I would have no problem in going further with this.

Mr Hayes: What do you pay your staff?

Mr Murdoch: The member over there asks me what I pay my staff. If you want to know, you're certainly welcome to come down to my office any day and we'll discuss that. We hear from our good friends across the floor. The union runs all their staff anyway and they pretty well have to pay them certain amounts; they don't have any choice. It's unfortunate.

Mr McLean: They're at the top of the scale too.

Mr Murdoch: As the member for Simcoe East says, they're at the top of the scale too. We know you're keeping your staff very happy because of the union. If it wasn't for the union in there, you guys would be out of luck, wouldn't you? You wouldn't know what to do then. Fortunately for you people, the union does look after you.

Mr George Mammoliti (Yorkview): Is that Mulroney on your tie?

Mr Murdoch: What was that, the member for Yorkview?

The Acting Speaker: Order. Would the member address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr Mammoliti: Is that Mulroney on your tie?

The Acting Speaker: Interjections are out of order.

Mr Murdoch: I think the member likes my tie. Unfortunately, he should be discussing this issue and not worrying about my tie. Sometimes they do have problems staying with the course of action. We'll just ignore that.
1050

I wanted to explain that no one party has any title to this bill. We've all had our problems. It was mentioned by the Liberals that the Conservatives voted for a $1.8-billion raise of some sort, but that was over a decade ago. We've changed; there's no doubt. We have a lot of new members.

Mr Hope: That was then; this is now.

Interjections.

Mr Murdoch: I'm glad to see you caught on. Sometimes you wonder whether they're listening to us, and you have to bring things up to get their attention. I'm glad to see that my friends the Liberals are also awakening to the new dawn, the new era. Under my leader, Mike Harris, they will see a lot of new changes to tax laws and things like that. There will be fewer taxes in this country when Mike Harris takes over, there's no doubt about that.

I just want to bring my support to this bill and hope that the government side over there will also support us in this bill, and go on to the future and make sure that the salaries of the people who do work for the government are exposed.

Mr Jim Wiseman (Durham West): I'm pleased to respond to this. This side of the House has been open to reviewing what happens in terms of appointments. That's why we created the review process at the government agencies committee. The opposition parties, of course, have both dedicated themselves to saying that they will eliminate that, should they form the next government. In other words, they would put the appointments and the patronage processes behind closed doors so that the public cannot review them. We striven to open that process to the public.

I will support this bill, because it's been very clear that we support the openness of government. In fact, the Minister of Finance, when he made his comments about the disclosure of executive salaries, made it very clear that we have to find a mechanism to do that with the public service. That was reiterated when the Chair of Management Board came before the committee on the freedom of information act and said he would be happy to hear the committee's comments with respect to pursuing this opening up of the salary information, and went on to say that the proper forum for discussing that issue was in the committee where the Municipal Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act was being reviewed.

I had the privilege of sitting in on that committee while they were reviewing, and I have to say that it is a very complex issue. We heard from people from all over Ontario who brought forward literally hundreds of recommendations. Some wanted to tighten the system up so that information could not be acquired by the public—I don't support that—and some wanted to open it up to such an extent that personal privilege and personal privacy could be invaded. Of course, we have to find the balance between personal privacy and the right to know and at what point that would do harm.

In closing, we need to take a look at—and I've mentioned this before in a similar debate—the fact that there are broader public service agencies that need to be included, such as school boards, hospitals and all the agencies that are attached to the government or receive public funding.

Mrs Elinor Caplan (Oriole): I'm pleased to participate in today's debate, because I think it is really about the public confidence about those who serve the public in all walks of public life, whether they are elected, whether they are civil servants, whether they are bureaucrats, public employees. Actually, anyone who is receiving payment from the government has a responsibility to the taxpayers, whose dollars pay them, to be as accountable as they can be for the dollars they receive from the public.

Today we're dealing with a proposal on the disclosure of executive compensation in the public sector. This has been something I've been very vocal about and in fact have been a participant in, ensuring that there was openness and transparency. This dates back to my days when I was Chairman of Management Board in 1985 in the government, when we brought in the new rules which opened for the very first time the amounts on salary ranges and so forth so that the public could scrutinize and see clearly how much civil servants were being paid.

It seems to me that from time to time it is good to review that and to see whether there is more that can be done. With the advent of the freedom of information and protection of personal privacy legislation, we have, with the experience of that legislation, seen a number of test cases which have given us pause to reconsider so that we can ensure that our dedication to openness and accountability and transparency is there and is there all the time.

It's my view that since this kind of debate is always about the balance between the right of the public to know and the right of the individual to personal privacy, we have to, on the basis of our principles, make those decisions. I'd like to state clearly in the House that my views and my principles are that the tilt should always be to the right of the public to know.

Having said that, I do believe it is possible in the framing of legislation to make sure we are protective of individual privacy. I think that is possible in the way we can have disclosure of compensation and benefits, and I don't think the two are at all incompatible.

The legislation that is before us today is supportable in principle, although I would like to express some concern about some of the individual provisions, because there is a cynicism and a suggestion that perhaps what is occurring is inappropriate. I want to state very clearly that from my experience in government, we frequently had difficulty in attracting people from the private sector to come and work in government simply because we could not compensate them in the same way as they had been compensated in the private sector.

I don't for a minute want this debate to get into: Do we pay our senior civil servants too much? Are there too many perks and privileges? That's not what this debate should be about; this debate should be about the public's right to know. As we have seen moves for greater openness and transparency in the private sector, certainly we have to make sure that the rules for the private sector are no more onerous than the rules for the public sector. In fact, my view is always that the responsibility of the public sector is even greater.

The rules for the private sector have been to protect and ensure openness and transparency for shareholders and corporations. In the United States, for example, our neighbour to the south and our most significant trading partner, the rules for disclosure of income, salary, perks, stock options and that sort of thing for leaders of public sector corporations probably are far ahead of anything we see here in Ontario. It's one of the reasons I was very supportive of the move to protect shareholders by giving them that kind of information as well.

In that same vein, it seems to me that the taxpayers, who are the shareholders of the corporation of the province of Ontario, if you want to use the corporate analogy, have a right to know and a right to have confidence that public servants, whether they are, as I say, elected or appointed or in the employ of any of the public sector and broader public sector agencies, are being properly and appropriately and reasonably compensated and treated.

I believe that, in the name of accountability and openness, we have to be on our toes all the time. One of the reasons we have to be on our toes and be prepared to review what is existing today is because public cynicism unfortunately is at an all-time high, frankly with a lot of justification. I'm distressed and concerned. I know people don't like anyone in public life; they particularly don't like politicians. That does pain me, because as we want to encourage good people, ordinary people in the province, to run for public office and stand in public life, we have to do everything we can to see that this is a profession which requires and deserves the respect of the public.

This debate is important, and I'm pleased to have been able to participate.

The Acting Speaker: The time for debate on this bill has expired. A vote will take place at noon. Sorry. Two minutes to the member for Carleton to respond.

Mr Sterling: The member for Oriole, in winding up her speech, talked about public cynicism. I have to ask members of the Legislature, members of the public—this member, when Chairman of Management Board, actually reversed a former regulation which required all salaries over $30,000 or $40,000, I'm not sure which, to be divulged.

Now she speaks in the Legislature in favour of undoing exactly what she did when she had the power in the cabinet of Ontario. Then she asks why people are cynical about politicians. I think she's made a tremendous exhibition of why people are in fact cynical about politicians: "When we were in power, we took away your right to know, and now, when we're in opposition, we want to give you the right to know."

They took it away. The Liberals took it away. That's a matter of fact.

Mrs Caplan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: That is not true. That is a misrepresentation of the facts, and I would ask the member to withdraw.

The Acting Speaker: That is not a point of order. The member may continue.

Mrs Caplan: That is not true, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Carleton.

Mr Sterling: I stand by my remarks. If any one of you wants to read the history on freedom of information and privacy, if anybody wants to talk about the disclosure of public servants' salaries, that is the history, that is the fact. The Liberals took away the right of the public to know what public servants in this province are making, the exact amount; they took it away. That is the fact, that is the matter.

Now they're playing in opposition the other side of—

Mrs Caplan: I'm not going to sit here and let him say things that are absolutely not true.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Carleton has the floor. Please continue.

Mr Sterling: You know, the truth hurts and I'm glad members of this Legislature are now wanting to revert to a policy which the former Progressive Conservative Party had back in 1984.

Many members have said this bill is too narrow, and I wanted to say on behalf of Mr Stockwell, I'm certain that he would be quite willing to look at amendments which would widen the scope of this bill.

We have had some speakers say this is a proper matter for freedom of information and privacy reviews, but the member must admit that we had a review of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act at the provincial level some two or three years ago and there hasn't been any legislation brought forward.

I don't think a private member can be chastised for bringing forward this matter on the public agenda. It's important and I thank all members for their support. We look forward to this bill being called for third reading.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you to the member for Carleton. The time for ballot item number 51 has expired and a vote will take place at noon.

TOBACCO PRODUCTS

Mr O'Connor moved private member's notice of motion number 40:

That, in the opinion of this House, since more than 4,000 chemicals have been identified in tobacco smoke such as nicotine, carbon monoxide, arsenic, benzene, hydrogen cyanide and formaldehyde, and many of these 4,000 chemicals are known to cause cancer and other diseases when they enter the body by way of smoking and inhaling environmental tobacco smoke, the assembly calls upon the Liberal government of Canada to enact measures requiring tobacco companies and cigarette manufacturers to make available to the public a list of the gaseous or particle byproducts released by tobacco when lit or smoked, and that the federal government should require that the chemicals in cigarette smoke most harmful to health be listed on tobacco product packaging, and that similarly the chemicals released in smokeless tobacco and absorbed by the body are identified on packaging of chewing tobacco and moist snuff.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Mr O'Connor now has 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): As all members know, the province has been moving forward on smoking as a very serious issue. In fact, a discussion paper on the tobacco control act was released in January 1993. As that progressed, we heard from over 240 people by way of written presentations, and 34 oral presentations were made to a committee made up of staff from the Ministry of Health as we went through that process.

Over the past few years there has been a lot of action taken on this issue. The chief medical officer of health for the province declared in 1991 in his annual report that tobacco was public enemy number one, and there has been a lot going on. There have been the public ad campaigns that we've all seen, and we all applaud that the ministry has been doing quite well. The annual report by the chief medical officer of health for the province of Ontario, Opportunities for Health, again pointed out tobacco use and the problems related to it.

Through the strategy that is unfolding around tobacco products, we've seen, for example, certain areas that have been targeted through legislation, and, as members of the Legislature, we have been able to deal with that. The Ministry of Health has continued on a strategy for cancer. It's done that with Life to Gain, a document that talks about the cancer strategy for the province of Ontario.

There's a public awareness campaign that's out there. I think in every member's riding back home they've been approached by people in their community who want to talk about the issues and want to talk about it. There's a booklet put out by the Ministry of Health that helps parents talk to their children who are addicted to tobacco.

Yet I think, when I started looking at this issue and anticipating the fast passage through this House—it seems to be delayed at this point, which is very frustrating for me—there is still a problem. When I look at the Globe and Mail, they put a headline on it that I think was really quite useful. On April 14 this year, in one of their articles, it says, "Haze Still Hangs Over Cigarette Contents," and that's what I think was missing.

We all know—we were told as we went through the committee hearing process—that the list of tobacco product ingredients is tremendously long. What was presented to the committee was a list that was obtained from Health and Welfare Canada that was from the US, but it's not a complete list and it doesn't really identify it very well. What I think is missing is the fact that as we go out there in the province and as legislators want to deal with this very serious issues, the ingredient list that we need to know about isn't there. It's just not talked about.

If we take a look, for example, in the Globe, as they've tried to follow up with this, the tobacco industry divulges the list: 13 substances. Well, it's not 13 substances; we know it's more than 13 substances. That's the Canadian list, and the US list is 599. There are so many different things that are put into it, things that are put into the tobacco product to keep it moist so that it'll keep its freshness.

Some of those substances are cancer-causing, and as public health units deal with this—this morning I spoke to the managers of the public health units. They're celebrating their 25th anniversary. They gave me this lovely little mug here. Actually, last year was their 25th anniversary. So here they are, they're going into 26 years.

I talked a little bit about this resolution, and there's a tremendous amount of support for it, because as they go out in the community and support us as members in talking about this, they can't see why the industry won't come clean, why it won't supply a list of all the ingredients.

You know, it's very disturbing, and I'm sure that my colleagues are going to share some of their thoughts around this. I'm sure that as they take a look at this serious issue—you know, 13,000 Ontarians die every year in the province of Ontario from tobacco-related illnesses. That's a heck of a lot. That works out to about 100, Mr Speaker, in your riding, 100 in any member of the Legislature's riding, 100 in my riding.

I was on one of the local cable shows that we all do from time to time and I had a call from a good doctor. The good doctor said, "Larry, you know, that tobacco legislation is terrific. That's really good stuff. In fact, I would have liked to come down and made a presentation at committee." I explained to him, "We had four weeks of public hearings, we went around the province with it, we know there's a lot of support for it, and I appreciate that support that you're giving me."

He said, "You know, Larry, what I'd like to talk about is the real human issues: cancer, the cancer that affects people's lives." It might be a father who's struck with cancer and you've got someone like—my son is seven years old—a parent trying to explain to his child that he's dying of cancer, this awful disease; or somebody else who might be having to explain what the process is, what is going to happen as he goes through this very difficult suffering, through chemotherapy. It's something that's really awkward for people. I think that's where this good doctor wanted to explain this to the committee so that we could have a good round discussion about it and put a human face on it because that's what needs to take place.

I'm sure my colleagues are probably going to take a shot at some of the industry and maybe they deserve that. I think they do. The fact of the matter is, why don't they come up with the list? Why don't they come clean, explain exactly what are the products? "This is the process, this is what we use."

The industry in fact still hasn't even come to terms with the fact that smoking cigarettes can even cause cancer. I'm waiting for the day when I can go through—and

I've got a raft of clippings here, but I don't see a clipping in there that says, "The tobacco industry acknowledges that smoking tobacco products when used properly as directed will cause cancer." The fact of the matter is 80% of all lung cancer is the result of tobacco use. Why can't they come up with that product list? Why can't they just come forward and tell us exactly what's in it?

I know how terribly addicting it is. People say, "They wouldn't tamper with the nicotine levels, they wouldn't do that," yet that's the ingredient that addicts people, that's the ingredient that when our young people try it out for the first time is going to addict them. That's the element there. How many different chemicals are in there? How many different elements are in there? It's part of this problem.

That's why I think there's so much support for moving forward with this. We have to move forward with this. I look forward to the debate that's going to take place and I think we're going to see a terrific amount of support for it.

Let me tell you, when the federal government in Ottawa, the Liberal government, decided they were going to drop the sales taxes, it was like a knife that went through every committee member of social development that was dealing with the tobacco legislation. It was like a knife that cut right through us, the reason being that we heard from people how the prices have an effect. Here it was, the federal government was just helping out the Quebec party, and I felt that was just awful.

The fact of the matter is that a day later Mr Clinton and Mr Chr tien get on the phone to have a chat and they say: "We've got a serious problem here. We've got a problem over in Europe. Do you think we can agree to have some air strikes and deal with this problem?" I agree they've got to talk about that problem; it's something they have to do; it's something they've got to deal with. As international leaders, they have to talk about those things.

There are 40,000 Canadians who die every year, 400,000 Americans die every year from tobacco-related illnesses, yet the two leaders of the two countries can't get together and talk about it. I find it reprehensible that the two of them can't say, "Look, we've got a smuggling problem here, let's deal with that." But they didn't. I'm encouraged that maybe some day they're going to take a look at that and maybe they'll sit down and talk about tobacco as a problem, because I think it is a problem.

I want to support the federal government in their moves. In fact I'm on the list to go to Ottawa on May 10 to support them in their move towards plain packaging. We've got to talk about it, because we can affect people's lives. We can save some lives here.

Our legislation, Bill 119, is focused at young people. The part that was missing out of that, I think, was that list of all those harmful chemicals. We don't even know what they are. What I want to see happen here—I'd be delighted if I see unanimous support.

I hope that maybe I can get unanimous support so that when I go to Ottawa on May 10 I can take that with me: the ingredients that come out when people are smoking tobacco—we heard about ground glass being put in chewing tobacco—those types of ingredients, that glass. If that's the case, I want the industry to come clean and tell us really what's in those products.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Gilles E. Morin): Any further debate?

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): I'm pleased to rise and join in the debate on my colleague's motion that would in effect as a result ensure that chemicals released are going to be set out clearly on the packaging, and I think in terms of the principle of this resolution that we would be supportive of that.

In fact I think that the federal government, which is being asked to do this, has begun the process of determining what is the best way to ensure that the ingredients of cigarettes and the ingredients of the smoke, which as a non-scientist I have learned is really the critical thing—that in fact we know what is there.

I understand that, if the federal government proceeds with what is being discussed at this point in time, over the course of the next couple of years what is being set out in our colleague the member for Durham-York's motion would come about. He has made reference to the hearings that are going on. Those will undoubtedly conclude, and I fully expect to see action on the part of the federal government.

I think it's important to underline in this debate, as has been said, the weight of evidence that we heard in the standing committee on the whole question of smoking, and particularly the issue of the health hazards. One of the difficult things with the whole question of smoking has been that while we have a tremendous amount of information on the harmful effects of smoking in terms of heart disease and lung cancer of various kinds, it almost seems in a way that the more information that is out there, we keep running into more people who don't want to believe it, who will simply say: "Look, that's all just kind of propaganda. It's not real."

We see that, for example, in the discussion more recently around the advertising and why it didn't appear to be working with young people and what is the appropriate way to get some of these messages across to younger people. If there was one thing we learned very clearly from the hearings of the standing committee on social development it was that if a young person is not addicted to smoking by the time he or she is about 19 or 20, it is much less likely at that point that they will smoke on a regular basis. So the focus then was, how do we ensure that doesn't happen?

We also saw very clearly during those hearings that a great deal of the marketing of cigarettes was aimed precisely at the younger group, 12, 13, 14, 15 years of age. I think it was a real shock as a parent. Probably just through good luck my own kids had not been all that interested in smoking. I suspect that they had experimented, but it had never become a big thing with them. I wasn't as aware of the kind of marketing that was going on to get young women and young men to smoke.

As we wrestle with this and how we get this message through so it's not simply seen as something where those of us who are older are trying to tell those who are younger the things that they should and shouldn't do, I think one of the vehicles we have is making sure at least that people have information and that an intelligent, informed person will act on that information.

Clearly, one of those elements then is, "Well, what is on the package?" If you pick up a cereal box or a can of soup and you go to the contents, you get a pretty full listing of what's there. Often, I suppose, a lot of us don't necessarily know what some of the things mean that are there, but we can go and find out more directly, "Okay, what harm might come if I were to eat or ingest that particular product?"

Here what is being looked at and as I understand what has been proposed in the United States is that there they want to list all of the elements that are in the smoke; that it's that combination in particular, once the cigarette or the cigar is lit; that it is at that point that real harm can be caused, not just simply what constitutes the cigarette or the cigar itself. In order to do that, I think, then, we need the kind of thing that is being put forward in the resolution and it's the sort of thing that I believe the federal government in Ottawa is now looking at in very specific and real terms.

I recognize those who've been upset with the federal government for lowering the price. I think nobody from the health point of view—and it's been said many times that that is not helpful. There's no question that the lower the price, the more people will smoke. I do think, in terms of that specific issue, there were some particular problems around the smuggling and what was happening within the society that finally made the determination as to why the federal government did what it did.

That being done, I think, if anything, we have to redouble our efforts, both provincially and federally, around what we can do, what steps we can take to more greatly limit the use of tobacco products. One of those things is going to be through ensuring that we know precisely what is in the cigarette, what it is we're taking in. Then that can also be part of a broad range of educational programs that we can have, whether they are in schools or in terms of public advertising campaigns, again trying to break through that barrier where people simply refuse to look at facts.

I only wish that we could have had some of those people come and look at some of the slides and the material that we had around the diseased lung or heart or even, from the use of chewing tobacco, what that did to people's mouths. I think in some ways that's probably the most dramatic and effective way of showing what's wrong with smoking.

All that being said, we have a major problem. This is one step, I think, towards combating tobacco and smoking. I think over the course of the next two years both the federal and provincial governments will be able to act on this, and this will be of great assistance to us.

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): I am pleased to join for a few minutes in this debate concerning the resolution put forward by Mr O'Connor, the member for Durham-

York. I want to say at the outset that I certainly support the principle of this legislation.

As Health critic for the Ontario PC Party, I just want to say for the record that it is important that consumers, and particularly those who consume tobacco products, are aware of the wide range of chemicals that are contained in Canadian cigarettes. As the parliamentary assistant, Mr O'Connor, pointed out in his remarks, the United States has recently moved on a similar front. I think that consumers, regardless of product in our society, must be made aware and given the opportunity to know what they are consuming. So I certainly support this legislation in principle and note, as with all private members' resolutions and bills before this House, that it's a free vote within our caucus and, I believe, other caucuses.

I also want to just compliment Mr Charles Beer, the Liberal member for York-Mackenzie, who quite skilfully, I must say, steered the social development committee, as Chair of that committee, through the debate on Bill 119. I want to thank Charles on a personal note for his leadership there. He really is a very good Chairperson of a committee. We did have a number of conflicting and often controversial presentations before that committee dealing with Bill 119 and other pieces of legislation that have appeared before the social development committee, and Mr Beer does a very skilful job as Chair.

I do find this resolution put forward by the parliamentary assistant for the NDP somewhat ironic, though, because it was certainly the NDP government here in Ontario and the federal Liberal government that, I think, did more to encourage cigarette smoking in this country and in this province than any other governments in history, and that was by their actions in concert to lower the taxes on cigarettes and tobacco products. Yes, there was a smuggling problem, but I would have thought that the NDP, because it spent a couple of weeks holding out on this issue, would have continued to hold out on the issue and not lower taxes, given that it has Bill 119 going through the House. Bill 119 is their Tobacco Control Act.

I want to set the record straight, with respect to my party, on Bill 119. The parliamentary assistant, Mr O'Connor, has accused us publicly of holding up this bill. I want to remind the people of Ontario that that's just bunk, that the government controls the agenda of this place, that the government has a majority on all standing committees and all committees of this Legislature and certainly has such a commanding majority that neither the PCs by themselves nor the Liberals by themselves nor the Liberals and PCs together can do anything about the agenda in this House, given that the government controls it with its majority. Therefore, if they want 119 to go through, they should bring it back for further debate in this House so that it can proceed to a final vote.

When it did appear in the House a couple of weeks ago, two of my colleagues, Mr Runciman, the member for Leeds-Grenville, and Mr Jordan, the member for Lanark-Renfrew, quite correctly, I think, brought forward some concerns that we had not heard during the hearings at the social development committee. Those were concerns regarding job losses. Since that time, more people have come forward expressing to my party the job losses that may be incurred as a result of the passage of Bill 119, and particularly the regulatory authority contained in that bill regarding plain packaging. That's what the issue of jobs has centred around, the issue of plain packaging and the printing industry.

I want to read a letter that was sent to me, dated April 18, from David R. Esch. He's president of Rototone. He says: "I'm writing to inform you of the impact of the proposed legislation on plain packaging on my company, and to seek your support in defeating this legislation. I'm the president of Rototone Gravure in Mississauga. We employ 45 people and we estimate that about 50% of our work is for the cigarette industry.

"If this legislation is passed, most if not all of these people will lose their jobs. The 10 people employed by F.J. Murray, our machine shop, will also be unemployed and of course all of our suppliers will be affected."

That letter is the most recent one, and Rototone is located in Mississauga, Ontario, but during the debate in this House on Bill 119, as I said, my colleagues brought forward similar concerns from print shops in eastern Ontario that expressed that hundreds of jobs will be lost. What we've called for is a couple of things.

First is the concerns that were expressed by Mr Runciman and Mr Jordan with respect to their constituents and the job losses that are pending, if this particular section of Bill 119 goes through, that the government respond to their concerns in writing. I've expressed that personally to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Health. The Minister of Health herself, Ruth Grier, has asked me what their concerns are and I've expressed those to her and asked her to put the government's response in writing, because I think it's only fair that Mr Runciman and Mr Jordan be able to take back to their constituents in writing exactly what the government's position is with respect to plain packaging.

Secondly, I think the jobs are a very important issue. I want to just quote from the Minister of Health's statement to this House last week, dated April 21, when she was announcing a new economic development study that had been conducted in the health care field. On page 3 of her announcement in this House she says: "A recent study found that physical and psychological stress associated with unemployment costs Canada $1 billion a year in extra health care costs. It's clear that our physical wellbeing depends on our economic and social wellbeing, and that's why job creation is a health issue as well as an economic development issue."

We've been a long time stressing to this government that health care must become one of the engines that drives the economic recovery, and rather than the punitive measures we've seen this government bring forward on the heads of health care professionals and hospitals and health institutions in this province, we would like to see the government change gears and look at health care as an economic development opportunity and an export opportunity and we'll continue our push in that regard.

But we finally did have the minister last week coming to the realization that health care is an important part of our economy. We'll have to see what the government does to live up to that quote I just read from the minister, but also we finally have a recognition of the importance of jobs. People like Fraser Mustard and other economists and scholars throughout North America and the world have consistently told legislators that jobs are a very important part of the health and wellbeing of any economy and its people.

In fact, the best thing that can be done right now in Ontario, in my opinion, as Health critic for my party, is that we put people back to work; that we allow businesses, in particular, to put people back to work. That's the best thing that the parliamentary assistant for Health can do, that's the best thing this government can do, for the health and wellbeing of the people of this province. There is lots of literature to support that this is the direction that health care must go in this province, and there has to be a better relationship between the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade and the Ministry of Health.

The other thing that was called for by my colleagues from eastern Ontario, during the debate on Bill 119, is a full public hearing in consultation with the federal government so that it not only includes the people of Ontario but the people of Canada with respect to the issue of plain packaging. Unfortunately, and in hindsight, I do say that we did not hear from the other side of the issue with respect to plain packaging during the hearings on Bill 119.

The government's position to date is that plain packaging and the regulatory authority contained therein in the bill were very much a part of the public hearings, but it really wasn't. It played a minor role in those hearings, and there was not a significant focus on the issue. Nor did we have witnesses from, for example, the printing industries come forward and tell us about the impending job losses should such a move be contemplated.

I think it's only fair, and I join with my colleagues in calling upon this government, to remove that clause from Bill 119 so the rest of the bill, which is pretty good legislation, can move forward and that we set it aside and ask the government to hold public hearings on plain packaging in concert with the federal government, because we want to hear from all concerned individuals and citizens in this province with respect to that issue before any government moves ahead with such a significant step.

We also need a better understanding of the studies that have been done on the effect of plain packaging, and particularly how plain packaging may or may not serve as a deterrent for young people to start smoking. That's the objective of Bill 119. My party supports the objective of Bill 119, which we are told is to stop young people from starting to smoke. I think all legislators support that. With respect to plain packaging, though, we need a fuller airing of the issues surrounding that important initiative.

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I rise to support very strongly the motion by my colleague the member for Durham-York.

I was present at several of the meetings held by the standing committee on social development to hear presentations on the proposed Tobacco Control Act. I knew already, of course, that tobacco is a health hazard, but the evidence, presented largely by doctors, pharmacists and educators, was overwhelming.

There has been denial, particularly by cigarette companies, that the mounting statistical evidence proves the deadly nature of addiction to tobacco, but the evidence is now in. It is grisly and it is overwhelming. There are 13,000 deaths per year in Ontario which result from the use of tobacco; that is, 100 deaths for every member of this House, as my colleague has just said.

That is the population of a small town such as Niagara-on-the-Lake. That is almost five times the number of people who die from traffic accidents, suicide and AIDS combined in this province. One person dies from tobacco every 40 minutes in Ontario. To a young person, these figures may seem very abstract, but I can think of a neighbour, a colleague, a fine Canadian writer and Family Court judge, known to me personally, who died too young from smoking.

Tobacco causes 80% of lung cancer, and lung cancer is usually fatal within two years of diagnosis. One third of deaths from heart disease are smoking-related; bronchitis and emphysema can make life miserable for years; and stroke, cancers of the mouth, throat, oesophagus and bladder are hardly mild afflictions and are linked to tobacco smoking.

These effects do not usually occur quickly. There's a gradual erosion of health over time. Ill health caused by tobacco use is a financial drain on our health service and a cause of lost workdays and economic loss.

The committee heard from a 12-year-old boy that in spite of regulations, he had been able to buy cigarettes in five of eight stores where he'd asked for them, including pharmacies.

We learned that the hazards of smoking are by no means confined to the person who smokes. Secondhand smoke causes cancer in non-smokers. Many people have found their place of work intolerable and dangerous to their health or have been unable to attend meetings or other events because of smoking by others.

Children and infants are particularly at risk. We were told that in northern Ontario, the problem is worse during the winter months because buildings and vehicles are closed up tight to keep out the cold. Asthma among children is on the rise and has reached alarming proportions. Mothers who smoke are liable to have low-birth-weight babies who are prone to health and developmental problems.

We heard that chewing tobacco, sold to youngsters in the States as being less addictive than smokes, can lead to oral cancer and other health problems.

We have to take all reasonable measures to discourage smoking. Tobacco is the only substance that kills when used exactly as directed. It is also said to be more addictive than heroin.

Our Tobacco Control Act is a good start and is aimed particularly at preventing children and teenagers from taking up the habit. Few people start to smoke after the age of 20.

We were making progress in the reduction of tobacco use in this province. Public education campaigns, the proposed raising of the legal age for tobacco purchase, banning of sales from pharmacies and vending machines, the increase in designated non-smoking areas and plain packaging will all help. But the unfortunate response by the federal government to increased tobacco smuggling which has forced us to reduce tobacco taxes in Ontario is leading to a rise in smoking, the effects of which are yet to be seen.

We cannot prohibit the use of tobacco—it is too well established for that—but we can and must take every possible measure to deter its use. This resolution will help. I strongly support it and I want to thank all those people in my riding who are working hard to reduce the use of tobacco.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further debate?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Thank you for the opportunity to speak briefly on this piece of legislation, or rather this resolution.

I want to first of all lament, as I have on a couple of occasions, the fact that I believe the private members' hour has been turned into a political forum for the political parties as opposed to the concerns of individual members. This is an example once again of dealing with something that's clearly outside the jurisdiction of the Ontario government. I would have preferred, and I've seen, some resolutions from members on the government side and from opposition members that have been specific to their ridings or very direct specific concerns. This is simply another fed-bashing initiative on the part of a member of the government because they want to run against the federal government in the next election. That does not influence my discussion of the particular measure that's here, but I really think it distorts what this Legislature is all about.

I've watched this Legislature for 17 years, and it used to be that the private members' hour was in fact the private members' hour. The odd time there would be what you'd call things that would be dictated by the caucus office or the government or something like this, a strategy that you would face with the government, but it used to be genuinely, I think, a matter of concern, first of all, within provincial jurisdiction, and secondly, genuinely an individual's concern.

I'm not suggesting that Mr O'Connor is not concerned about the issue. I think he is, as all members are. I just find this part of a pattern of, why don't we bash somebody else? Next week they'll have one where we'll bash the banks, and after that we'll bash the opposition parties. It will happen. Unfortunately, it will happen with the opposition parties as well. So I don't lament it simply on the basis of the government doing it; I lament the fact that this private members' hour has turned into a very partisan forum.

The resolution itself, however, is before us. I would like to discuss aspects of it, because I think in its content it is to be supported. I happen to feel very strongly about the issue of smoking, particularly among young people in our society.

The provincial government has within its purview a lot of powers to deal with matters of this kind. Even with this resolution, the provincial government, while it may not have constitutional jurisdiction to require that the companies provide this, a very strong message from the Minister of Health demanding that particular information for those cigarettes sold within the province of Ontario would certainly be extremely helpful and difficult for the companies to try to resist.

I found rather interesting, as I think all members of the House did, the hearings that were conducted by a committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, where the major manufacturing companies had their top people brought before this committee. There were some interesting and revealing exchanges that took place on this occasion.

I think what we're really aiming at are two things. First of all, this resolution deals with the contents of the product. No matter how people feel about smoking—and some people are very resentful when they get preached at for smoking—one thing everyone is entitled to, and the federal authorities have been moving towards this for some time now and will continue to do so, is the revealing of just what people are smoking. At least people should know the contents and the adverse or positive effects of those contents. I would suggest that overwhelmingly in this instance it is a negative effect on the health of people. Any time legislators at any level of government are in favour of revealing facts, of revealing information for people so they can make their own judgements, I think that is extremely beneficial.

All of us are concerned about this, but particularly among the young people who are starting out smoking. I've discussed this with a number of young people, and there's a natural reaction to those of us who are adults, perhaps who have some more experience. We have all had the opportunity, and it's not a pleasant opportunity, of seeing some of the effects of smoking, particularly serious diseases related to smoking. I have often thought, morbid as it sounds, that it would be interesting to have young people go through the wards of various hospitals where people have been affected by tobacco products being smoked or perhaps chewed to see what the effect can be. It's always something distant for young people, something they feel they're not vulnerable to, and I think it's exceedingly important.

Young people are interested in information. I think that's why the information that would be forthcoming from what is asked for in this resolution would be useful for those young people to know. A lot of them are interested in science. They are interested in health facts. They often will say to you, "Why don't you give us the facts, and we'll make a decision." That doesn't always work, and sometimes government has to be more heavy-handed than people would like.

Many of the initiatives discussed at the committee of the Legislature that's been dealing with this and by those who had input are very, very positive, and listing and telling the effects of the contents of that found in cigarettes and cigars and other tobacco products is extremely important.

It is, in my view, one shared by members of the medical profession, probably the number one health hazard we face at this time, not to suggest that there aren't others, but the effect of smoking cigarettes, cigars, cigarillos and other things people smoke is very pronounced on people.

I suspect that most of those who are smokers, and perhaps even some members of the House are smokers, would like to quit. If you asked them: "Do you enjoy smoking? Do you really want to go on smoking?" most would say, "I don't want to, but I'm addicted to it." That gets down to the point the member has brought forward in his resolution, that there are addictive materials found in those tobacco products. That's why it's important to have this information revealed.

I hope within provincial purview, within our jurisdiction here—and I think there's a pretty good consensus; this is one issue that's not overly partisan. There are always partisan considerations, but within the provincial purview, I think there's a strong consensus within this House for the provincial government to initiate many activities that would discourage young people particularly from smoking and encourage those who are older and committed smokers not to do so.

This resolution, if passed, will be helpful in focusing on that issue, and I certainly encourage all members of the Legislature to do what we can within our own jurisdiction to ensure that there's a diminishing in the smoking taking place in our province.

Mr Norman W. Sterling (Carleton): I come to this debate having been involved in it now for about eight or nine years. I think it's important that people know the ill effects tobacco can cause them, and the listing on a package of cigarettes of the various contents no doubt would be helpful.

I find it somewhat a concern, though, as a member of the provincial Legislature, that the parliamentary assistant for the Minister of Health brings forward a resolution which basically is thrusting responsibility or onus or burden upon another level of government. I would have much preferred that the parliamentary assistant for the Minister of Health had brought forward some kind of resolution which would push his government, push us in this Legislature, to take some action rather than shifting the burden to another level of government. For that reason, I find the resolution somewhat weak.

It's passing strange too that Bill 119, which is in front of this Legislature at the present time, empowers this government to do this very thing on its own. Section 5 of Bill 119 provides that:

"No person shall sell or offer to sell tobacco at retail or for subsequent sale at retail or distribute or offer to distribute it for that purpose unless...

"(b) the package bears or contains a health warning and other health information in accordance with the regulations."

That says to me that this government, this parliamentary assistant, has the right to make regulations through the cabinet doing exactly what he's asking the federal government to do. So why is the parliamentary assistant saying, "They should do it," rather than "We should do it"?

If the parliamentary assistant wants it to be done Canada-wide, and I think it makes some sense to do it Canada-wide, why would he not then say, "Provided that, if it's not done by" such-and-such a date, one year, two years hence, "the provincial government do it on its own under Bill 119"?

It's quite clear, in talking to legal counsel on the social development committee, that the provincial government probably has the power to require this on packaging. In fact, if that were not the case, the section I have just read in vis-à-vis Bill 119 would not have been included.

We have had some debate on Bill 119 with regard to packaging, plain packaging etc, and my colleague has mentioned something about it. I don't believe the threats of the various tobacco packaging people at this time, but I do believe there should be some more debate on it. It's interesting to note too that section 5, as it has been argued in the committee, existed in Bill 119 since it was introduced back in November 1993. These packaging companies did not choose to come in front of the social development committee to make their case. There has been some prior notice to them to come in front of the legislative committee and say this is going to cost jobs in various communities across Ontario.

The amendment to the regulations section of the bill only made it more crystal clear that in the contemplation of this government there might be plain packaging somewhere down the road. Therefore, the idea that there has been no notice to the tobacco industry, to the tobacco packaging people, that plain packaging might have been in contemplation is not exactly correct. They had an opportunity to come before the social development committee to make their case and chose not to. So we are now caught in the conundrum of passing Bill 119 with them now claiming they did not have prior notice of this.

At any rate, what I would urge the government to do right now is dedicate part of the tobacco tax to help people in the tobacco packaging area, in case plain packaging does come and jobs are lost, so that these communities will be assisted by such a dedicated tax in the future.

Mr Gary Malkowski (York East): I'm very proud to participate in the debate today to support the resolution of the member for Durham-York.

The issue and the message calls for great cooperation by all levels of government: municipal, provincial and federal. This seems an appropriate place to raise the resolution, because we do require the list of all the chemicals and things that are included in tobacco products. What we need to do is make sure that young people are aware of what chemicals are in them and how the chemicals can affect their health and what problems can be caused from them.

I'd like to remind the members and remind people, both smokers and non-smokers, that we can give them more information about the deaths that happen as a result of using tobacco products. We have to remember that every 40 minutes there is the death of someone who has used tobacco products. We need to realize that those chemicals can affect health. When it is lit, the gaseous particles or the byproducts that are in the smoke and consumed or ingested by the body have an impact on us.

It can cause an increase in heart disease and lung cancer. There can be chronic bronchitis and emphysema. There is the problem of cancer of the mouth, cancer of the throat and cancer of the oesophagus. With young mothers who are pregnant, this smoke can have an impact on the foetus and there can be very low birth weight and that will have an impact on the children. Also, sometimes it can affect the foetus so that there are some disabilities.

It's curious that the federal Liberal government was so concerned about the issue of smuggling and the economy that it ignored the issue of people's health and how smoking can affect people. I think we require cooperation from the federal government. I'm a parent of five small children and I know it's difficult for parents to talk to their kids about this issue and not to sound like they're preaching, but it does require everyone's cooperation.

I would ask that the federal government and tobacco companies be made to list the individual products, the more than 400 things that are included in their products and the health effects they can cause. The tobacco industry denies there is any connection between what they include in their products and health, but there is proof. I think the denial shows clear irresponsibility.

In the borough of East York, the borough of East York health unit has done a lot of research. There is also the Ontario tobacco strategy which has been developed by our government. There are many different groups that are collecting information and evidence through research on the number of deaths that are happening from tobacco use. There is this information, as well as the young mothers again who have the unborn children who are affected by their smoking.

To wrap up, I would like to say that this resolution be supported by all members. We also call on the municipal government and the federal government for cooperation, because what we need to do is get the best information that will have an impact on young children to prevent them from smoking and that will keep them healthier and able to live longer. I would just like to remind members that young people think smoking is really cool, but it isn't. It kills, and that's the message the young people need to learn.

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I'm very pleased to stand in my place this morning and speak to this resolution, and a very fine resolution, I might say, by my colleague the member for Durham-York.

The basic issue we're talking about here this morning is that people have a right to know what's in cigarettes, what's in tobacco, what's in chewing tobacco. They have a right to know, and they're denied that at the moment. I think that's absolutely criminal.

I find it very strange indeed that when I go to the grocery store, as the honourable member opposite said in his comments, to buy a box of cornflakes, listed there-upon are all the ingredients in that box of cornflakes.

Likewise, when I buy a vitamin pill, should I need one—I don't—there are all the ingredients about what you're going to digest in your system. But here we have a system whereby cancerous substances are introduced into cigarettes and by this wonderful quirk of, "Oh it's our secret; you're not supposed to know," nobody knows what they're taking into their system. If they knew what they were taking into their system, I think it would have a tremendous effect on smoking, particularly smoking by young people, which really is what we should be focusing on.

I found it also very interesting that in the United States they've had extensive debate about the ingredients in cigarettes, tobacco etc, and it's a known fact that some of the ingredients that are introduced into tobacco products by some of the manufacturers are not fit to be put in a toxic landfill site. They're so toxic that you would have to make special arrangements to dispose of them; You just can't ditch them out. Doesn't that give us the message?

If a food manufacturer, say—and we'll use cornflakes as an example because most people eat cornflakes—were introducing some cancerous, toxic ingredients into the cornflakes, I would imagine there would be a public outcry of proportions you wouldn't be able to contain. People would march on Parliament Hill in Ottawa, and I've no doubt they would march on the Legislature here, demanding that we do something about this. In turn, I'm sure the manufacturers would be locked up for a very long time for killing people all over the place. Yet we seem to accept this and we seem to think this is wonderful.

I was very upset to hear some of the comments from the Conservative Party in so far as the packaging and the job loss. I recognize too that there's a certain amount of job loss, but when you compare—I think the member for Simcoe West referred to 13 people who may lose their jobs, and in the meantime we've got thousands and thousands of people who perish every year through tobacco products. I don't think that makes a very logical argument. It almost seems they're apologists for the tobacco industry.

I'd like to bring up the New York Times Magazine. It says: "Hi folks. Mr Butt's here. Ever wonder what it takes to be a top tobacco industry executive?" Then this next cigarette says, "Well, to begin with, you've got to be absolutely nuts about freedom, I mean certifiably nuts about freedom, and you have to love choice," it says. The headline of the New York Times Magazine article says, "How Do They Live With Themselves?" How do these tobacco executives live with themselves? How do the people live with themselves who criticize my colleague's resolution? How do they live with themselves? I say shame on all of them. This is such an issue that no one should stand in their place and criticize my friend at all. It's absolutely diabolical to suggest that he has some motives that aren't for the health of this country. It's awful.

Then we have the executive from Philip Morris who says: "I don't know how I look at myself in the mirror. I wish they wouldn't say things about me like that." This is the executive from Philip Morris; he's ashamed of himself.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Durham-York, you have two minutes.

Mr O'Connor: I want to thank the members who participated, the member for York-Mackenzie for his support.

The member for Simcoe West complained that the federal government and the NDP were caving on the tax issue. I wish the Tories, when they were in power, had dealt with it properly. I wish they had stuck with the excise tax. Four weeks, it took them, to cave. They're the party who talks about business, yet they don't care about those retailers who are on the Ontario-Quebec border. I find that passing strange.

The member for St Catharines mentioned you should talk about your local constituents. That's the thing. The fact is that each and every member of the Legislature has a hundred people in their riding who are dying from tobacco-related illnesses. I've got proactive groups in my riding such as the Coalition for a Smoke-Free Uxbridge. I told them some of the things I'm doing on this issue, and they sent me this little book, Where There's Smoke. It's a children's book and one I would advise every member of the Legislature to get a copy of. I'll have an opportunity to speak in my riding about this at the Georgina Festival of Stories, and this is the book I'm taking this year. This isn't something about bashing one level of government or another; this is about a hundred of my constituents who are going to die prematurely, who don't need to, and that's not a partisan issue.

I thank my colleagues the members for Peterborough and York East and Durham East for their thoughts, their suggestions and their support.

To the member for Carleton, I'd suggest he read the reprinted edition of Bill 119, because section 5 covers it. It's unfortunate that he hadn't, but we talked a little bit and we can talk some more. Unfortunately, Bill 119 is being held up. My opposition colleagues told me they're going to drag it through committee of the whole House, with half-hour bells on every section. Not to bash them, I think that's unfortunate. This resolution is about all of our constituents and all those people who are going to die not knowing what's in tobacco products, and I suggest that Pat Borders might want to quit.

The Deputy Speaker: The time provided for private members' public business has expired.

VISITORS

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Just very briefly, if I might, as a point of order, take the opportunity to introduce to members of the Legislature a delegation from Pescina, Italy, led by the mayor of Pescina, Vincenzo Parisse, and welcome them, about 20 visitors in the members' gallery west. We're very pleased to have them here in Ontario and visiting our Legislature.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The honourable member will know that he does not have a point of order. However, our visitors are very special visitors. They're most welcome to this, our assembly of Ontario.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY PRESS GALLERY

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I rise today to offer congratulations to the new executive of the Queen's Park press gallery. The gallery's annual elections were held today and for the first time in recent memory there was a contest for the position of president. Richard Brennan of the Windsor Star, sometimes known as Mr Congeniality, edged out Guy LePage of CKCO-TV in Kitchener, 20 votes to 18.

Much of the credit for Brennan's landslide victory goes to Brennan's campaign manager, Jim Coyle of the Ottawa Citizen. Coyle came up with Brennan's campaign slogan, "Better the devil you know."

There is good news in today's election for those of us who are long-serving incumbents and thinking about re-election. Mr Brennan, who is known by his nickname, the Plain Dealer, is serving his fourth term as president, the longest in press gallery history.

There is also a lesson for the government in Mr Brennan's victory: Brennan has never broken a campaign promise because he has never made a campaign promise. Mr Brennan won under difficult circumstances. As the government members know, Mr Brennan and Mr Coyle are under police investigation over a leaked document concerning the Windsor casino.

When will this cloud be lifted from these two crusading journalists? Free the Press Gallery Two.

The other four positions on the executive were acclaimed, the envy of all politicians: Emilia Casella of the Hamilton Spectator, vice-president for print journalists; Guy LePage, CKCO-TV, vice-president for electronic journalists; Randy Rath, CHCH-TV Hamilton, treasurer; and Betsy Powell of Canadian Press has been acclaimed as secretary.

I hope all members will join me in congratulating the new executive of the Queen's Park press gallery.

TAOIST T'AI CHI

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I'm pleased to announce to the House, on behalf of the Taoist T'ai Chi Society of Canada and its founder, Master Moy Lin-shin, the following statement: In celebration of the Taoist T'ai Chi Seniors' Health Day, to be held next week at Nathan Phillips Square in Toronto from 1 pm to 3 pm, there will be demonstrations of Taoist t'ai chi by seniors, who will demonstrate first hand the health-improving benefits of this complete physiological exercise.

In celebration of this event, all regular instructors' fees for Taoist t'ai chi classes for seniors will be waived for the remainder of 1994. The vast majority of these classes are funded by government agencies. In these difficult times, Master Moy would like to recognize the support he personally and the Taoist T'ai Chi Society, a registered charity, have received over the years by returning a helping hand.

In Metropolitan Toronto, Taoist t'ai chi is taught at over 60 locations weekly. In other parts of the province, approximately 20 more classes are taught to seniors. The waiving of fees for these many weekly classes is a considerable undertaking.

The aims and objectives of the Taoist t'ai chi society are to promote the health-improving qualities of t'ai chi and to make t'ai chi available to all, to promote cultural exchange and to help others. The Taoist t'ai chi society hopes that all gestures of mutual supportiveness will create a climate of goodwill and cooperation among us all.

ACCESS TO CHILDREN IN CUSTODY

Mr Tony Rizzo (Oakwood): I would like to bring to the attention of the House the problem of grandparents who have been denied access to their grandchildren. When there is a divorce with children involved or when one parent dies, very often grandparents can be caught in a conflict where they are prevented from seeing their grandchildren. This is unfortunate and unacceptable.

While the best interests of the child must always continue to take precedence, I strongly believe that the Children's Law Reform Act should be amended to prevent a parent or person with custody from placing unreasonable obstacles between children and their grandparents. We must ensure that the emotional ties between them are not severed as a result of a parental conflict and that access to children is not restricted by a child's guardian. Sadly, this is often the case and children are regularly denied the privilege and enjoyment of their grandparents' company. The result is a loss of their rightful heritage.

Later today, I will introduce a bill to address this very issue and I strongly encourage all members of the House to support it.

GOVERNMENT SERVICES

Mr Hans Daigeler (Nepean): Today, I would like to do something that perhaps doesn't happen often enough in this House and that is to congratulate and thank the Ontario civil service. Frankly, independent of the parties, there are civil servants out there who are doing a good job, who are trying to do their best under the circumstances.

Last week, I came across an example that I thought was very innovative and should be mentioned as a very positive step forward. Somebody had a real brainwave and I think should be congratulated on behalf of the House. We got from the communications branch of the Ministry of the Attorney General this diskette. This diskette describes, in electronic form, the legal services that are available across the province.

I would just like to point out to you what's on this diskette. There's a description in terms of address and also what they do of the provincial legal services, the agencies, boards and commissions that are there, the community legal organizations, the legal services by region, all broken down. Also on this diskette you can find where the Chinese-language services are available, where the French-language services are available, advocacy, counselling services and so on and so on.

Frankly, I think it's an innovative way to cut down on paper. I tried it at home on my computer and it's very easy to access. It's great to use in the members' constituency offices and for anybody out there in the community who is interested to learn what the Ontario government and the bureaucracy has available. So I recommend this to you and I commend the staff who have developed this.

FORD MOTOR CO OF CANADA

Mr Gary Carr (Oakville South): Congratulations are in order to the Ford Motor Co in my riding of Oakville South for the good news story that they will be spending $400 million over the next two years to expand their truck-painting facility. This will create 500 construction jobs and provide a much-needed boost to the local economy. The Oakville factories have increased their employees by about 800 in the last three years.

Ford had previously announced that it would be building the new Windstar minivan in Oakville, and that was excellent news, but to have received this extra investment is good news indeed. Vehicle sales are increasing and all predictions indicate that Ford is going to have a profitable year. In the next 36 months, 16 new vehicles are going to be introduced, and Ford is strongly positioned to take advantage of the gradually improving economy.

I offer my sincere congratulations to the Ford workers and management, who have been the true success story. All of us in this Legislature should be very pleased with this good news.

MOTORCYCLE SAFETY

Mr Ron Hansen (Lincoln): I rise today to inform the House of an issue that directly affects 165,000 residents of Ontario: motorcycle safety and awareness. With each passing year, more and more residents of this province are driving motorcycles and mopeds, but they face a hidden danger: other motorists.

In 1991, the last year for which statistics are available, 55 motorists and nine passengers were killed on the highways and byways of Ontario, many after colliding with cars and trucks. Add to that number 2,183 injuries to motorcycle drivers and 487 to passengers.

A good number of these deaths and injuries could have been prevented if more motorists were in the habit of looking twice before entering intersections and if more riders had taken motorcycle safety courses. This is why Bikers' Rights of Ontario, a non-profit group dedicated to responsible motorcycle legislation, wants the province to raise motorcycle safety awareness by declaring May of each year as Motorcycle Safety Awareness Month.

In recent years, myself and the member for Kitchener-Wilmot sponsored a bikers' rights rally here at Queen's Park. Many of these same riders signed petitions, which have been presented to the House, asking the province to officially declare May as Motorcycle Safety Awareness Month.

On behalf of the 165,000 riders of Ontario, I would ask that the Premier consider officially proclaiming May as Motorcycle Safety Awareness Month throughout the province of Ontario.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY EMPLOYEES

Mr Steven Offer (Mississauga North): If you listen to recent media reports, you would swear the NDP caucus is a house divided. I stand in my place today to say that the media, respectfully, are wrong. The NDP isn't divided. In fact, they are just one big, happy family.

Yes, nepotism and the NDP seem to go hand in hand. The corridors of power are full of NDP family members. There are now five members of the Mackenzie family who are drawing their salaries directly from the taxpayers of Ontario. A sixth family member is also a full-time organizer for the NDP.

For the Mackenzie family members, Bob, David, Dan, Lori, Andrew and Rachel, every day at work is a family reunion. This is just the beginning. It would appear everyone who works for the NDP is somehow related.

There's David Agnew and his wife, Sheila Kirouac; Marilyn Roycroft and her husband, Peter Mosher; Lucille Roch and her husband, Michael Decter; Murray Weppler and his wife, Patty Park.

We even have Ross McClellan and his wife, Pat, whose daughter, Maura, works for Elaine Ziemba. Of course, her daughter, Laura Ziemba, works for Brian Charlton, whose wife, Chris, works for Ross McClellan, which I believe brings me back to where I started.

It's no wonder there are no jobs left for ordinary Ontarians. They have all been taken by the brothers and sisters, husbands and wives, and of course the children of the NDP cabinet ministers.

CARMEN LEMCKE

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): I have the pleasure of acknowledging the hard work and dedication of a retired member of the Shelburne police force. Carmen Lemcke served as the chief of police for Shelburne for 37 years.

Carmen Lemcke is the longest-serving police chief in Ontario and quite possibly Canada. Carmen is known in the community as not only a fair and tough chief of police, but also as an individual who felt a strong and active community was a healthy community. Carmen actively participated in sports groups within Shelburne and has coached four minor hockey teams to Ontario championships.

Carmen is the classic community-minded civil servant who saw the benefit of putting back into the community as much as or more than you can get from it. There are few residents in Shelburne who cannot tell you a story about Chief Lemcke, whether it is through their children at the local arena or coming to their aid when they need the security and assistance of the Shelburne police force.

Many things have changed at the police station since Chief Lemcke joined the force as a constable in 1956. One thing never changed in those 37 years: Chief Lemcke felt the police force was most effective when it was part of the community, not a separate group that watched from the sidelines. You have to be involved and effective. Chief Lemcke actively pursued the new goals of community policing during his tenure of 37 years.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank him and his family for their dedication, to a community, that has not gone unnoticed.

CAVAN ECOGARDEN

Ms Jenny Carter (Peterborough): I want to congratulate Richard Miller and other community members involved with the new EcoGarden project at Maple Leaf Park in Cavan township.

The dedication of this park was a fitting way for the Cavan community to celebrate Earth Day and there was an excellent turnout this past Sunday. Trees were planted to mark the boundaries of the new garden and I was happy to be present for the sod-turning ceremony, which dedicated the garden to the memory of the past and the promise of the future.

The main benefit of this garden will be educational. I believe this EcoGarden and others like it will become a major educational influence in this area, as well as a source of pleasure, of comradeship, of beauty and of nutrition.

There is a universal need for people to come together to find common solutions to common problems. I believe communities will continue to work together to ensure that we do not irrevocably damage the wonderful environment on which we all depend, both for our physical health and for the joy it gives.

My congratulations again to Mr Miller and the community of Cavan. May the EcoGarden flourish.

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): Mr Speaker, I understand we have unanimous consent for a statement on the day of mourning.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Agreed? Agreed.

DAY OF MOURNING

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): This 28th day of April has a very special significance for the workers in the province of Ontario. This is the annual day of mourning for all of those who have died as a result of workplace accidents or occupational illnesses. All across Ontario, workers have gathered to express their feelings. Our common purpose is to honour the dead and show solidarity with the injured workers.

Let us remember that last year Ontario recorded 292 workplace fatalities and approximately 137,000 workplace injuries. While we share the grief of the bereaved and injured, we must bear in mind that much more needs to be done by all concerned to improve occupational health and safety. There still are workplaces where only the absolute minimum is done, where corners are cut to do things the easy way.

In addition to the unacceptable human toll, workplace accidents create an enormous financial burden of about $12 billion a year. That's the estimated cost to the Ontario economy of the six million working days lost by injured workers.

There is another dimension of today's observance from which we can take some consolation. Statistics for the last several years show a decline in the rate of workplace fatalities and injuries, even when the figures are adjusted for reduced economic activity in the recession. In spite of the improvement, we must continue to do our utmost to bring the tragic and unnecessary workplace fatality toll to zero.

I want to remind the House about the origin of the day of mourning. When the Ontario Federation of Labour selected this date for observance in the 1980s, the intention was to mark the anniversary of the original Workers' Compensation Act, which was passed on this day in this Legislature in 1914, exactly 80 years ago.

It is fitting that in this 80th anniversary year this government is reforming and renewing the original act, bringing forth a comprehensive package of improvements for it. I am happy that the reform package contains compassionate measures for the most vulnerable injured workers. The first tangible benefits of reform will go to them.

As members will recall, about 45,000 older injured workers and family members who are living in difficult circumstances will continue to have their WCB pensions fully indexed for inflation. The same applies to pensions of survivors and the fully disabled. Moreover, many unemployed older workers who receive minimal WCB benefits will get a pension increase of $200 a month. This increase is not subject to social assistance clawback. The first beneficiaries of the WCB reform package include many of the families of those whom we mourn today.

The positive news for injured workers actually began last year, when our government announced funding of $2.5 million over five years for injured workers' groups to expand their services. Freed from financial worry, injured workers' groups have been able to concentrate on becoming effective advocates for their very worthy cause, and the WCB reforms attest to that.

I see other reasons for being optimistic about things being done in Ontario and across Canada to improve occupational health and safety. Specifically, I want to mention the considerable progress that is being made in 13 jurisdictions across the country on a national harmonization plan for health and safety standards everywhere. Soon to be published are the country-wide regulations to improve health and safety in many sectors where agreement is virtually complete. But again I feel more remains to be done before we convince all employers and employees to treat workplace health and safety with the utmost urgency.

In memory of our fallen workers, let us resolve that constant vigilance and prevention of workplace tragedies must be the absolute first priority in our workplaces in Ontario.

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): As the minister has said, today, April 28, marks the 80th anniversary of the first workers' legislation passed in all of Canada. Ironically, this was the result of a royal commission appointed in 1910 by the government of the day and headed by Justice Meredith. The principles of Justice Meredith's royal commission report apply probably more today than even they did in 1914. It is a day we remember and mourn workers killed and injured on the job.

That day, 80 years ago, was a landmark in Canada when governments began passing laws that would improve working conditions for all employees. Now workers have the right to expect safe Ontario workplaces, and when injury does occur, compensation is a worker's inherent right, as is the right for rehabilitation.

The Workers' Compensation Board was formed to ensure that injured workers on the job receive fair compensation for their workplace injuries and that proper health and safety standards are in place in all Ontario workplaces to prevent workplace accidents and deaths.

While improvements have been made since that first legislation was passed, 373,050 claims were filed in Canada in 1993. This incredible number is evidence that much more needs to be done in the area of prevention and in the improvement of health and safety standards.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the organizations and individuals participating in events to mark this very solemn day. As we observe today a moment of silence for workers killed or injured in the workplace and for their families, let us pledge ourselves to attaining better health and safety standards to protect Ontario workers and their families.

There isn't anyone who sits in this House today who has not been touched one way or another personally by someone in the family or a close friend or acquaintance who has been injured or perhaps even killed in the workplace. We must continue our collective efforts in the identification of hazardous substances, through educational initiatives and through relevant health and safety training, to ensure that all Ontario workplaces are free of workplace fatalities and accidents.

There are times when partisan differences in this House are quite pronounced, when confrontation is clearly inevitable. This is one occasion, however, when as legislators we must do all we can to ensure that proper safety measures are put into place to avoid the tragedies that have happened in the past for the families and for the friends who are no longer with us.

Recently I held a number of outreach sessions around the province of Ontario. The injured workers who came before our hearings provided real-life examples, with human faces rather than just files from the Workers' Compensation Board, of tragedies, frustration, anger and disappointment. These men and women want to return to work. They want to return to dignity. All they want is fairness, justice and a chance to get on with their lives. Instead, we see financial hardship, family breakdown, attempted suicides and, indeed, suicides.

These are the results of workers who are injured in an accident feeling the need and becoming consumed with having to fight the bureaucracy that clearly is out of control. We are all complicit in this area; all three parties in this Legislature need to do more. Obviously the onus falls to the government of the day, but even we in opposition need to look at ways to reduce accidents, improve health and safety and help injured workers get back to work.

Very often, we focus on issues like fraud and bureaucracy. While these are clearly important issues that must be addressed, we must not lose sight of the fact that worker injuries continue to rise, worker frustrations increase, and not enough is being done to address their concerns.

Finally, while we may continue to disagree on methodology, I believe we all agree on the goal, prevention of accidents, and when that fails, return to work as quickly as possible with justice and dignity for all workers injured in the province of Ontario.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): On behalf of my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative caucus, I rise to join the members from the other two parties in remembering those workers who have been killed or injured on the job as a result of workplace accidents or industrial diseases.

By setting aside this day of mourning each year, we are reminded of the need to remain dedicated to the task of eliminating workplace accidents and diseases. Government, industry and labour must work together to create a safe working environment. Such cooperation will ensure that real progress is made to reduce the risk of death or injury to workers.

We mourn the 290 people who lost their lives due to job-related accidents last year and remember the many more who were injured.

Each one of us should reflect on the work that has been done by our predecessors in the establishment of the workers' compensation system, the passage of the Occupational Health and Safety Act and the other measures which this Legislature has taken over the years in an attempt to minimize the risk of death or injury to workers. While much has been accomplished, much more must be done in the future.

Today workers face a variety of job-related injuries that our forefathers would never have imagined. It is our task to provide as safe a workplace as possible. The workers' compensation system is in fundamental need of reform and our occupational health and safety laws must be constantly updated to reflect the changing nature of the workplace.

As we observe a moment's silence for the working men and women who have been killed or injured in the workplace and take the time to remember their families, let us rededicate ourselves to ensuring that such needless and tragic accidents do not occur in the future.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I invite all members and our visitors in the galleries to stand and observe a moment of silence for those who have died in the workplaces of this province.

The House observed a moment's silence.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

METROPOLITAN TORONTO SCHOOL BOARDS

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): I am pleased to inform members today that the eight public school boards in Metropolitan Toronto, the Metropolitan Separate School Board and the Ministry of Education and Training have agreed to establish a task force to find ways to save money through cooperative services.

This announcement reflects the Ontario government's ongoing commitment to encouraging school boards to restructure their operations for greater efficiency and to assisting boards with that process.

Increased cooperation among school boards is a key in maintaining quality education in the current economic environment. School boards, like other public institutions, have a responsibility to work together to deliver education in the most cost-effective way so that more resources are available for the classroom.

Cooperation will eliminate unnecessary duplication and allow boards to acquire services and resources at less cost than they would pay individually. Today, many school boards across Ontario are cooperating to share transportation services, payroll, purchasing and technology.

I commend the Metro Toronto school boards for establishing a task force to examine these and other models for the cooperative delivery of education services and to recommend how the cooperative approach can best be applied in Metropolitan Toronto.

The task force will consist of 14 members. Dr Ned McKeown, who has recently announced his retirement as director of education for the Metropolitan Toronto School Board, will serve as chair of the task force. Ms Margaret Caravaggio, superintendent of system review for the Metropolitan Separate School Board, will serve as co-chair. They are both in the gallery with us today.

The other 12 members will be four representatives appointed by the Metropolitan Separate School Board and one representative appointed by each of the eight public school boards.

The task force will be supported by a number of subcommittees that will include representatives of teaching and non-teaching staff.

It will report to a steering committee of the Minister of Education and Training, the chair of Metropolitan Toronto School Board and the chair of the Metropolitan Separate School Board. It will deliver an interim report by April 30, 1995, and a final report by June 30, 1995.

The establishment of this task force shows the commitment of the Metro public school boards and the Metropolitan Separate School Board to work together to meet the challenge of providing education in Canada's largest urban centre. Almost one in every four students in Ontario attends a school operated by one of the Metro Toronto school boards.

I would like to congratulate Ann Vanstone, the chair of the Metropolitan Toronto School Board, and Elvira Demonte, the chair of the Metropolitan Separate School Board, who are both here with us in the gallery as well today, and I'd ask them to be recognized.

Their approach has been a constructive one to the task force and their commitment to building the cooperative model.

Initiatives such as this task force will lead to better education services at less cost to the taxpayers. It is this kind of initiative that will allow us to continue our province's substantial investment in education, an investment that points the way to economic renewal, to better jobs, and to personal and social wellbeing for the people of this province.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Responses?

Mr Charles Beer (York-Mackenzie): I want to rise and welcome the establishment of the task force by the Metropolitan Toronto school boards. I think this is a positive step forward, particularly because this initiative has come, really, out of a lot of work which the Metro boards, all of them, have been doing over the past while, and I think one would want to note Metro's unique educational needs study that the boards did over the last couple of years and that was presented last spring, setting out the particular issues and problems that the Metro boards face.

The other thing that I think is important to underline about the creation of this task force is that it is coming from the boards themselves, and I think we have all been talking a lot about the need to restructure. We've been talking about how we can get services provided in common so that we can avoid duplication, save money and obviously save cost to the taxpayers. But we have all, at different times and with different governments, had difficulty in really making something happen.

I think the fact that this task force is co-chaired through both Metro public and Metro separate, that the membership will reflect the boards within Metro, means when they reach agreement that in fact those are things we will be able to see as very possibly being implemented, and I think we need some success stories to demonstrate that this kind of cooperation can go on.

I should just note for the members of the House that while the Minister of Education was making the announcement about the task force, those who are on election watch would also want to note that in reply to one question, the Minister of Education made it very clear that the school board elections would come before the next provincial election. I know that he'd want me to share that with members of the House as well as with those watching this program.

The other point that I would like to make as well is to offer our cooperation both to Dr McKeown and to Ms Caravaggio. I know that it's going to be a very stimulating time. The time frame is, I think, a doable one. It is tight in some respects, but I think it's a place where we want to see and need to see action, and that's probably a good way to do it.

The comment that Dr McKeown is retiring is one that I don't believe. I think it has been said on a number of occasions that he will be involved in public education all his life, and I think in the case of the two co-chairs, we wish them the very best in their work.

The minister would understand, having said that I believe the creation of the task force is a good step forward, none the less I would use some of my time to offer him some suggestions on some related matters.

I think the point to make is this: This is a positive step forward today. There have been others in terms of cooperation and attempts to save on costs. But in the newspaper this morning was reference to meetings the Treasurer had with a number of people about the Fair

Tax Commission and where the reform of education funding is going. We do seem to be stuck, if not in neutral, we certainly aren't moving very quickly.

We know that we had the Fair Tax Commission at a cost of some $9 million. They presented a report. Everyone would admit, from looking at it, it is complex. But I would say to the minister that this issue of funding reform is critical. We have the Royal Commission on Learning, which will be reporting at the end of this year. We will have, over the course of the next 12 months, an election, and I know that everyone is looking forward to that royal commission report.

But the other element that is needed and is necessary is, what will be the funding system that will go with that royal commission? I would suggest to the minister that we need to, if you like, break open this discussion. We were expecting this fall a white paper from the Ministry of Education on options in education funding reform.

I know there are discussions on this and people are concerned about whether to bring it forward, but I would urge the minister to bring it forward, a series of options, and suggest that the government consider having the standing committee on social development this summer, in August and September, take those options out and around the province and talk with those most involved in terms of what kind of package can be put together for real education funding reform.

Because whether we are talking about Catholic and public boards, assessment-rich or assessment-poor, or looking at the particular needs of communities such as Metropolitan Toronto, Ottawa and other large areas, there are real problems which we as legislators, I think, should be involved in and could help in bringing about a resolution, and I put that to the minister.

Mrs Dianne Cunningham (London North): I would like to stand and say that it's good to see that the Minister of Education and Training is on our agenda again. He's long overdue. This has been in print for two years and he should have acted earlier.

It says here that we should be looking at duplication between all school boards in an effort to save costs. I'd like to be somewhat specific. Some of my colleagues who have helped us with our work in looking for good, I think, information and recommendations for the minister are in the gallery here.

I'd obviously like to recognize Ann Vanstone and Elvira Demonte and say that I'm glad they're there. I'm sure they'll be wonderful watchdogs and we need more of them. The minister is very lucky to have their point of view. I would say to Mr McKeown that he should have done this when he was a director, but he's a colleague I've worked with for years as well.

We're long overdue, and this has been done in other parts of the province. For the minister, in the Kent county example—their director of education, Bill Green, and I will be speaking on this tomorrow in eastern Ontario—the Kent county public and Kent county Roman Catholic separate boards are leaders in this area. They've implemented a series of joint ventures to save the local taxpayers money, and I'm going to give the minister a list and perhaps you could take my notes later and take a look at this list.

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): They've already got the list.

Mrs Cunningham: I think if they've got it, they should have taken your advice sooner. You should be very concerned about this. My colleague the member from Chatham is advising me that Kent county gave you the list a long time ago.

One road, one bus, Mr Minister. Think about it: one transportation officer, one health and safety officer, one assessment officer, one race relations officer, combined audio-visual services, combined curriculum development, joint purchase of natural gas, joint purchasing and joint recycling, joint banking program with the public-separate boards, the city of Chatham, the county of Kent and the surrounding municipality and the two hospitals. This is giving you lots to work on.

I have to say that the minister is surely aware of the Metropolitan Toronto studies for the public boards that took place some time in January, at least the reports came out, to tell the Metro boards that if they did work together with regard to their computer services, their warehousing and their purchasing, the Metropolitan public school boards would save $55 million.

I guess what I am saying here is this should have happened a long time ago. I guess maybe it does take leadership from the province of Ontario.

Hon David S. Cooke (Minister of Education and Training): Maybe 20 years ago.

Mrs Cunningham: Maybe 20 years ago. You're absolutely right. What took you so long? I didn't get to do it.

Hon Mr Cooke: You were there.

Mrs Cunningham: I wasn't here. What took you so long?

1410

This restructuring all over the province of Ontario is necessary. If we know right now that school boards, through sharing—we've had examples in probably dozens of boards. It's not new.

I will say in closing that we do recognize the individual challenges of the Toronto school board, there's no doubt, of all the metro school boards around the province. I have to tell you that other boards say "the city of Toronto" with respect, because it has so much work to do.

I would advise them to take a look at what you're doing with education dollars in the area of health, in the area of community and social services and all those other areas that are attributed to education which should be attributed elsewhere. I wish you the best of luck. It should have been done sooner.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): I really am pleased to see this committee struck. Certainly the seriousness of it is registered in my mind by the appointment of a co-chair like Ann Vanstone. There's no doubt this kind of appointment is the kind of appointment we should be looking for as taxpayers in Metropolitan Toronto.

I will say that to the constituents whom I speak to, one of the gravest concerns they speak about is the cost of education in Metropolitan Toronto. My predecessor and our critic spoke about it. The mandate was to educate, and so far, in a lot of instances, in a lot of municipalities within Metropolitan Toronto, they've left that mandate and have gone into streams and areas that probably are no concern of theirs, that cost taxpayers in Metro significant amounts of money. If there's one aspect they should examine, it is the mandate of educating the children of Metropolitan Toronto and ensuring that they do it at a reasonable cost for the taxpayers.

I heartily endorse this. I am proud to see this is happening. People like Ann Vanstone I know will bring forward a report, if acted upon, that will only serve the taxpayers whom I'm proud to represent in Etobicoke.

ROLE OF MINISTERS WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Mr Murray J. Elston (Bruce): Mr Speaker, on a point of order: I stand to bring to your attention a ruling you made on April 22, 1993. At that time you ruled, because of the newness of the office of junior minister, that people in the opposition benches could ask questions of junior ministers when something fell into their area of expertise.

There is such a junior minister who is associated with Mr Laughren, but we have come to discover that when Mr Laughren is away, Mr Ward, his junior minister, is also coincidentally always away. The two are always away in tandem.

We want to get some understanding of how it is that when a junior minister has responsibilities here which he should answer for in the absence of his senior minister, he is always away.

It appears to us, sir, and this is my point of order, that because the government did not want its junior ministers to answer any questions, it has decided to avoid your ruling that the junior minister answer the questions by forcing the absence of that junior minister. As a result, the real question is, why are we paying these people all the money to be junior ministers if they are never to be examined in this Legislative Assembly? That is one question I'd like you to take under advisement.

Just following up on this, this is the other problem which I think is going to cause us some great concern and as a result probably reflects upon standing order 16, which as you probably know is grave disorder. We have an hour every day in question period to ask questions. I know you can't force anybody to be here, but I would like you to hear some of the statistics about how many absences have occurred for question period in this Legislative Assembly so that you'll understand that people are trying to prevent us from exercising our right to ask questions.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): To the member for Bruce, I understand the member's concern and I understand that he has some statistics which I'm sure are of interest to people. The member will know, as he has himself stated, that the Speaker does not have the power to compel the attendance in the House of any member.

That in fact is the answer to his first question. I understand his concern with respect to the ruling I had made earlier that members are able to ask questions of junior ministers, but of course, whether they are junior or senior ministers, if they are not present, you cannot ask a question of them.

I regret that I am not able to be of any assistance to the member. As I have stated in the past, if members wish to change the standing orders with respect to attendance, then of course there is a process for doing that.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My first question will be for the Minister of Housing. Minister, over the past week my colleague the member for Renfrew North has been raising a number of issues that are related to the serious mismanagement of funds for non-profit housing projects. These specific examples that have been raised by the member for Renfrew North would seem to be related to the overall concerns the Provincial Auditor has previously identified with the funding of non-profit housing programs. Minister, that's why we continue to raise these concerns.

Two days ago you said that you would release audits that were done on non-profit housing agencies. My staff called to ask for those audits. They were told that they would have to use a freedom of information request in order to obtain the audits that you had said you would release publicly. Today I read that you are planning to release the audits in a few days, but a few days have already passed.

Minister, I ask you to tell us today exactly what audits you are prepared to release publicly, and will you table those audits in the House today?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): When I said that the audits will be released, the audits will be released. We have decided at the Ministry of Housing to treat the question raised by the Liberal caucus of the request for the audits as a formal request, and what we have provided, as I understand it, is the form so that the official request can be made for which audit you would like. If you want each audit, that's fine.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: I would like to explain the reason for doing this.

The Leader of the Opposition will be aware that the government has obligations under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Each of those audits is being reviewed by the information coordinator but also our legal staff to make sure there are no releases of private information which should not be released. The process is quite straightforward. We will not take time to do this. As soon as the clearance is done—

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —legally, we will make the audit reports available directly to members of the Liberal caucus, treating their request as a formal request though it was not made that way.

Mrs McLeod: I obviously misunderstood the minister's words when she said she was going to release the audits publicly. I understood that to mean they would be released by the minister in the name of public and open accountability, that we would not have to request those through a freedom of information request. So the question still stands: What audits? When will they be tabled and released publicly?

The concerns about the misuse of these funds, the funds for non-profit housing, are continuing to mount. In the past week alone we have learned of at least $29 million in projects that have been written off, projects that you have abandoned. Three of those four projects were Supportive Housing Coalition projects.

Minister, you will recall that my colleague the member for Renfrew North has asked you twice now whether the Supportive Housing Coalition continued to receive new allocations after an internal audit identified that there were problems with the coalition and warned you not to give them any more allocations until the problems were cleared up. I will ask you that question again: Did the Supportive Housing Coalition receive new allocations after the March 1992 audit?

Hon Ms Gigantes: To the first point raised by the Leader of the Opposition, she will know perfectly well that it would not be legal to release information of this nature without assuring ourselves within the Ministry of Housing that we were meeting the legal obligations under the freedom of information and protection of personal privacy legislation of this province.

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (York Centre): You just said you had a new policy the other day. You just said completely the opposite. How often does the policy change?

The Speaker: The member for York Centre, please come to order.

Hon Ms Gigantes: Mr Speaker, I could remind her that I personally am very sensitive on this matter, having, as you know, had to resign once for having made a mistake in this matter. But let me assure her that the release of the information will be extremely prompt.

On the second question, the Supportive Housing Coalition continues to have allocations which were allocated under the previous government, the Liberal administration, back in the late 1980s. It has no new allocations. They are not part of the same program as they were back in the late 1980s, but they are continuations of allocations which were made. There were no new allocations made to the Supportive Housing Coalition during the period during which the audit review was undertaken, nor have any been undertaken to this point in time.

Mrs McLeod: Minister, the fact is that you did continue to fund the Supportive Housing Coalition at what might be seen to be extremely high levels. Our understanding is that in 1992-93, the Supportive Housing Coalition received $7.9 million and that this was $1.5 million more than they had received the year before. I remind you, that was in 1992-1993. That was after the audit was done. It was after you knew there were indeed serious problems with the coalition.

The Supportive Housing Coalition receives one of the largest of the allocations to non-profit programs, and that is the same coalition for which you have written off projects totalling more than $16 million.

Minister, I ask, why did you continue to fund the Supportive Housing Coalition at these very high levels when you knew there were serious problems and when your own auditors told you not to?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The leader of the opposition is misreading the audit. What was indicated by the audit was that matters between the Ministry of Housing and the Supportive Housing Coalition needed to be straightened out in a very serious way. That has been done, and the Ministry of Housing felt assured that the capability of that organization to carry forward its contractual obligations had been established. Repayments were in full by mid-1992. But aside from that, there have been no new allocations, though indeed, if she reads the report carefully, she'll see that it was not recommended that we drop any contact with the Supportive Housing Coalition.

She will know, as members in this Legislature know, that the Supportive Housing Coalition has provided non-profit community-based housing programs for people who most desperately need them in the Metropolitan Toronto area over the last many years. This group has provided excellent service—

The Speaker: Could the minister conclude her response, please.

Hon Ms Gigantes: —not just to the individuals to whom it provides direct service, but to the community in this area on the whole.

The Speaker: New question.

Mrs McLeod: The minister tries to avoid the questions about mismanagement of the funds by seeming to suggest we're opposed to the program. The program of course is important. That's exactly why we believe there should be value for every dollar that goes into that program.

The Speaker: Could the leader place her second question, please.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE COLLEGE

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Leader of the Opposition): My second question is to the Premier. I have here an article from Northern Life which refers to the site selection process for the francophone college in the Sudbury region.

According to this article, the Minister of Finance made a direct representation to the board of the francophone college that was hearing the proposals for that site selection. The Finance minister apparently intervened on behalf of the proposal which would bring the college site to his own riding.

Premier, I ask whether or not you're aware of this, and, if so, whether you have discussed this with the Minister of Finance.

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I'll have to take that question as notice. I haven't seen any reference to it before, and I'll obviously ask the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Education and Training to answer that question.

Mrs McLeod: Premier, I will certainly make you aware of the article which I have so that you can pursue it. I raise the question today in part, and in large part, because I am extremely concerned about the way in which the selection of the site for the college has been prejudiced by the intervention of the minister. It becomes an urgent matter because the decision about the site selection is to be made very shortly.

You will understand that the other developers who made proposals are extremely upset about the intervention. Some spent as much as $250,000 in development costs, only to find that the Finance minister himself was part of a competing proposal.

According to the article, the other developers had absolutely no idea that the Finance minister was going to make a presentation in support of the site in his own riding and the other developers clearly now believe that the entire process is a political one and has been a sham. It is also quite clear that the college board, which now has to make its decision, has been placed in a very awkward position.

Premier, I would ask how you can now ensure that the decision on the site for this francophone college will not be influenced by the Finance minister's intervention.

Hon Mr Rae: I wonder if the honourable member would perhaps allow me to reflect on her questions, and as well give the Minister of Finance a chance to respond, since you'll appreciate that when I give off-the-cuff answers they're usually not very helpful.

Mrs McLeod: I do appreciate that and I will give the Premier that opportunity. As I indicated, I believe it is a matter important for us to raise and also important for us to raise at this time because of the pending decision about the site selection and the obvious importance in making sure that the Finance minister's intervention has not jeopardized that.

I would also like to draw to the Premier's attention, as he considers this issue, another cause for concern for us in that, again, according to the article, the constituency assistant to the Minister of Finance indicated, in defence of the Finance minister's appearance, that he spoke only as an MPP and not as a minister of the government.

I would remind the Premier that this is a road we have been down before, that we have a letter on record from the conflict commissioner that was written in June 1991 in which he says very clearly that a minister is not an ordinary member of the Legislature, that a minister always wears a cloak of ministerial responsibility; a minister is a minister is a minister.

Premier, in this instance, the province is contributing $43 million to the francophone college and it is clearly inappropriate for the Minister of Finance to be directly involved in the site selection process. The argument that he is acting on behalf of his constituents as a representative of the constituency is simply not to be considered a defence.

Premier, I would ask, as you consider this matter, since we have been down this road before, when will you make it absolutely clear to your ministers, including the most senior, what is and is not appropriate behaviour for a minister of the crown?

Hon Mr Rae: Again, I would like to have a chance to hear exactly what happened and then perhaps I can respond next week.

ASSISTED HOUSING

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): My question is to the Minister of Housing on the loans she recently wrote off for several housing projects. It is my understanding that one of the properties in the list of $29 million in write-offs was at 50 Bronoco Avenue in the city of York. The property was apparently purchased for $6 million in 1988-89 under the Liberal government. Minister, can you tell me specifically what led to the costs of this project being so high that your government would cancel it and write off the $13-million loan?

Hon Evelyn Gigantes (Minister of Housing): The site itself is an old industrial site. I don't know if she is familiar with it. It was a site which was proposed for a joint project involving two community-based groups, and it was a site which had not only problems environmentally outside the site but which had an existing building and still has an existing building on it which had the potential to have environmental problems in and of itself.

The fact that it had not been developed, that the location was one which caused it to be brought before the OMB, that the delay was prolonged because of the questions around the environment, both external and internal, led to the continuous mounting of interest costs to the point when, last December, I decided it should be cancelled as a project site.

Mrs Marland: It is my understanding that one of the reasons the costs became so high at the Bronoco Avenue site is because no soil tests were done on the property prior to your government guaranteeing the loan. Subsequently, the site proved to be contaminated and cleanup was required. It is standard commercial banking practice that a soil test should be a prerequisite of guaranteeing a property loan. Minister, is it true that the province guaranteed a loan for this property without ensuring that the land was free of contamination, and if so, were you or the Liberals responsible?

Hon Ms Gigantes: To speak first to the problem of environmental examination of land that is proposed for a non-profit housing development, this has been a great problem in the past. Certainly, during the period of the late 1980s, when it was very difficult for private developers and for non-profit developers to locate sites for housing developments and costs were high, there was a lot of pressure, both for private developers and non-profit developers, to look at sites that were old industrial sites and where there were environmental questions still unanswered before the sites were acquired.

We have changed that process. In the Jobs Ontario Homes program, groups are not given guarantees for purchase of land until there has been environmental testing of the site, and we will not allow groups to take on responsibility for a site until that process assures us that there are not going to be major environmental costs associated with development.

In fact, the member for Mississauga South started out her question by saying, "Your government guaranteed the purchase of this site." That was inaccurate. She knows that. It was a purchase which was originally guaranteed by the previous Liberal government. We continued to extend that guarantee in the hopes that it was going to be a site which could be developed. It is certainly the policy of this government to examine very carefully where development of old industrial land and infill projects can better the development of cities in this province.

Mrs Marland: Minister, this Bronoco project is starting to sound a little too much like Ataratiri. It is my understanding that the purchase of the Bronoco Avenue site was negotiated by Green and Nogue Associates Ltd. Minister, this development consultant is associated with at least seven completed housing projects funded by your ministry. Is it true that Green and Nogue was the development consultant for all of the four housing projects you recently wrote off loans for, and if so, why are you continuing to fund projects with which it is involved?

Hon Ms Gigantes: The decision to write off four projects in December was not in any way associated with who may have been involved, either as a sponsoring group or as a development consultant. The decisions I made in December were decisions that were based on the business case of each site.

We looked at the environmental questions still associated, the continuing planning questions still associated with these sites, and the total environment; in other words, the access to community benefits for people who would be future tenants if these sites were developed. The decisions that were made were made solely on that basis. In fact, I do not know who the development consultants were, nor was it a question in my mind when I made a decision.

There are many development consultants who are professionals in their field. They have an association of professional development consultants to try and maintain high standards for the profession. Because one firm, and it is a private firm, gets many pieces of business, that does not mean there is anything wrong with that at all, and she shouldn't suggest so.

TENDERING PROCESS

Mr Jim Wilson (Simcoe West): My question is to the Chair of Management Board. Minister, on January 7, 1994, Management Board issued a tender for an integrated voice response system to be used in several ministries but primarily to be used in the Ministry of Health. The closing date for the tender was January 24, 1994, and only two firms bid on the tender. They were Bryker Data Systems and Bell Canada.

Minister, so you'll know, the voice response system would allow a doctor to pick up the phone and check to see if a health card is valid. Currently, there is no system in place that can handle the volume of calls that come from doctors and hospitals needing this sort of health card verification system.

The tender was cancelled on April 15, 1994. Could you explain to this House why the tender was cancelled and how much money was spent on the tender process?

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Chair of the Management Board of Cabinet): I can't answer the second part of the member's question in terms of the actual costs that were spent on the tender process to date, but I can certainly get the member that information.

The tender essentially was cancelled for two reasons: first, because there was a potential conflict of interest with regard to an employee involved in the process, and second, because of a changed set of requirements; specifically in this case, the Ministry of Health, having had the opportunity to review the bids that were submitted by the two companies in question, it became clear that the tender needed to be expanded in order to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended.

Mr Jim Wilson: The minister is correct that the tender was pulled on April 15, because the director in the Management Board who was handling this file, this tendering process, a Mr Terry Ham, actually moved from Management Board and accepted an employment position with one of the two bidding firms. Your assistant deputy minister, David Girvin, has confirmed that the tender was pulled and that the primary reason was the conflict of interest resulting from Terry Ham's leaving, as you've confirmed also.

Since there's cost involved in a tender process, and since security of information is extremely important in a tender process, not to mention the test of fairness in a tender process, what guidelines does your government have in place to prevent civil servants from accepting employment with companies bidding on government contracts?

Hon Mr Charlton: The member has raised the issue which I responded to in my first answer, and I'm not sure what the member wishes to pursue. The government has a system in place that deals with conflict of interest. We identified a problem. We dealt with the problem. He seems to be chasing something that's already been dealt with.

Although we had identified a problem with the conflict of interest question and were prepared to deal with it, the tender was not cancelled until such time as it became clear that there was good and sound reason, based on the intent of the tender in the first place, to cancel the tender and re-tender based on the needs of the client that we were attempting to serve, namely, the Ministry of Health.

Mr Jim Wilson: It's very interesting. The minister talks about the guidelines he has in place. I have a copy of those guidelines, and let me take just a moment to explain what those guidelines say. It's a regulation under the civil service act. Minister, you only have guidelines in place to prevent this potential conflict of interest in cases where the public servant is still on the public servant payroll and may take an outside job. He or she must declare that conflict to the deputy minister or the assistant deputy minister or other officials within the ministry. Then there's a set of rules on how they deal with that conflict when it comes to their attention.

We're talking of a case of Terry Ham leaving the employment of the government of Ontario and taking a position with one of the companies that had tendered on this contract. When I was a federal assistant to a cabinet minister, I and cabinet ministers were required to refrain, upon leaving our government jobs, from doing any business with companies for one full year after our leaving the employment of the federal government.

The House will also be interested to know that Terry Ham oversaw two other tenders that the company he now works for won from the government. Minister, what steps are you taking to review the tenders Terry Ham was involved in prior to his leaving Management Board, and what are you doing to ensure that this sort of conflict doesn't happen again?

Hon Mr Charlton: There are two things inherent in the member's question: first, a belief that somehow conflict of interest can be prevented, and therefore we wouldn't need conflict-of-interest rules. Conflicts of interest are going to arise from time to time; that's why we have policy to deal with conflict of interest. The member should note, in his pursuit of this matter, that he's pursuing a matter the government dealt with, and dealt with effectively, three months ago.

GAMBLING

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a question for the Premier. Would the Premier tell us what his itinerary is today?

Hon Bob Rae (Premier): I have a series of meetings in my office after question period. I have a couple of press interviews, one with a Spanish newspaper. I am meeting with a variety of people. I think I was able to advise my wife this morning that I'll be home for supper. Then I would suspect that at about 7:30 or thereabouts I would be seated in front of the television set, where I will be rooting—and I know the honourable member will as well, though his loyalties are divided, I understand, since he got home late last night from Memorial Stadium in Buffalo—unashamedly and unabashedly for the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Mr Bradley: Now that I have established that the Premier has to answer this question, I have a supplementary for him. I hate to impose upon the Premier and his itinerary, but I do have a supplementary question. Premier, your government and indeed many governments across the country and across North America are moving quickly and massively into the field of gambling, into various gambling enterprises, everything from widespread offtrack betting to casino gambling. In other provinces they've moved to what are called video lottery terminals.

This is a matter about which I am profoundly personally worried and have expressed that on many occasions in this House. Premier, are you not deeply concerned about the terrible impact this gambling mania is having on vulnerable people in our society throughout North America, not just here in Ontario, on the poor and on the desperate and on those who are addicted to gambling? If so, what are you going to do about that?

Hon Mr Rae: First of all, I want to congratulate the honourable member for his logistical ingenuity. I've had many reasons to admire him over the years, and he's added one more category.

I'd make a couple of points to the honourable member. The first one is that I don't see any gambling mania in this province. I think if you look back over the history of Ontario, you'll realize that horse racing has been a sport on which people have spent money, invested money and gambled, a sport of chance, if you like, on which people have bet in this province for generations. There was a time when there were very strong views expressed from all sorts of quarters about whether this should be allowed or permitted. I can say to the honourable member that that's been a part of our life.

Bingos and charitable lotteries and charitable gaming of different kinds have been part of the life of the community. They've been part of many churches. They've been part of much of what's gone on in the province for a long time. It was not invented a few years ago.

Finally, I would say that the expansion of the lottery business in the province and across the country has again been a fact. We're now looking at an addition to that, and that is the provision of the casino in Windsor, which is the one new innovation.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Would the Premier conclude his response, please.

Hon Mr Rae: One point I would say very directly to the honourable member is the issue of addiction and the question of psychological dependence on gaming and gambling. I can say to the honourable member that we've discussed this around the cabinet table on a number of occasions, and we have made a very firm policy decision—

The Speaker: Would the Premier please conclude his response.

Hon Mr Rae: —that a real effort will be made to ensure that there are sufficient funds available to deal with those people and to help those people who have a serious problem with addiction. But there are a lot of people who enjoy gaming from time to time and who enjoy betting from time to time—

The Speaker: Premier. New question.

FAMILY SUPPORT PAYMENTS

Mr Michael D. Harris (Nipissing): My question is to the Attorney General regarding family support payments in Ontario. According to your ministry's own numbers, Attorney General, there were 125,359 cases of family support in this province. As of February 1994, of these, less than 25%, one quarter, are in full compliance. Over 75% of all individuals who pay support in Ontario are in arrears. In fact, in one half of the cases, there is no money flowing at all. Minister, given that you have a $24-million bureaucracy designed to ensure that families receive support payments, can you explain why so many are not?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): Well, yes. It's quite clear to all of us that part of the problem is that those—what?—125,399 cases accumulated over a great many years prior to March 1992, when there were very weak mechanisms, certainly under the previous Conservative government, much improved under the previous Liberal government, and then finally improved by at-source deductions through our current family support plan, that enabled the accumulation over a period of more than 20 years of arrears of support payments.

The member is right that indeed there are still large amounts of money that are outstanding, that are owed to individual women and children, in most cases, occasionally to some men who have custody of their children. But that whole situation is one we are beginning to turn around.

We now have full compliance in 49% of the cases where there is automatic wage deduction and some payments in at least 65% of the cases that have been registered since March 1992, which is a vast improvement over the situation that was there previously. We are making strong efforts all the time to ensure that the outstanding amounts are collected, whether they are owed to the government because of the assignment of social assistance benefits or whether they are owed to individuals.

I think it's important for the member to acknowledge that since March 1992, our amounts have more than doubled per month, from about $14 million per month, which was the average early on in our term, to over $28 million a month now. That is a vast improvement. We are not resting on our laurels; we are improving the system every day.

Mr Harris: The fact of the matter is that your stats that you quote on the system look better because all the payors who pay anyway without the legislation are the ones who are making your stats look good. But every member of this Legislature will tell you, from their constituency office, that there are more backlogs, that there are more problems with this program. I think all members of the Legislature would agree that ensuring that children receive adequate support should be a priority for all of us. We need to look at ways to ensure that more support orders are complied with.

Three years ago when we were dealing with the legislation, our critic introduced an amendment to allow individuals who are not in arrears to opt out of the system, or not clutter it up in the first place. I understand that if that took place, it wouldn't make your stats look as good. Would you agree with me that if you would bring forward this amendment now and instead of worrying about your stats, worry about the children who are not getting the support payments, and for the ones that take place anyway, remove them from the system, we could have more of the resources to work on the 50% who aren't paying at all and the 25% of that other 50% who aren't in full compliance? Will you agree now to bring forward that commonsense amendment?

Hon Mrs Boyd: No, I certainly won't, and I don't know on what grounds the member makes his suggestion that the people who comply are people who would have complied anyway. That's just absolute nonsense. We have a vast improvement in our compliance rate. Quite frankly, we hear from the payors and many of those payors are quite, quite willing to admit that if there were not a deduction at source, they would not be paying.

We need to be very clear that the kind of simplistic suggestion the member makes is not very helpful. It is true that it is very hard when the number of cases grows at about 1,200 cases per month. We are committed to trying to maintain a lean system—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Order, the member for Willowdale.

Hon Mrs Boyd: —to try and improve the efficiency of that system all the time, and we are doing it. We have just introduced the payment, both from employers—

Interjection.

The Speaker: The member for Willowdale, please come to order.

Hon Mrs Boyd: —to the plan and from the plan, to payees of automatic deposits. That in and of itself is a huge improvement in efficiency and will certainly help us to streamline the system.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC RESTRICTIONS

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I raise an issue today with the Minister of Transportation that's been at my desk for, oh, some three or four years now. It seems to come up at this time of year. The well drillers of Ontario have a concern that they're not able to travel and do the work they do so well because of some of the restrictions by the Highway Traffic Act. So today I'm asking you on their behalf, will you allow water drilling rigs to be exempted from the reduced-load period as an essential service under the Highway Traffic Act?

Hon Gilles Pouliot (Minister of Transportation): The question is timely by virtue of highways being most vulnerable during springtime, during thaw-out season. As a policy, we have a load restriction. That's been a perennial, a residual. It's been with us each and every year for some time. By way of an exemption or by way of special consideration, if your rig does not surpass 10,000 pounds or thereabouts, 5,000 kilograms—we have received no permit and yet the association is much aware of it. We're awaiting special-case, and special-case only, applications only for highways, for jurisdictional capacity within the boundaries of municipalities rests with the township council.

Mr Martin: That's fine, but the well drillers are telling me they have a problem here and that the work they do so well and that's so required, so essential at this time of year, they're not able to do in the way they would like. The exemption that you make, the opportunity that you give them, as far as they're concerned is not being helpful.

Even to go beyond that, yes, there's this possibility of asking for exemption under the Ontario Highway Traffic Act, but they're not covered under some of the municipal acts, so there's a whole bureaucratic maze that they have to go through. They're tired of having to continually bring this forward. They want an answer. They want to know what you're doing now on their behalf.

When can they expect that you will recognize that they have a very legitimate concern here, as do the people they serve? To the minister, what am I to tell them when they call me on Monday about this issue again?

Hon Mr Pouliot: With respect to my distinguished and beloved colleague, here is what you are about to tell them: that you have lobbied as hard as you possibly could, that you have personally brought this very important matter to the ear of the minister, that the minister has listened intently, that his hands are tied by common sense and therefore by legislation.

Here is what you do for a solution: In lieu of one heavy load, you make two or more smaller loads and then you begin to understand that it's all possible, or you wait for one week, two weeks, three weeks at most; then the spring season is something of yesterday, and you can look to the summer and the fall and the winter for confidence. We want to wish them well. There shall be no exemption. I am not permitted to do so.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr Steven W. Mahoney (Mississauga West): I have a question to the Minister of Labour. On this day when we mourn injured workers, I want to share some information with you and ask you a question.

I have a book here, entitled Facts and Figures 1992-93, put out by the Ministry of Labour. In that book, it shows that from 1989-90 until 1992-93, critical work injuries have gone from 466 to 602, an increase of 29%. Occupational diseases have gone from 56 to 103 in that same time period, an increase of 84%. Yet the number of inspectors from 1988-89 to 1992-93 has gone from 313 to 279. Inspections are down almost 40,000 in that same time period or 40%; the number of orders issued is down 50,000 or 32%; the number of stop-work orders down by almost 3,000 or 42%.

The fact is that these cutbacks would show your ministry is putting less and less emphasis on trying to help injured workers. How do you reconcile these statistics in your ministry's book with the statements you make about helping injured workers?

Hon Bob Mackenzie (Minister of Labour): I thought the member across the way, with his knowledge of the health and safety field, would understand that with Bill 208 and the effort to put in place joint committees—one management, one labour, in most cases—that has meant we've had more responsibility in the workplace and more effective enforcement of the legislation. We have also been very specific in taking high-profile cases to point out that there is a penalty you'll pay if you do not achieve a healthier and safer workplace, and there has been some success in that area.

Mr Mahoney: I wish I could accept that answer as being legitimate. The facts would seem to indicate totally the opposite is the case. The facts would seem to indicate that any attempts you're making through the Workplace Health and Safety Agency are failing to reduce accidents: inspectors down 11%; inspections down 40%; orders down 32%; stop-work orders down 42%; number of cases prosecuted—very important here, Minister—down 69% in that same time period, and yet the facts in your own document—not something I've made up—from your ministry show that just in 1992-93 we have skyrocketed with critical injuries in Ontario 45% over 1991-92; reported occupational illness and diseases increased by an incredible 85%.

Minister, the words don't match the music. What you're telling us is not a reality in the workplace. You stand there today, and I believe that you personally want to believe this, and say that you want to do more for injured workers. Your ministry is doing less. The facts have been published by your own people. Will you make a commitment to take a look at these statistics and do something to help injured workers in this province?

Hon Mr Mackenzie: One of the things I've never stopped doing, and I get the reports on a monthly basis, is looking at the figures in terms of injured workers and what our record is, and our record has been improving.

I'm surprised the member doesn't recall his own party's arguments that internal responsibility is one of the things that should be the keynote for health and safety in the workplace.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

Mr Ernie L. Eves (Parry Sound): I have a question for the Minister of Health. The Parry Sound district municipal association this past Monday held its spring meeting, and one of the major topics of deliberation at the meeting was health care services in east Parry Sound, particularly urgent and emergency care. What are you and your ministry doing to provide and improve these services in east Parry Sound?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): I'm afraid I can't speak precisely to the situation in east Parry Sound, but I can assure the member that the improvement and the better coordination and the better management of emergency services, if he's speaking about the transportation services and the ambulance services, has been very much part of the work of my ministry.

With respect to the situation in emergency rooms, which we know is a problem in some parts of rural and northern Ontario, we have been attempting, with the Ontario Hospital Association which has been extremely constructive and helpful in our discussions, and with the Ontario Medical Association, to come to some long-term solution to what has been a very long-time problem.

Mr Eves: When the Burk's Falls hospital was closed in 1992, the former Minister of Health, the Honourable Frances Lankin, promised that the new health care centre would have "the capacity for resuscitation, stabilization and preparation for transportation to an advanced care centre."

The Almaguin health centre cannot at present dispense these services because, among other shortcomings, your ministry provides funding for only one physician.

I read in the Almaguin News just yesterday that ambulance services in east Parry Sound, which are somewhat less than perfect at the best of times, will now suffer even further reductions due to discussions between the Ministry of Health and the Huntsville hospital.

What are you, as minister, prepared to do to ensure that residents of east Parry Sound have local access to these essential health care services and to deliver on the promises made by your predecessor?

Hon Mrs Grier: I'm certainly aware, because the member for Muskoka has been talking to me about the Almaguin health centre, of the fact that it has been developing its plans and deciding on the functions that it can perform and looking as to how it can meet the needs of the residents of east Parry Sound. I'd be very glad to hear from the member or, certainly, to ask my ministry about the details of where precisely the plans are at this point and get back to the member.

FAMILY SUPPORT PAYMENTS

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): My question is to the Attorney General. Minister, we know that the family support plan has the responsibility of enforcing the payment of child support in this province and we know that it certainly has problems. One of the enforcement measures used is the garnishment of federal government transfers to individuals such as income tax funds, GST rebates and interest earned on Canada savings bonds.

I have been approached by several people, some of my constituents, who are recipients and payors through this family support plan. These constituents have raised a very serious issue about the delay that exists when funds are garnisheed from federal UIC cheques, from that time to when they are paid to the recipient. Why is there a delay of eight to 12 weeks between the time the funds are garnisheed and the time that the recipient receives these funds?

Hon Marion Boyd (Attorney General): I thank the member for the question. She is quite right that the average length of time on federal garnishments is about eight to 12 weeks, and there are two basic reasons for the delay.

The first is, as we all know, that there is a delay in the actual processing of unemployment insurance benefit applications by the federal government. Members who have constituents on unemployment insurance will know that process, in and of itself, often takes six to eight weeks.

The second reason is the time it takes for the garnishment application made by the province to be processed by the federal government. It's a fairly complicated process. It involves the province applying to the federal government department, and then the Justice department working with that particular department to have the garnishment enacted. Once the garnishment is made, the funds are then transferred to the Justice department, which then forwards them to the family support plan. So that's a fairly complex process.

Once the FSP receives the funds, they are sent to the recipient within two working days, but the length of time it is taking us to get those dollars from the federal government is quite a serious concern to us.

Ms Harrington: I'm also concerned about what measures you are taking on behalf of myself and our constituents here right across the province of Ontario to force the federal level to find a better and a faster way—there must be one—to process the federal garnishment and to pay these court-ordered child support payments.

Hon Mrs Boyd: I guess it's problematic for one level of government to be able to force any other level of government to do anything. However, what we can do is to work very hard with our federal counterparts to ensure that those payments are being made in a timely way.

The staff from Ontario's family support plan and from all the other provinces, because we're working together on this, meet with the federal government, and our discussions provide an opportunity to review the process and to try and work cooperatively to eliminate some of the delays that exist both between provinces and between provinces and the federal government.

Most of the delays are experienced by payors who receive UI benefits, and they deal with the federal procedures with which we all try to cope. I can tell the member that the Ontario government continues to pressure the federal Liberal government to make changes that will reduce delays.

I can also tell the member that in terms of the FSP, we have made several improvements to the way in which we do collections and payments, the direct deposit option that I spoke about earlier, and some improved access to the inquiry line, but we continue to look at ways in which we can improve, and frankly, we appreciate the help that we get from members of this Legislature who often point out different problems that exist in their own ridings and give us some suggestions as to how those problems could be resolved.

NORTHERN HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): My question is to the Minister of Health. This past Friday, I met with a number of physicians from my riding, and I must say that they are extremely concerned about the lack of doctors for a very busy tourist season that will soon be upon us in the area of the northwest.

Madam Minister, I was told that last year the town of Kenora, for example, was able to attract eight temporary summer physicians to serve the medical needs of the area residents. This year, despite the efforts of both the administration and the Kenora medical community, they are unable to confirm even one doctor for this very busy tourist season.

As you might be aware, the population in the town of Kenora will quadruple in the summer months, and I would like to know what steps you have taken to ensure that the basic medical services are available in the northwest area of this province for this upcoming summer?

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): First of all, let me say to the member that the issue of how to make sure we have the doctors that we need in the parts of the province that we need them is one that has baffled governments for several years. It is not a new one and I profoundly regret that we don't have a better way of making sure that we have the professionals we need throughout the health system where we need them when we need them.

That is precisely why, for the first time, we now have the Ministry of Health, under our government, working with the Ontario Medical Association on a human resource strategy, and with the academic health science centres that are proving to be extremely helpful both in the way in which they train undergraduates in providing opportunities for them to practise in other than urban areas, and so acclimatizing themselves to rural practice, and in helping us work up a better system of providing locums where they are needed.

There is no simple answer, and I don't have the power to order a doctor to practise anywhere in this province that a doctor decides they don't want to practise.

Mr Miclash: Given the fact, again I remind you, that you have the ultimate responsibility for the health care needs of all of this province, for my constituents, for your constituents, for constituents across the province, and being that you were unable to attract the doctors that you actually said you were going to for the emergency needs of the community of Red Lake, I must ask you again, what plans do you, as the Minister of Health responsible for these services, have in place for the residents of places such as Kenora, Red Lake and the many other communities throughout the north where they do not have adequate medical services what they are saying they will not have for this upcoming tourist season.

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): With respect to Red Lake, as the member knows because as soon as I received the report I sent it over to him, the College of Physicians and Surgeons at my request sent two people to Red Lake to examine the state of medical services and to report to me on whether in fact the contingency plan the hospital had put in place was effective.

I was very relieved, as I'm sure was the member and his constituents, that their report was reassuring. It indicated that there was certainly a risk that people would have to wait longer because a nurse in the emergency room might have to make three phone calls instead of the one phone call they normally have to make in an emergency, but that the hospital, as is its responsibility, had put in place a contingency plan and that that contingency plan was working.

I expect every hospital to have a contingency plan if they are unable to find doctors who wish to locate in their communities, and I think you will find that certainly over this summer, if it is more difficult to find doctors than it has been in other holiday seasons, hospitals will respond creatively and constructively, as they have in Red Lake.

VITAL SERVICES FOR TENANTS

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Last fall, you may recall that I introduced a private member's bill, Bill 104, whose purpose was to allow local municipalities to pass vital-service bylaws so that vital services such as gas and electricity and water could be provided to tenants when landlords fail to provide them.

During committee hearings on Bill 95, tenants' groups and government members supported the concept of province-wide legislation. My question to you, Minister, is, will you take over Bill 104 and make vital services for tenants a government priority for this session?

Hon Ed Philip (Minister of Municipal Affairs): That is one of the issues we are looking at in the whole procedure of reviewing what should go into what is being called the Sewell reform packages. Whether we do that as part of the Sewell reform package or by moving ahead your bill or a separate bill will be a government decision, but we take the issue quite seriously.

Mr Turnbull: At the time that I asked you last time you suggested that broad consultation needed to occur. It has occurred. During the forum on Bill 95, we had consultation. We had presentations for province-wide legislation from the Ontario Association of Property Standards Officers; we've got support from the Toronto Area Property Standards Officers association; we've got support from AMO, which wrote in a written submission to Bill 95 hearings, "This magnitude of support should be sufficient to warrant general legislation."

I'd like to just quote briefly from the East York Tenants' Association. They said in a letter: "Mr Turnbull's Bill 104 is very well written and the work has been done. It could go through the House very quickly with little or no opposition."

Minister, your members supported my amendments to make it province-wide legislation, but the fact was, for technical reasons, amendments couldn't be made to a private member's bill. The bill is already drafted. If you wanted to move forward, based upon your own words that if there was province-wide support, which there obviously is—

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Could the member place his question, please.

Mr Turnbull: —you could introduce this legislation quickly. Will you either commit today to bring forward my legislation or, alternatively, will you urgently bring forward a bill based upon that as quickly as possible?

Hon Mr Philip: I agree that the tenant groups have supported his bill. In fact, if the honourable member cares to go into the archives of this Legislature, he'll find that I introduced a similar bill to his in 1977. I couldn't convince the then Conservative government to adopt the ideas. I certainly am much more open to adopting my own ideas and his ideas, which are similar, right now. We will move as soon as we can to deal with the problem, and I give him that assurance.

SPORT AND RECREATION FUNDING

Mr Donald Abel (Wentworth North): My question is to the Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation. Many Ontarians are extremely concerned about the state of recreation funding in this province. Provincial sport and recreation organizations provide leadership and resources to the recreation community. However, you have decided to cut provincial funding substantially, I believe in some cases as much as 24%.

This has had impacts in terms of leadership development and travel for our young athletes, and I'm worried that the less fortunate children in Ontario are being especially affected. The value of recreation cannot be overstated. Some of my constituents are telling me they feel the entire sport and recreation system is at risk. Minister, how can you justify these cuts?

Hon Anne Swarbrick (Minister of Culture, Tourism and Recreation): I want to begin by thanking the member for his question, which recognizes very clearly the multifaceted value of recreation to this province, and to point out that in fact this government has a very strong commitment to the value of recreation, which is why we were not asked to cut that funding any more than we had to cut funding in any other area.

In fact, when we were grappling with the extent of the deficit reduction we were trying to achieve last year, my ministry staff thought they had to recommend a much tougher cut to the provincial sport organizations and provincial recreation organizations than I thought our government could tolerate. Our government therefore quite strongly protected that funding as much as we possibly could.

The reality is that of course everybody has had to be able to look at how we can do more with less these days. I'm delighted with the fact that the provincial sport organizations and the provincial recreation organizations have also become increasingly creative about how to work with this government in being able to do exactly that, being able to do more with less on behalf of the youth and the adults of this province.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The time for oral questions has expired. Motions.

WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Mrs Barbara Sullivan (Halton Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I rise on a point of order under section 97(d) of our standing orders, which requires that when written questions are placed on the order paper, the minister to whom those questions are placed will respond in 14 days.

I have a number of questions on the order paper. They are singularly important public issues; they are not frivolous questions. Question 483 was due April 5, there has been no response; question 484 was due April 5, there has been no response; 485, due April 5, no response; 486, due April 5, no response.

Question 487, I've had an indication from the Minister of Health that a final response would be available on April 22. That has not come. Question 491, with respect to draft regulations under Bill 101, was due on April 20; I've had no response. Question 502 was due April 26, no response; question 512, due April 26, no response; question 515, due April 26, no response.

These are not questions for which an enormous amount of research is required. They're very factual questions for which we require answers from the minister. We have received an indication from the minister that on some singularly simple requirements, responses can't come until the end of May. Question 505, by example, which asks the minister to document the shortfall in receipts from long-term care residents, has not been answered.

The minister clearly knows, because that's part of her estimates for next year. We want these answers, and I hope you will note that the minister is in fact in breach of the rules of order of the House.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): The member for Halton Centre has a point of order. Perhaps she could indicate whether or not all of the questions which she has identified are to the same minister and, if so, to which minister.

Mrs Sullivan: The questions for which I'm awaiting a response have all been directed to the Minister of Health. I have received responses from the Minister of Citizenship on one or two questions which have been posed.

The Speaker: The member has correctly brought this to the attention of the House, and we will trust that the responses will be forthcoming.

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): Mr Speaker, I have a petition.

The Speaker: Petitions. The member for Cornwall.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): Mr Speaker, you had called for motions, and this member had been up for a point of order.

The Speaker: I apologize. I didn't notice that there was a motion available.

1520

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): I move that the following substitutions be made to the membership of the standing committees:

The standing committee on regulations and private bills: Mr Hodgson for Mr Johnson (Don Mills).

The standing committee on finance and economic affairs: Mr Johnson (Don Mills) for Mr Cousens.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

PETITIONS

CANCER TREATMENT

Mr John C. Cleary (Cornwall): I have a petition signed by 12 constituents of Cornwall and eastern Ontario and it reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, do hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the Legislative Assembly urge the Minister of Health to respond forthwith to the issue raised in the Liberal task force on cancer care, including the urgent need for radiation equipment, addressing shortages in training personnel and providing adequate information and non-medical services for patients."

I've also signed the petition.

JUNIOR KINDERGARTEN

Mr Ted Arnott (Wellington): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it reads as follows:

"Whereas the previous provincial Liberal government of David Peterson announced its intention in its budget of 1989 of requiring all school boards to provide junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the provincial NDP government is continuing the Liberal policy of requiring school boards in Ontario to phase in junior kindergarten; and

"Whereas the government is downloading expensive programs like junior kindergarten on to local school boards while not providing boards with the funding required to undertake these programs; and

"Whereas the Wellington County Board of Education estimates that the operating cost of junior kindergarten will be at least $4.5 million per year; and

"Whereas mandatory junior kindergarten programs will force boards to cut other important programs or raise taxes; and

"Whereas taxes in Ontario are already far too high;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We demand that the government of Ontario cancel its policy of forcing junior kindergarten on to local school boards."

I support this petition.

CASINO GAMBLING

Ms Margaret H. Harrington (Niagara Falls): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the issue of legalized casino gambling is a sensitive and controversial issue; and

"Whereas this government has said it would not put a casino anywhere there is not overwhelming support; and

"Whereas we believe that the city council of Niagara Falls, Ontario, has not received a mandate to introduce casino gambling from the people of Niagara Falls at the last municipal election;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We who are opposed to casino gambling request that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario not allow the city of Niagara Falls to become a candidate for casino gambling unless there is broad-based public support for such a facility, which we are requesting to be determined through a referendum vote by the citizens of Niagara Falls."

REFUGEES

Mr D. James Henderson (Etobicoke-Humber): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario which reads as follows:

"The petition of the undersigned residents of Ontario who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to your petitioners, in certain assurance that your honourable Legislature will therefore provide a remedy; herewith:

"Whereas lack of policies by the provincial government to properly fund, house and settle genuine refugees entering this country is causing severe social and economic hardship;

"Whereas it is the shared responsibility of the provincial government to assist and educate refugees in order to integrate them into Canadian society;

"Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the Legislature to urge the government to implement policies to alleviate the social and economic suffering forced upon the undersigned residents of Canada; to implement policies for the settlement, housing and education of present and future properly qualified residents; and to ensure that the costs of overcrowding in housing not be borne by the owners of condominiums, residents, seniors, pensioners and people on fixed incomes, single parents, young families, widows, widowers and the unemployed.

Dated April 26, 1994, this petition has been signed by close to a thousand residents of Etobicoke, and I have affixed my signature as well.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mrs Ellen MacKinnon (Lambton): "To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Bill 55 will make it illegal, with fines of up to $50,000, for people to make any public statement, written or oral, which ridicules, demeans or discriminates against a person on the grounds of sexual orientation, still undefined. This is a grave threat to free speech in a democratic society.

"Bill 55 is also an attack on freedom of religion, against historical Christianity, which does not condone homosexuality.

"We want to maintain our basic right to disagree with homosexuality, which in no way should be equated with hatred.

"We have moved away from a position where some homosexuals and other special-interest groups are no longer content to express their ideas, but are demanding that contrary views be suppressed with stiff penalties.

"At the same time, these special-interest groups will be allowed to teach their controversial alternative lifestyles to youngsters in the classrooms, thereby—I'm sorry, but I cannot pronounce the next word, something to do with children—"children with their viewpoints without allowing for differing opinions."

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Frank Miclash (Kenora): My petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and reads:

"Whereas we want you to know that we are strenuously objecting to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"Whereas you should have followed the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters' advice and grandfathered those of us who have already taken safety courses and/or hunted for years—we are not unsafe and we are not criminals; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course or examination and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms safety course or examination."

That's signed by a good number of my constituents, and I too have attached my name to that petition.

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): I have a petition addressed to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"Liberal Bill 45 will change the meaning of the words 'spouse' and 'marital status' by removing the words 'of the opposite sex.' This will redefine the family as we know it.

"We believe that there will be an enormous negative impact on our society, both morally and economically, over the long term if fundamental institutions such as marriage are redefined to accommodate homosexual special-interest groups.

"We believe in freedom from discrimination, which is enjoyed by everyone by law now. But since the words 'sexual orientation' have not been defined in the Ontario Human Rights Code and may include sadomasochism, paedophilia, bestiality etc, and since sexual orientation is elevated to the same level as morally neutral characteristics of race, religion, age and sex, we believe all such references should be removed from the Ontario Human Rights Code and Bill 45.

"Therefore, we request that the House refrain from passing Liberal Bill 45."

LAP DANCING

Mr Pat Hayes (Essex-Kent): I have a petition against the legalization of lap dancing in Ontario bars signed by residents from Dresden, Thamesville, Charing Cross, Blenheim, all across my riding and Mr Hope's riding: "We, the undersigned, are opposed to the ruling of lap dancing in strip bars. We feel this violates our codes of morality or decency and we want steps taken to overturn this decision."

1530

EDUCATION FINANCING

Mr Robert Frankford (Scarborough East): I have a petition from a number of residents of Scarborough.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the British North America Act of 1867 supports the right of Catholic students to a Catholic education, and the province of Ontario supports two educational systems from kindergarten to grade 12/OAC; and

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board educates more than 103,000 students across Metropolitan Toronto, and whereas this is equivalent to 30% of all the students in this area; and

"Whereas the Metropolitan Separate School Board is expected to provide the same programs and services as its public school counterpart and must do so by receiving $1,822 less for each elementary school student and $2,542 less per secondary student based on 1983 estimates;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to act now to ensure that Ontario's two principal education systems are funded fully and equally."

I'm pleased to affix my signature to this.

SALE OF AMMUNITION

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough North): To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas it is imperative that we make our streets safe for law-abiding citizens;

"Whereas any person in Ontario can freely purchase ammunition even though they do not hold a valid permit to own a firearm; and

"Whereas crimes of violence where firearms are used have risen at an alarming rate; and

"Whereas we must do everything within our power to prevent illegal firearms from being used for criminal purposes;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To immediately pass Liberal Bob Chiarelli's private member's bill, Bill 151, to prohibit the sale of ammunition to any person who does not hold a valid firearms acquisition certificate or Ontario Outdoors Card."

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr Robert W. Runciman (Leeds-Grenville): A petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas traditional family values that recognize marriage as a union between a man and a woman are under attack by Liberal MPP Tim Murphy in his private member's Bill 45; and

"Whereas this bill would recognize same-sex couples and extend to them all the same rights as heterosexual couples; and

"Whereas the bill was carried with the support of an NDP and Liberal majority but with no PC in the second reading debate on June 24, 1993; and

"Whereas this bill is currently with the legislative committee on administration of justice and is being readied for quick passage in the Legislature; and

"Whereas this bill has not been fully examined for financial and societal implications,

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to stop this bill and to consider its impact on families in Ontario."

WORKERS' COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr Drummond White (Durham Centre): I'll be brief. I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it's concerned with the Workers' Compensation Board and the costs that have accrued to that board.

FIREARMS SAFETY

Mr Gordon Mills (Durham East): I have a petition from the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters in my riding and they say:

"To the Legislative Assembly:

"Whereas we want you to know that we strenuously object to your decision on the firearms acquisition certificate course and examination; and

"You should have followed the OFAH advice and grandfathered those of us who have taken safety courses and/or hunted for years; and

"Whereas we should not have to take the time or pay the costs of another course and we should not have to learn about classes of firearms that we have no desire to own;"

And they've undersigned the petition:

"Change your plans, grandfather responsible firearms owners and hunters and only require future first-time gun purchasers to take the new federal firearms course or examination."

MOTORCYCLES

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the undersigned, are of the opinion that private insurance companies are exploiting Ontario motorcyclists and snowmobile operators by charging excessive rates for coverage or by outright refusing to provide coverage;

"Whereas we, the undersigned, understand that those insurance companies that do specialize in motorcycle insurance will only insure riders for four or more years of riding experience and are outright refusing to insure riders who drive certain models of supersport bikes; and

"Whereas we, the undersigned, believe this situation will cost hundreds of jobs to dealerships and to the motorcycle industry and is contrary to the rights of motorcyclists and snowmobile operators;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario should study the feasibility of launching public motorcycle and snowmobile insurance."

I do affix my signature to it.

TRANSPORTATION FOR THE DISABLED

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Metro licensing commission and Metro Toronto council passed bylaw 95-93, prohibiting cross-boundary accessible taxi services which serve mobility-impaired individuals; and

"Whereas cross-boundary accessible transit service, originating in the town of Whitchurch-Stouffville by AAA Transport Ltd, is being adversely affected by the Metro Toronto bylaw; and

"Whereas dozens of citizens in Whitchurch-Stouffville rely on this accessible taxi service to travel to jobs and hospitals and other services in Metro,

"We, the undersigned, hereby petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"That the government of Ontario work with the council of Metro Toronto and the Metro licensing commission to exempt accessible taxi vehicles from existing legislation and bylaws to allow them to better serve the residents of Whitchurch-Stouffville."

I affix my signature to this and hope that it gets passed through Metro council very quickly.

FLOOD PREVENTION

Mr Paul R. Johnson (Prince Edward-Lennox-South Hastings): The following petition has been circulated and signed by the residents of Harewood village in the township of Ernestown as a follow-up to the negative response of the Ministry of Transportation towards the repeated flooding problems in the village. "We also wish to clarify the misunderstanding which seems to exist with the ministry regarding the problem to be a personal problem of only one resident."

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, wish to request the Ministry of Transportation to fully investigate, appropriate and carry out the necessary changes to divert all or part of the spring and heavy rain runoff waters which are fed into the village by means of a large culvert crossing Highway 33, located north of the village. These changes are necessary to relieve the residents of the village of the constant fear, hardship and damages caused by surface and underground water floods during these wet periods."

Many residents signed this petition, including Len and Lettie Hessels, Maurice and Sandra Baird, and Beverley and Edward Hawkins.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CHILDREN'S LAW REFORM AMENDMENT ACT, 1994

LOI DE 1994 MODIFIANT LA LOI PORTANT RÉFORME DU DROIT DE L'ENFANCE

On motion by Mr Rizzo, the following bill was given first reading:

Bill 156, An Act to amend the Children's Law Reform Act / Projet de loi 156, Loi modifiant la Loi portant réforme du droit de l'enfance.

Mr Tony Rizzo (Oakwood): The bill intends to emphasize the very important relationship between children and their grandparents, because in the bill that we have now, it's not enough. I think this amendment would recognize that it is a very important thing that this is going to be passed in order for the grandchildren and grandparents to stay together and enjoy their relationship.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

EMPLOYER HEALTH TAX AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR L'IMPÔT PRÉLEVÉ SUR LES EMPLOYEURS RELATIF AUX SERVICES DE SANTÉ

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act / Projet de loi 110, Loi modifiant la Loi sur l'impôt prélevé sur les employeurs relatif aux services de santé et la Loi sur les accidents du travail.

The Speaker (Hon David Warner): I believe where we left off, it was the honourable member for Etobicoke West who had the floor.

Mr Randy R. Hope (Chatham-Kent): Explain your position this morning for us, seeing you weren't here.

Mr Chris Stockwell (Etobicoke West): The member from Chatham's clattering. I didn't hear you.

Mr Hope: I just said, explain your position. You weren't here this morning.

Mr Stockwell: I was in favour of that because I wrote it. Good thinking, eh?

I left off yesterday speaking about the cost of the health care system and how this would go about fixing the mess that's now in place with respect to the employer health tax and the card and the fraud and so on. When you go about the province discussing the health care system with people, there seems to be a universal acceptance of the universality of the health care system.

I will say that when the Liberals brought in the employer health tax, and I spoke about this briefly yesterday, there was some thought that this would go a long way in resolving the issue of accountability, chasing the people who were maybe not paying their premiums or fell off the table when they changed jobs and so on and so on.

But I would like to add that the argument put forward by the government of the day and often put forward today is that when they introduced the employer health tax they in fact dropped the premiums on the OHIP payments, and there was some kind of argument at that time by the Liberal government that, yes, in fact they were implementing a tax but at the same time they were taking one away.

I think we have to be clear about that. It's very true on first look that, yes, they were putting an employer health tax in place and they were dropping the premiums, but the difference between the amounts of dollars they were collecting was very, very significant. The premium dollars they were collecting were hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars less than the employer health tax was going to generate as a tax on business. So when we were told about the new plan, we all thought, or at least the Liberals thought, this would do two things: It would generate more revenue for the coffers, which it did do; and it was going to fix the system so that there wouldn't be as much fraud or administration. Well, it generated more money, but as far as the fraud and administration end of it, it simply exacerbated that problem. We have a far greater problem today with the adoption of the employer health tax than we did pre-employer health tax.

This particular piece of legislation, although some in the Liberal Party—and I know the NDP were fully in favour at the time—may argue about the benefits of it, has really been a disaster in the true sense of the word, a disaster for the reasons I just made. It generated more tax money and created more taxes for business to pay, which again made them less competitive. But you'd think that if you're paying more money, the administration would tighten up and you wouldn't have as much fraud and so on. Well, that's exactly the opposite.

We hear daily in question period and in this Legislature, particularly from our member for Simcoe West, Mr Wilson, about the concerns with respect to duplicate cards and the fraud that's taking place, and I don't blame this government solely for that happening. I don't blame this government for this taking place, because I fundamentally believe that had anyone been in power this kind of thing would have happened, because the system was ripe to be ripped off.

Why do I say that? Well, I say that because any government program, an administrative program specifically, must include a check and balance system within that program to ensure people don't rip it off, because whether you like to think this way or you don't like to think this way—and I think the government in power tends not to like to think this way—there are people out there who are going to rip you off. Case closed. They're just going to rip you off. They're not fairminded individuals. They're not what we would classify in this House as the kind of people you'd do business with or the kind of people you'd look up to. They're just out there to rip the system off, case closed, and there is going to be a percentage of people within the population who will rip the system off. So if you've created a system that makes it easy to rip off, you're going to get ripped off, and ultimately, with the introduction of the employer health tax, that's what's happened.

I made the point many years ago when we were debating about this, why is this system easier to rip off than the old system? Well, because nobody's insured any more individually. You're only insured in the collective, the collective being a simple percentage of your payroll is paid as an employer health tax. When you have a simple percentage paid, there's never a person or family or individual who's insured; it's just the collective payroll of that company.

Why doesn't that work? Because the government has no idea when they receive the cheques from the company who these cheques are for. They just know it's a percentage of the payroll.

I'll tell you, Madam Speaker; I'll give you this guarantee: The moment you make it a collective payment plan, the moment you say individuals are no longer insured and the moment you say individuals are no longer covered, then you will be guaranteed that the system will be ripe for being ripped off.

What are the solutions? Well, some solutions have talked about photo cards and others have talked about maybe a system that can go back to the premium payments. I noticed the member for Scarborough East made the comments yesterday with respect to some system for premium payments for people who are visiting the country etc.

I would argue steadfastly that the best approach to use is to again go back to insuring individuals rather than the collective. Why I argue that way is, there is an administrative headache, I agree, in trying to keep track of 10 million people, but on the whole it makes more sense to go about keeping track of 10 million people as best you can, and in some cases for the government, that's not great, but it's better than not trying to keep track at all.

I'll tell you something, as sure as I'm standing here today, the Minister of Health will go back to a system that somehow reinsures the individual rather than the collective, or the next government will go back to a system of identifying individuals through photo ID, through premium payments, through some form of system that identifies individuals and will ultimately keep better track.

I will also say this: People who pay premiums for a program rather than getting them free think longer and harder about taking advantage of that program. I'm not saying that because it's a philosophical approach or a political approach; I think it's just human nature. If you ask people to pay for a program—not even pay for the full pop of the program, just pay for some percentage, small as it may be, like OHIP—then when they go to use that service, they have an understanding that yes, in fact this program costs money.

The moment that the government, be it municipal, provincial or federal, will go out and offer a program gratis, with no cost involved, no small premium payment, with no idea how much it costs, this program will cost you a lot more than you ever thought it would, because people think it's free. They think: "Nothing comes out of my pocket. I have no idea how much this is, what it costs to go see the doctor for a hangnail or a sniffle." They think this is somehow free; it's not, never has been and never will be. There's a cost to the taxpayer, the collective taxpayer.

This seems to be where we have gone in divergent paths with the government in power today. I say that too because we see it in all kinds of things today, and maybe this government is finally coming to the realization that you can't go about giving away programs for free; there has to be some kind of applicable cost to that program.

I'll tell you where that has become very clear to me, and maybe this is an argument that can be traced back to the employer health tax as far as the premium is concerned. The Treasurer has been bringing in budgets now three times, this will be his fourth, and in each budget he has gone about with great care to ensure that he has increased service costs or fees. Why has he increased fees?

I see my friend the member from Davenport coming in.

Hon Tony Silipo (Minister of Community and Social Services): Dovercourt.

Mr Stockwell: Dovercourt, sorry; near Davenport, actually. He will recall vividly sometimes in the 1970s and 1980s that the socialists often argued against, vehemently opposed at both the municipal and probably the provincial levels, any kind of user fee, period, whether it be in a rec centre or a skating rink or a campsite or any of those kinds of things. They opposed that because they thought there should be universal access. But now as you see budgets coming—

Mr Kimble Sutherland (Oxford): No.

Mr Stockwell: I know the member for Oxford says no, but I can point to you chapter and verse.

Hon Mr Silipo: Not campsites.

Mr Stockwell: Well, maybe not campsites, but I can point to you chapter and verse, not just that member, who I don't have as much experience with, but certainly the member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, who opposed any kind of fee at all at a municipal level for access to programming.

1550

I say to you that maybe your opinion has changed. Why has it changed? Because I think you're finally coming to realize that when you offer these programs for free they end up costing you significantly more than you expected them to and there's no revenue to charge back against those costs. That can be directly related back to the cost of health care in this province, because the cost of health care in this province has grown at such a staggering rate it would take your breath away.

I say to the members across the floor that in 1985 in this province, I think it was the last provincial Conservative budget, the entire cost of running this government in the province of Ontario those 10 short years ago was in the neighbourhood of some $17 billion or $18 billion.

Interjection.

Mr Stockwell: Ten years ago. Well, we have a disagreement, but anyway, it was significant. Today, the health care system in the province of Ontario costs as much as it did to run the whole province those 10 short years ago.

The question you have to ask is, have the needs of the public dramatically increased to the point that it needs this kind of money spent on the service? Or maybe, have the governments of the day, particularly in the last half of the 1980s, less so under this government, been offering services that weren't covered and in fact were not expected to be covered, but once given to the general public can no longer be recaptured? That's a question that needs to be asked.

I don't know if I'll be using all my minutes. I will say that I think the debate will become an election debate. You'll probably find all parties pretty much on side with respect to health care and the universality of health care. But as I said yesterday, if there is a dedication from each party to protect the health care system and the universality of the health care system, I insist that no chipping away be done at the outside of that system. Either you're in favour of universality or you're not.

I would ask the public to ask those people who come to their doors, when they say they're in favour of universal health care and when they talk about a $17-billion expenditure in health care and when they talk about collecting $40 billion in revenue and spending $50 billion, where are they going to make the kinds of cuts that are needed to be made to balance this budget and bring business back into this province if they're not prepared to look at least $17 billion of a $50-billion budget?

When you talk about debt servicing, you're talking about $7 billion of $17 billion. When you add debt servicing into the $17 billion, you're suddenly up to $23 billion. When you add in education and other forms, you're at $30 billion before you know it. If you're at $30 billion of these particular programs that this government says are sacrosanct—you can't touch them, they're sacred cows—then where is it you're going to make cuts that are going to balance this kind of budget, considering you're spending $10 billion you don't have to begin with?

This is the folly of this debate. The folly of this debate is that we all stand up and have beautiful and lovely words about the safety of our health care system—

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): Speak for yourself.

Mr Stockwell: Well, no, I spoke for the member for Bruce. He was very eloquent in his comments with respect to the safety net, and I think it's a wonderful thing. It's a good idea to stand up and say those kinds of things.

But what doesn't get answered, not just by the Liberals, although they're famous for not having very fine-tuned, economically sound policies, but even by the government itself—the government should take a lesson in this as well. I don't understand how you're going to protect all these safeties—the social safety net, the health care system, education—continue to spend the dollars you claim you're committed to spending and then also argue that you're going to reduce the deficit and balance the budget. I don't know how you can do it. I honestly don't know how you can do it, considering the spending levels we're at today.

As I said before, you collect $40 billion and you spend $50 billion. Health care and those etc's add up to about $30 billion. If you cut everything else out except education, social services and health care, and debt servicing—you have no choice—you'd have to cut every single ministry, every single staff, every single person to balance the budget.

Those are the questions the public needs to ask, because the next government that is lucky enough to be elected in this province, be it the government in power or the Liberals or us, is going to be faced with probably a greater dilemma than this government. They're going to have to go out to the people and they're not going to buy these sops any more, the Agenda for People; they're not going to buy that sop any more. They're going to want some real, honest answers, and the answers have to begin with, what is considered less of a priority and what is going to be cut that is going to create a balanced budget, or at least deficit reduction, to have competitive businesses in this province again?

I can speak for myself with respect to the cuts I think you'd have to go to. You're going to have to go to a series of cuts in this province that I think the government would find somewhat draconian in some nature, but it's going to have to be done to get you a balanced budget.

Who'd have thought we'd be sitting here today waiting for the fourth budget from the Minister of Finance, and that in previous budgets he'd be talking about reopening contracts and renegotiating them, a gentleman who would be talking about increasing fees to the boy scouts, for heaven's sake, and the girl guides? Who'd have thought a socialist would be talking about this? Who would have thought a socialist would have been talking about photo-radar and casino gambling?

I understand why they did those things. I understand why they didn't go to fully funded public auto insurance. They couldn't afford it, it's that simple. They couldn't afford the massive layoffs in the private sector and the cost of incurring fully funded government auto insurance.

What we have here is three parties coalescing to the right of centre. It's just that simple. We have three parties coalescing to the right of centre: the Liberals, the Conservatives and the NDP. Some on the spectrum are maybe less right than the others, I will admit, but surely even the most ardent supporter of this government would admit that it has gone a considerable distance from the left of centre to the centre and maybe marginally to the right. Even the most ardent supporter would argue they've come considerably closer to the centre, maybe even to the centre, than they used to be in opposition.

I will say about the Liberal caucus, and it can enter into this debate, that it has gone out further on the right of centre, considerably further on the right of centre, than has been its traditional party history. Why is this? This debate is a microcosm of the rationale. The microcosm is, no longer can we simply say we will be all things to all people in this province. It can't be done any more, and for one reason. As hard as it is to swallow for the government in power—and I know it's hard to swallow, but it's an accepted fact—the one reason is it doesn't have the money. They're broke; they haven't got the tax revenue and they have had to break a series of promises to maintain some fiscal sanity in this province—if you think three credit rating downgrades and $10 billion is fiscal sanity. That's with the hard decision-making they took on the social contract and others.

I know full well the serious problems they must have had in caucus when it came to no public auto insurance, gambling casinos, the social contract. It must have been hell to sit through those caucus meetings, it must have been hell to rationalize on those principles, but it all comes down to that terrible word that nobody likes to say makes decisions but always does: money. Money is the bottom line to this government and any future government.

We can't be all things to all people any more. The point I wanted to make on the health care system is that if the health care system is untouchable and if it will always be universal and if all people will have access at all times—and I know the Minister of Health has a difficult problem. Every day in the House someone stands up, particularly from northern Ontario, and complains—

Hon Ruth Grier (Minister of Health): And says spend more money.

Mr Stockwell: Spend more money, exactly. They stand up and say, "Spend more money." If that is going to be the protected sacred cow, then no longer can you make the same arguments for education or social services or the other services we provide in this province.

I will not stand in future, particularly in this election, for members of this House to go out, and the people who are competing against those members, to tell the people they will continue to give them everything they've always had, including lower taxes, lower deficits and balanced budgets, because that is bunk. That's more bunk than the Agenda for People, and that's going some far, if you can do that.

I was glad to take part in this debate, because I'll tell you something: The general public out there is in a very interesting mood. The mood of the general public is sort of like this: "I understand what the situation is. I understand there's going to have to be a change in the way government is run in this province, and I understand there are going to have to be some decisions made that are tough decisions that will not necessarily please 100% of the people in this province, but we are prepared to accept those decisions."

All the public is asking us today is, "Allow us the opportunity of seeing what those decisions are and we will be happy"—not happy—"we will accept the fact that we will have to give priority to certain programs, and some programs will go and some will stay." I only ask that we give the public the opportunity to pick which programs go and which stay, and I think you can kiss multicultural grants goodbye, you can kiss all those programs goodbye. When it comes down to the short strokes, the general public in this province wants to maintain their health care system, some reasonable form of education, and everything else may well be on the table.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Questions or comments?

Mr Sutherland: I appreciate the member for Etobicoke West participating in the debate. Once again, he gave his normal, consistent view, may I say. There's no doubt that he's very consistent, but I think he gave a somewhat simplistic view of how things are done.

For example, when you talk about health care and all the public services, does that mean everything we're doing right now is of value in those systems? Does that mean we just continue to do them?

I see the other member here from Mississauga. She took me to task the other day because I cited a scientific study that appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine which clearly indicated that many of the CAT scans and MRIs don't have any value or that too many of them are being done when they shouldn't be done. She took me to task for saying that: "Oh, that's an awful thing."

But at some point when you're looking at these, you've got to examine those issues. If in certain areas they don't have a value in our system, we've got to look at that to find those efficiencies.

Let me just say with respect to this bill that it is a measure of fairness. I understand people don't like the employer health tax in general, but it does need to be done in terms of what we're doing with respect to this bill.

I appreciate the member's comments, but we need to keep in mind that maybe everything we're doing in our health care system, our education system, our other systems right now, isn't the most effective thing to do and that changes can be made to improve them. I don't think anybody should be afraid of examining those services to make those decisions.

Mr Murphy: I too would like to join in the comments on the speech of the member for Etobicoke West. I may wish to say something slightly heretical here in agreement with him, which is that there is one reason why it was a good thing that the NDP was elected in 1990—one reason—and that is because we will now have a circumstance where there are three parties who've actually had to serve in government and make some of the hard decisions.

What we had historically in this province was the NDP as a third party that was prepared to promise essentially everything to all people on one end of the spectrum and raise the expectation level of what could be delivered by government and provide an out for making hard choices. I agree with the member from Etobicoke West that what is coming—what is here—is that the process of governing is going to be the process of making hard choices.

There are three ways you solve the deficit situation:

either more taxes, government efficiency, or fewer services. Taxpayers are telling all of us that more taxes isn't the way to go about it, and I'm not sure the savings required to achieve the deficit reduction that needs to be made can be done through government efficiency in the sense of delivering it more effectively. In some cases, there can be savings that way. That doesn't mean we stop pursuing that. I think of the Wellesley Hospital in my riding, which has done an excellent job of turning a difficult situation around and is now in a surplus situation.

How the debate on which services are kept and how they are kept is going to be conducted is going to be important. The election will be about this debate if we are honest about the issues we're going to put before the public. But we have to look at more innovative ways than this government has pursued about having that debate, and I look forward to the opportunity to see if that actually occurs.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): It seems to me that what my colleague the member for Etobicoke West has been talking about is fundamental honesty. It's very easy for members of political parties to all stand off and say, "I don't agree with what they're saying." But the fact is, we now have a budget which is so much above what we gather in revenues—nobody could possibly say there's a lack of revenue, because we are now so heavily taxed that there is no capacity for more taxes. The only saving graces we have ahead of us are more efficiency in the system and increases in our GDP, and increases in GDP are highly related to how effective we are in attracting and keeping businesses.

As my colleague said, if you leave health care alone and you leave education alone, you have so many other areas of government that would have to be cut back to almost zero or zero as to be unrealistic. Now we have to come to grips with how we increase the efficiency of the health care system, and we must be very honest.

Everybody wants universal health care, and I believe everybody in this chamber is in favour of universal health care, but the point is that we are going to have to fund it maybe differently. The trouble this government has is that it is so tied up in its old rhetoric. They are so tied up in all those years of being in opposition and always saying that the government of the day was wrong that they find their area for movement is so limited. That's the difficulty they are facing. My friend speaks of honesty, and I hope the government can have the guts to come to terms with its rhetoric being jettisoned.

Mr Robert Frankford (Scarborough East): I listened with interest to the member for Etobicoke West. I don't believe he addressed the suggestion of his colleague the member for York Mills about $10 user fees, which I remember him bringing up yesterday. I trust his caucus is developing a unified position on that and that we will be fully informed about what they're favouring.

Mr Turnbull: We've always been more up front in our caucus than the NDP ever was.

Mr Frankford: I'd appreciate the opportunity to bring forward some of my suggestions.

I also agree with what I think I heard the member for York Mills saying about the need for an efficient health system and the possibility of savings. I agree with the statement of federal minister Marcel Massé of a few months ago, when he said, looking at European models, that we could reduce our proportion of GDP spending on health. I don't know how much exactly he suggested, but certainly, let's say, 1% of GDP, which is getting us somewhere into a quite manageable range with actually a greater degree of universality.

Mr Massé retracted because it was immediately interpreted that he was suggesting unacceptable slashes and just cutting back on health care. I think it's unfortunate, and I would be very interested to see what is actually going on at the federal level with the minister and ministers like Massé.

Mr Turnbull: What are you saying?

Mr Frankford: The member is asking me what I am saying. I believe we need to move to a more universal, better-structured system informationally, a primary-care-based system, as, for instance, has been suggested by Dr Forster of Ottawa—

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired. Two minutes' reply, the member for Etobicoke West.

Mr Stockwell: Listen, I don't disagree that there can be saving in the system. There can be. There can be saving by, as they say, spending smarter or rationalizing and so on and so forth, but let's not kid the troops. You can't save the kind of money we need to save by saying we can spend smarter. It isn't there.

If I don't need to explain this to anybody, I don't need to explain it to this caucus over here. If you thought you could rationalize without affecting services, you would have done it by now and you probably would have had deficits significantly less than $10 billion.

The point I'm trying to make is that if you're going to go out on the campaign trail and say, "We'll just spend smarter and make efficiencies in the system and we can balance the budget and keep all the services," they're going to see through you like a cheap pane of glass.

You know what? There's nothing I find more difficult than to watch the Minister of Health stand before us and tell us there are no user fees in the system. Folks, we know there are user fees in the system now. We know they're everywhere. Go get an ambulance in Simcoe and it costs you money right out of your pocket, like Central America. That's what it costs you.

Mr Hope: Central America?

Mr Stockwell: Sure. It costs you money. If you want an ambulance, you've got to peel off some dollars and give it to them.

We know there are user fees in the system. The worst part is to see ministers trying to defend the fact that there aren't. We have to come clean. I don't think the public wants user fees, but you know something? If you gave them a choice between fully funded, fully paid-for, universal, accessible health care, and multicultural grants or sports grants or programs like that, or civil servants, they'd choose health care in a second. There's your decision.

The Acting Speaker: Is there any further debate? If not, the parliamentary assistant. Would he wish to make any comment?

Mr Sutherland: I just want to thank all those who participated in the debate. I think we've had a full discussion of the issue.

1610

The Acting Speaker: Mr Sutherland has moved second reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Employer Health Tax Act and the Workers' Compensation Act.

Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This is a five-minute bell.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The government House leader.

Hon Brian A. Charlton (Government House Leader): There is an agreement among the three House leaders to defer the vote until 5:45 on Monday, May 2.

The Acting Speaker: Is it agreed? Agreed.

COURTS OF JUSTICE STATUTE LAW
AMENDMENT ACT, 1993

LOI DE 1993 MODIFIANT DES LOIS
EN CE QUI CONCERNE
LES TRIBUNAUX JUDICIAIRES

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 136, An Act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and to make related amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Justices of the Peace Act / Projet de loi 136, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires et apportant des modifications corrélatives à la Loi sur l'accès à l'information et la protection de la vie privée et à la Loi sur les juges de paix.

Mr David Tilson (Dufferin-Peel): Bill 136 is an act to amend the Courts of Justice Act and has been spoken about by the Attorney General, who is in the House, and the critic for the Liberal Party and the critic for the Conservative Party, and I don't have a great deal to add to the discussions.

I think, generally speaking, the Attorney General needs to be congratulated for bringing this legislation forward. This legislation, as has been said, deals with a number of things, of which some things have been said and some things haven't, which I'd like to comment on this afternoon. It deals with the Unified Family Court, it deals with the judicial appointments, it deals with judicial discipline, and a number of other things.

I think this bill is useful because the people in this province are expecting more and more, not only from our judges but from our police, from our politicians. The whole issue of justice and community safety in Ontario is certainly one of the great issues that this government needs to deal with, and I congratulate, as I say, the Attorney General for bringing forward this bill which deals specifically with the judiciary.

We've had some difficult incidents in this province recently, and I think it would be inappropriate for me or anyone else to comment on those specific incidents. But they've been very difficult incidents and I think that judges, like all of us, need to be examined periodically. The judicial system needs to be examined periodically.

The whole issue of the independence of the judiciary needs to be looked at while we're getting into these issues, and I know that both of the previous speakers, the Liberal critic and the member for Willowdale, have spoken on that issue and I would like to add to that.

I hope that the Attorney General will also look at a number of issues outside this bill, albeit it deals specifically with the judiciary. We're into very difficult times. The whole issue of young offenders is being questioned by the public and, yes, that's a federal jurisdiction, but we've had incidents in Chatham, we've had incidents in dessert restaurants and young people shooting at people in Ottawa streets, tourists in Ottawa. We've had violence in the schools, we've had just awful crimes against women and young children in our society, so we need to look at everything. We need to look at the police system, we need to look at the judiciary, we need to look at the court system, and this is part of that puzzle.

I think the member for Willowdale has mentioned that the Progressive Conservative Party has prepared a document, which I'd like to give some plug to, Madam Speaker. Members from the House could rightly criticize me in that it doesn't deal specifically with this bill, but it does deal with the subject of justice, which is what this Bill 136 is trying to deal with.

It's a document which the Progressive Conservatives have called New Directions, Volume Three: A Blueprint for Justice and Community Safety in Ontario. I think that has been referred to by members in this House. It talks about young offenders, the whole issue of sentencing, is our system too soft? Court management is dealt with, the Martin report and a whole slew of other issues.

Perhaps that leads to the first item I'd like to speak to specifically dealing with Bill 136, and that has to do with the issue with respect to Small Claims Court and the use of deputy judges, which is dealt with in section 33 and those surrounding sections, I believe, with respect to the appointment of deputy judges or the composition of the Deputy Judges Council, the complaints against deputy judges, the investigation, disposition etc. There are a lot of sections which pretty well mirror the sections dealing with the Judicial Council for provincial judges.

One of the most important courts in our system is the Small Claims Court, which deals with monetary matters in which individuals can go to court and not use a lawyer, although I think the jurisdiction is now $6,000 and certainly for the higher claims people do retain lawyers. During the Small Claims Court proceedings, generally speaking, deputy judges are used.

One of the complaints about this legislation, which I know has been drawn to the attention of the Attorney General with meetings by judicial people and members from the Advocates' Society, is on this issue. I'm reluctant to be too critical of the bill because I will be supporting the bill, but it's a practical issue with respect to deputy judges, who are, as I say, generally lawyers who are hired or asked to appear and make decisions on matters in Small Claims Court. They're paid a nominal amount per day, $230-some-odd dollars a day, to act as deputy judges. It's very difficult for many lawyers to do that, specifically in the communities where they have a law practice, and the whole issue of appearing independent.

The problem that has been drawn to my attention, and I know it has been drawn to the attention of the Attorney General, is the issue of the criticism that is being directed to deputy judges. With monetary claims of $500 and under, there are no court reporters to deal with those claims, those actions that are brought in the Small Claims Court, nor are those matters appealable.

When someone loses their claim for $500, one of the things that normally one would expect is that you could appeal. You don't like the decision. Perhaps they didn't like things that the judge said. Maybe the judge made an error. But under the system that we now have, as I understand it, those actions of monetary claims under $500 cannot be appealed.

Rightfully, no question, the competence of judges, whether it be a deputy or anyone making judicial decisions, needs to be looked at, but the difficulty is that many deputy judges look at this position as almost a community service. Certainly they're not doing it for the money. I suppose in many cases people ask, "Why are they doing it?" They're certainly not doing it for the monetary claim of some $230.

The criticism that has been directed towards this bill is, will that discourage legal people with good experience acting in a judicial capacity from appearing as a judge in the Small Claims Court? Will they put themselves up to criticism that may not necessarily be valid, particularly with the problem we're in?

I can tell you that the prediction that's coming out is that people who, either as a plaintiff or as a defendant, may not have received a decision they liked and the claim is under $500, they have no right of appeal, but the right they do have under Bill 136 is the right to make a complaint to the judge. Subsection 33(7) says, "Any person may make a complaint to the Deputy Judges Council alleging misconduct by a deputy judge."

Then it's referred to a subcommittee consisting of two judges of the General Division, one deputy judge and one person who is neither a judge nor a lawyer. It's not exactly the same, but it's a similar type of subcommittee that has dealt with the Judicial Council.

Then the subcommittee may investigate the complaint. I suppose the Attorney General could stand in her place and say, "If the claim is frivolous and they're just trying to get at the decision that was made—if the plaintiff or the defendant didn't like the decision, it's not really a shot at the judge, it's a shot at the decision that they just didn't like—those claims could be dismissed by this subcommittee."

Subsection (10) goes on, "The regional senior judge may dismiss the complaint, with or without a finding that it is unfounded, or, if he or she concludes that the deputy judge's conduct presents grounds for imposing a sanction, may," and then there are a number of things that could be done. The judge can be warned, reprimanded etc and those are dealt with in a number of clauses. Then it goes down to a number of other things.

The practical matter of it is that people in the judicial system whom I have spoken to, and I know they've spoken to the Attorney General, are afraid that deputy judges will say: "Why bother? It's not paying me to do this. Why should I go through this grief which may not be warranted?"

People get very upset with decisions and they may have taken them very personally. They may have said that the judge is incompetent. They may say a whole slew of things. It may well be that those complaints are well founded. Hence it's difficult for me to criticize this section, because there's no question that there may be occasions when that situation is well founded.

Being a lawyer, although I haven't done litigation for many years—I'll make that clear. I have nothing to gain in this. I certainly haven't done litigation, and don't intend to, I might add. The difficulty is, why would lawyers bother doing this? Why would they put themselves up to this? This has been said by other members in the House and I know it has been said to the Attorney General privately.

I have no idea where this bill's going after this second reading, whether it's going to a committee or where it's going, but hopefully we can hear more about that dilemma. That's what I believe.

I understand what the Attorney General is doing, but I also am reasonably certain that you will have a shortfall in deputy judges. That to me leads to the conclusion that more judges at perhaps a higher rate of compensation may have to be paid. If you have a shortage of volunteers, you're going to have to pay people, because you have to make the Small Claims Court system work. I guess the issue I'm looking at is whether this is going to lead to other problems, in fact, shortage of judges.

Time is fast fleeing, but there are other issues that I would like to talk about. There's the performance evaluation, and that is dealt with in sections in the bill, which is by the Judicial Council. When you start talking about deciding the performance of judges—and we've seen some almost bizarre situations in our judicial system lately—deciding whether judges are acting appropriately, there's no question, and I'm saying this as a male, I suppose, that we need to be educated, we need to be continually educated on the way our society is going. I understand that and I support that.

The issue is politics interfering in what I believe should be an independent system, and this has been said. One of the issues—and I don't think I can find the section—has to do with how the Chief Judge may implement a performance evaluation of judges. That is an issue that we need to be very careful of. Again, I hope that this goes to a committee, that this topic will be dealt with as well, to assure the judicial system and to assure the public that when we start talking about the evaluation of judges, there is no political interference and the independence of judges remains.

Certainly, the sensitivity courses, the legal education—everyone supports that. We all need to have continuing education. We all need to probably have sensitivity courses. I mean, I'd be the first to admit that, because we have seen in North America very bizarre cases made specifically by male judges. There's no question that those have been made. But it's a very dangerous area to get into. It needs to be looked at, but we need to be very careful when we get into that to ensure that the independence of the judiciary continues.

I don't intend to spend any more time on that issue, which is the performance evaluation process, other than to make that comment, that we need to be very careful in the process. I am concerned about the Chief Judge performing evaluations of judges. I'm concerned about that because that does get into one judge deciding what another judge is going to do or should do, for whatever reason. It's an area which I hope the Attorney General will spend some more time on, and perhaps we'll have more input from the judicial people and Advocates' Society and the bar association and others on that issue.

I know that the Advocates' Society made some representations a couple of years ago to the former Attorney General, Mr Hampton. Hopefully, the Advocates' Society and others will be given an opportunity to make more representations on these issues, because it is a specialized field and we need to rely on our judicial people and our legal people to properly advise the government as to dealing with the problem that needs to be addressed. I repeat, I congratulate her on that issue.

The issue with respect to the Family Court: Again, I don't speak as an expert on the topic of the Family Court, which has been successful in Hamilton, other than that there are a whole slew of support services that have operated in Hamilton that assist judicial decisions. I guess when you start talking about a unified court, whether or not the Attorney General needs to be more clear on that type of support system or, to use the words of the member for Willowdale, on the infrastructure of the operation of that system, I think more important is an issue that has been raised before and which I'd like to emphasize to the Attorney General. Now these provincial judges, being a unified court, will move to the General Division and essentially will be paid for by the federal government. That will free up a substantial amount of money. I guess it depends on how much money. I don't know what the facts are. I suspect it will free up a substantial amount of money, and one of the concerns of the judicial system and the legal system is money, just like it is for education and health and all kinds of things. I mean, we're short of money.

If that is being done, if that interpretation is correct and there is going to be a substantial amount of money, in the millions, that is going to be freed up, then hopefully there would be some assurance from the Attorney General that this money won't simply go into the big pot, into the consolidated fund, but that it will be used for the court system.

If it's a saving in one thing, there are all kinds of other things—and the member for Willowdale has spoken about the infrastructure and the Unified Family Court—that are needed in the Unified Family Court other than just decision-making. So that's enough on that topic. That is a point that has been made, but I wanted to emphasize that issue.

The appointment of judges, as dealt with—these are all matters that I think it's excellent to have codified. I think that's dealt with in section 42; it doesn't matter. But there's a section in the bill that deals with the appointment of judges.

I want to talk about an issue that I know the government gets very sensitive about, particularly the NDP government, and that is the whole issue with respect to employment equity. I cite, for example, when we had all the judges who were appointed as a result of the Askov decision, where there were a number of cases that were simply getting set aside by judges because it was taking too long to reach the courts. That was the leading decision, the start of that whole process. The then Attorney General appointed a whole slew of judges—I don't know how many, but a large number—to alleviate that situation. He had no choice, and that's what was done.

The concern I had, and I made a criticism of him then in his capacity as Attorney General and I make a criticism of him now, is that normally for the appointment of judges there are a number of requirements, and it's set forth in the bill. One is to have been practising law for a number of years. The then Attorney General made an invitation to ask lawyers to make an application as to whether or not they were interested in becoming provincial judges to alleviate this situation. To my knowledge from speaking to people in the legal community, that invitation went out only to women. Only to women. This is before employment equity, the last piece of legislation, was passed.

There's no question that the appointment of judges must reflect what is going on in the community, must reflect the people in the community, the people who live there, whether it's culture or otherwise: all of the principles of employment equity. But my concern is the issue of merit. It's this point that I know members of the government get very excited about whenever I speak about it. They say that the merit principle is there, but I can tell you that this whole issue, which even applies to the appointment of judges, gives me some concern. I hope that in the section dealing with the appointment of judges, the issue of merit will be emphasized over and above anything else, because it is important that we have not only an independent judicial system but a very qualified judicial system. I think that we do. At this particular point in time, speaking as someone who has worked in the judicial system, I think we have one of the best systems in North America, if not the world, as far as the quality of our judicial system is concerned. I hope that will continue.

There will be a great number of provincial court judges who will become section 96 judges, as the unified courts are expanded. Those judges, once they become section 96 judges, will be paid by the federal government. I think that's a saving of over $100,000, $120,000. I emphasize that point as well, that that's a saving; it simply doesn't go to the court system.

There's another issue which I hope in due course—and I know I'm going beyond the bill but it's an opportunity for me to mention the efficiency of the judicial system. We're talking about the qualifications of judges and the ability of members of the public and members of the legal system to criticize people in the judicial community and we're talking about making the system run better, and that is the whole issue of legal aid.

My time has almost expired and I don't intend to proceed, but I believe that one of the reasons why our legal system has become rather bogged down at times, specifically in the area of matrimonial, which is what the Unified Family Court will be dealing with, is the subject of legal aid. There are a whole slew of people, and I make this as a broad statement albeit in my opinion, who should not be covered by legal aid.

People who have legal aid, in my observations, take advantage of the system. Again, I don't mean to criticize people who are on legal aid because there's a whole number of people who need legal assistance. It's very expensive. They need to be compensated for that. The difficulty is that someone—I'm just speaking as someone who has observed the system—who is on legal aid is not paying the bill and quite often decisions are not settled. They go on and they go on and they go on.

The opponent, who may be the husband, may be the wife, it doesn't really matter, on these matters involving family matters specifically, may not have legal aid and it puts that person to a disadvantage economically. So it's another issue that somewhere down the line I hope the Attorney General will deal with because I think that there's the issue of fairness on the topic of legal aid. There's the issue of congestion in the courts, because the people who are not paying the bills quite often are not afraid to proceed in sometimes very expensive proceedings against people who are paying the bills. That in turn, clogs the system.

I have really nothing further to say with respect to this bill other than the fact that I hope that somewhere down the line in one of the committee stages we will hear more from the Attorney General and her staff on some of these issues. I do invite, as a final plug—and I'm sure the Attorney General has looked at it, at some of the items that we deal with in our booklet on New Directions, specifically the sections on the Young Offenders Act, court management and other matters that indirectly affect this bill and other related matters.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, for participating and I look forward to other members of this House debating this subject and I also look forward to the Attorney General or members of her staff clarifying many of the concerns that have been put forward and hopefully give an opportunity to people in the legal community and the judicial community and others who are directly or indirectly affected by the judicial system.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Margaret H. Harrington): Thank you to the member for Dufferin-Peel. Now we have time for questions or comments. Are there any questions or comments to the member? If not, further debate.

Mr David Winninger (London South): I too am pleased to rise and speak in support of Bill 136. We've heard several members of the opposition, notably the member for Ottawa West, the member for Willowdale and now the member for Dufferin-Peel, speak in support in principle of Bill 136.

I think it's to the credit of the Attorney General and the process of consultation that went into these amendments to Bill 136 that people appear to be unanimous in their praise of Bill 136.

I myself am very impressed with some of the progressive amendments to the Courts of Justice Act embodied in Bill 136, but I'm also impressed with the extent of the consultation: consultation with the judiciary, consultation with the bar, consultation with consumers of legal/judicial services and finally, with the community at large.

If there's one thing I've learned in political office, it's that it's not enough to consult only with what are sometimes known as the stakeholder groups, but it's also important to listen to their concerns and reflect as best you can in your legislation or your amendments to existing legislation the kind of contributions you've heard from the stakeholders.

It seems to me that because of the breadth and depth of consultation that went, first, into the lead-up to Bill 68 and now into Bill 136 that replaces Bill 68, we've had an extremely full consultation. Although people never get everything they ask for in legislation, my experience with my constituents has been that as long as I as a politician make an honest effort to hear what they have to say and reflect as best I can the majoritarian viewpoint, people are relatively happy and accepting of the solutions and accommodations we're able to come up with.

Here, for example, in Bill 136 the Attorney General has wrought a very fine balance between the traditional judicial independence that is vouchsafed to our courts of law by the Constitution, but at the same time increasing the openness and accountability of the manner in which our judicial institutions operate. As the Attorney General herself observed in beginning this debate, what's resulted is a more open and fair process—by all accounts, I might add.

What I like in particular is the new look of the Judicial Council. Provincial court judges, who will be disciplined by the Ontario Judicial Council, will play a greater role because they will have more representatives on the council. At the same time, however, the accountability and accessibility the public demands will be reflected in additional public appointments who will enhance judicial accountability. Judges will still have the majority vote because the Chief Justice of Ontario can exercise his or her prerogative to cast an additional deciding vote in the event of a tie.

I think that's important, and it's important to the public to know that their courts and the bodies that regulate the affairs of the courts and justices and judges will remain autonomous and independent of the legislative and executive functions of government. It's also important to note that the Chief Justice of Ontario will be the person who will preside at hearings.

The process for complaints from the public about the conduct or misconduct, as the case may be, of judges has also been vastly improved. In my constituency office, we do from time to time get calls of complaint about the conduct or misconduct of judges and justices, and I, like my colleagues in the House, have to make it quite clear, in fact crystal clear, to those who contact our office that we as politicians do not intervene, interfere or attempt to influence in any way the course of justice. It's not our position to comment on decisions that are made by judges or justices. So fortunately we have a complaints mechanism to the Judicial Council.

To some members of the lay public, this process is somewhat mysterious and arcane, and by some of the improvements being made in Bill 136 or in conjunction with Bill 136 we find that public accessibility to the Ontario Judicial Council is increased and improved. I note the Attorney General's comments in opening this debate, that we're looking at toll-free telephone access to the Judicial Council, that there could be assistance in drafting complaints to the Judicial Council, and finally, more public education on the function, role, structure and composition of the Judicial Council, which will remove some of that mystery, some of that sense of the arcane from these august proceedings.

It's also helpful to know that the Judicial Council will have a broader range of dispositions it can make in response to complaints about the conduct of our judiciary. As it stands right now, it's my understanding that a judge can be removed from the bench or a judge can continue to sit on a bench. By broadening the range and increasing the diversity of dispositions available, the Judicial Council, I would submit, can be more responsive to the nature of the complaint that's put to the council. For example, perhaps a reprimand or a warning is in order, rather than a complete removal of the judge or justice from the bench. As well, one might accentuate, as the Attorney General mentioned in her opening to this debate, measures for support for judges, and also preventive measures. Quite clearly, though, these are dispositions that lie within the Ontario Judicial Council to make.

I'm also impressed that some very proactive initiatives are contemplated under Bill 136. We've heard, from time to time, both from the judiciary and the bar and sometimes from the public, of the need for continuing education for the judiciary, and to the credit of the chief justices, considerable progress has already been made in the form of educational seminars to increase the gender and racial sensitivity of our judiciary. I see a lot of improvement in that direction.

As well, it's important that standards of conduct be established for the judiciary, and it's important that that role, that responsibility of establishing standards of conduct, is placed within the authority of the Chief Justice of Ontario, again to reinforce the judicial independence that is a hallmark of our justice system.

Performance evaluation: Like the establishment of standards of conduct, performance evaluation is a discretionary provision under Bill 136 for the Chief Justice. It's important that there be some measures, some yardsticks, just as there are in other professions, but again, it's important that standards of conduct and performance evaluation lie within the domain of the Chief Justice of Ontario. This perhaps goes beyond the traditional role of the Chief Justice in terms of assigning judges to cases and determining case loads, but it's to the credit of the judiciary, who have been broadly consulted in this process, that they seem on the whole very supportive of these measures.

I can indicate perhaps the most pleasure of all in the announcement within this legislation of an intent, on a phased basis, to expand the Unified Family Court of Ontario. For many years now, in fact since 1977, the Unified Family Court in Hamilton has functioned in an admirable way. Some of the leading matrimonial case law in this province has come out of that court, and over many years Mr Justice Steinberg has presided and created in that court a model for the rest of the province.

Before I was elected I practised for many years in London, Ontario. There we had very fine court services, but unlike the Unified Family Court, you certainly never enjoyed one-stop shopping. In fact, I can remember, before the earlier courts of justice amendments, that if one wanted speedy and urgent relief one would go to the provincial court (family division). If one had an issue around the division of property or exclusive possession of the matrimonial home, one would have to ascend to what was then known as the county court, or district court in the northern reaches of our province. But if one wanted a divorce, one would then have to ascend to the Supreme Court of Ontario.

Since the amendments to the Courts of Justice Act, which were enacted, as I recall, in 1990, one had one superior court where one could deal with issues of property and issues of divorce and in some cases custody and access.

The point I'm trying to make is this: With a Unified Family Court, one doesn't have to go to several courts to gain the relief one may urgently need. One doesn't have to go, as it stands right now, to the Ontario Court (Provincial Division), or the General Division, or, if one's dealing with matters involving young offenders—before I was elected, if one was representing a young offender, one had to go to yet another of two different courts. If your young offender happened to be under the age of 16 in London, one would go to the provincial court (family division), but if one's client were over the age of 16 and under the age of 18, one would have to go over to the other side of the courthouse, where the criminal division sat.

The beauty of having a Unified Family Court is that one has basically one-stop shopping. Now, I got a lot of exercise travelling from one court to another, but I can't imagine that this is an ideal way to streamline the course of justice or to gain those kinds of cost-efficiencies we need to achieve in the face of the very considerable pressures our court system faces today. So it makes perfect sense to roll those different judicial remedies into the one court, a Unified Family Court, which under Bill 136 would be a separate division of the Ontario Court (General Division.)

I know that the bench and the bar and the community at large in London are very actively seeking to have a Unified Family Court in London. They make a very convincing case for that, given that we've had for many years some extraordinary support services for our courts.

We have a family court clinic in London which has played a very instrumental role in the manner in which cases involving young offenders and cases involving custody or access are dealt with. In fact we have a custody and access project as well. We have a very active family bar. For many years now, the services of the General Division and the Provincial Division in the area of family law are side by side.

There's a very good case to be made for having a Family Court in London. On the other hand, I know that consultations are ongoing between the province and the federal government in terms of judicial appointments because these appointments will, as the member for Dufferin-Peel observed, be federal appointments to the expanded Family Court. The number of judicial appointments, I expect, will undoubtedly influence the number and location of our expanded Unified Family Court system.

But all in all, I can say that the approach taken in Bill 136 is a very reasonable one. I think what we're going to see is some very active participation by the community resource committees that will advise government on the kind of resources each and every community may require. Some examples are supervised access or family mediation.

What I found over years of litigation in this particular area is that one can have orders from the courts on consent or as a result of a trial and a determination of the judge that can sometimes be very difficult to enforce without the appropriate kind of services in the community.

As well, I mentioned the custody and access project in London which has been flourishing for a long time and prepares expert assessments that judges use when they determine the very thorny and complex issues around custody and access. What mediation services can do is actually expedite the courts of justice and relieve some of the backlog in the courts. I think that's very important.

All in all, I see the expansion on a phased basis of the Unified Family Court as meeting a very timely need and being a very bold stride forward. I have asked on more than one occasion in the House in the past as to the status and ongoing negotiations on the matter of the Family Court. I'm pleased to see they've come to fruition.

Finally, I'd like to say a few words about the Small Claims Court. Other members in opposition have done so as well and the Attorney General adverted to the Small Claims Court in her introductory remarks. As you may know, Mr Speaker, under our current system outside Toronto, where we have a provincial court (civil division) and we have, in my recollection, several full-time Ontario court civil judges, who are akin to what's popularly known as Small Claims Court judges. These judges function on a full-time salary basis because of the huge volume of cases that come through the Toronto courts. But outside Toronto there are several different arrangements.

The one I'm most familiar with in London is the appointment of what are called deputy judges. These deputy judges, usually full-time, practising lawyers, devote time away from their law practices to disposing of what is a very considerable volume of cases that come through our Small Claims Court. These lawyers are paid a per diem for doing it. It's been my experience in London that lawyers have never been too reluctant to take on this role because it certainly enhances their knowledge and experience and training to deal with their own private litigation matters.

As well, in London, when the regular deputy Small Claims Court judges, these practising lawyers I mentioned who sit from week to week, are on vacation or unavailable, it's been the practice in the past—I don't know if it still is today—for the senior judge to ask other lawyers to come forward during the summer and perhaps sit for a day. It's been an understanding in the past that these lawyers would donate their per diems to charitable causes. I certainly would like to pay tribute to all of those lawyers over the years who have sat during the summer and donated their per diems to charitable causes. I think that's a very honourable tradition.

What we have on the whole is high-quality lawyers disposing of cases in the Small Claims Court in London and dispensing a very high standard of justice in a very cost-efficient way. There have been cases, I'm sure, where there have been complaints against deputy judges, just as there are against full-time members of the judiciary. But, unfortunately, there wasn't a formalized process for dealing with these complaints. What Bill 136 does as well is it provides a process for dealing with complaints and disciplining, if necessary, deputy judges in the Small Claims Court. It's done at the local level so it respects, if you will, the local concerns of the community.

Unlike certain members of the opposition who have said, "Perhaps we'll deter able and willing lawyers from acting as deputy court judges if we're going to have a discipline process," I would think that those lawyers I've observed in the past, sitting as Small Claims Court deputy judges, of sterling ability and high character, wouldn't be at all deterred in knowing that there's a formal complaint procedure and a formal process of discipline governing that.

Finally, the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee: I'm pleased to see that enshrined in legislation. It has been operating very well over the last five years. I think that both the early appointments and the additional appointments motivated by the Askov decision pressures reflect a very progressive approach to the appointment of judges. I'm really quite pleased to hear from the members of the bench and bar I still speak with that they're dispensing a very high quality of justice and are very sensitive to community needs and aspirations.

I perhaps have to take issue with the member for Willowdale, who said, and I quote him from Hansard, "I don't think it's an area where political correctness should lead the way." I don't see, as the member for Willowdale does, that there's going to be any sacrifice of merit or qualification, experience or integrity or compassion or wisdom simply because there may be perceived to be some measure of political correctness in the manner in which the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee conducts its business.

What's important, I think, is that people of ability and skill and experience and integrity will continue to be appointed and that the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee will govern its affairs at arm's length from the government. I think that's important to know and it's important to the public and to the respect of the public for the judicial system that there is a means of appointing judges, who wield considerable influence over the conduct of people's lives and can sometimes deprive them of their liberty, that judges are chosen based on their skill, experience, wisdom and integrity. I think the Judicial Appointments Advisory Committee goes a long way to removing the strong element of partisanship in the appointment of judges that may have held sway in the past.

On the whole, I see Bill 136 as being very timely, as being very progressive, and I'm looking forward to seeing Bill 136 implemented in the province of Ontario. In the meantime, I'm looking forward to the hearings at committee on Bill 136, which I'm confident will be quite fruitful and where we'll certainly hear more from the public, and perhaps the bench and bar, on this important piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Noble Villeneuve): Questions or comments.

Mr David Turnbull (York Mills): Mr Speaker, I would just point out that there isn't a quorum in the House.

The Acting Speaker: Could the clerk check to see if we have a quorum.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant and Clerk of Committees: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr Tim Murphy (St George-St David): I appreciate the opportunity to comment on the remarks by the member for London South. I was interested to hear him talk about the extension of the Unified Family Court—I know it's currently only in Hamilton-Wentworth, as I know you know, Mr Speaker—and the proposals to extend it to a few other jurisdictions in the short term and more in the longer term, which will be unfortunate for those other jurisdictions that won't get it in the near future.

But as I was listening to the member for London South speak, and he's the member for London South and parliamentary assistant to the Attorney General, and I believe the Attorney General's riding is in London too, it just led me to ask the question about where one of those early Unified Family Courts might be located—not that I would speculate.

I also wanted to comment on one remark he made about commenting on decisions made by judges and how it was not appropriate for legislators to do that. It leads to I guess a more philosophical discussion about the relationship between the judiciary and the Legislature, because one of the things I hear a lot about from my constituents is concerns about judges' decisions in criminal matters especially, and how they view sentences as inconsistent in certain circumstances and/or too lenient and how they get their view across to judges that that is the case and how we as legislators have a responsibility to balance the independence of the judiciary, and that is a valued thing in democracy, but also with the concern that the judiciary reflect what it is that the public is feeling in terms of sentences.

I think to say that the complaints procedure in this process deals with that doesn't address the issue at all. I think it's clear that it deals with another issue.

Hon Mike Farnan (Minister without Portfolio in Education and Training): Just as a colleague of the member for London South, I wanted to rise to thank him for the splendid presentation he made surrounding this legislation, but it did strike me as incongruous that this is always a learning opportunity, not only for members of the government but for members of the opposition.

Then it was kind of ironic to have the member for York Mills, representing the Progressive Conservative Party, walk into the House—not one Conservative member present in the House for this very splendid presentation—ask for a quorum, disappear, and still there is not a Conservative member present in the House while this presentation was taking place. It strikes me that simply—

Mr Larry O'Connor (Durham-York): Here comes the noodle back. The noodle's back.

Mr Turnbull: On a point of order, Mr Speaker—

Mr O'Connor: Congratulations. He returned.

Mr Turnbull: —it is my understanding that it is not the practice of this House to mention when members are not present. I am present. I stepped out to do something in the lobby.

There is a very great shortage of NDP members present here in the House, and if he wants me to start listing their names I will, each and every day, because their attendance is appalling in this House. They should not be paid for—

Interjections.

Mr Turnbull: They're being paid and yet they're not attending.

The Acting Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Hon Mr Farnan: Obviously, my remarks caused some embarrassment for the member who called a quorum and disappeared from this House.

The Acting Speaker: Commenting on the member for London South's participation in the debate.

Hon Mr Farnan: Unlike the member for York Mills,

I can comment on it because I listened to it. The member was not present and I can tell him, because he wasn't here, that it was a splendid presentation.

Mr Robert V. Callahan (Brampton South): I'd like to rise and speak in favour of Unified Family Courts. Many of the statements that have been made by the member for London are accurate, that in fact people have to go from court to court in many instances, particularly if they're trying to seek custody very quickly. They may wind up going to the family court and then perhaps to the General Division.

One thing I would like to speak to, which is unfortunate that this bill doesn't address and I'm hopeful that the Attorney General will look at and address in future legislation, is the fact that the court system, both at the General Division and in the Provincial Division, is being blocked by the large amount of work that it's required to perform. I would suggest that resort—and I notice that there is some resort to alternative dispute resolution mechanism—is going to have to be something that the legislators of the day are going to have to deal with.

Our courts cannot possibly be required to meet the demands of the apparent litigious nature of our society, and in fact what's happening is as a result of the lack of resources—and that's not a criticism of this government or any other government; it's just a fact of life—is that people are required to wait serious periods of time to get justice.

This becomes a very volatile and very dangerous situation in matrimonial situations, because we've seen instances of serious violence over the years in terms of not just the people who are in the court but also the lawyers and the participants. If delays are experienced, the emotion becomes so high that the children are the people who suffer, and in fact there is the possibility of violence occurring because of it. So I would hope that we would see more advances in terms of alternative dispute resolution mechanism, because I think that's the wave of the future.

The Acting Speaker: We can accommodate one final participant. Seeing none, the honourable member for London South has two minutes in response.

Mr Winninger: Just to address the last comment from the member for Brampton South: First, we are, in government, actively exploring and advancing alternative dispute resolution. There are several projects on the go, both in the nature of mediation and arbitration, that I think offer great potential to achieve the kind of objective in expediting the course of justice that the member for Brampton South referred to.

As to the comments from the member for St George-St David, yes, I agree, there are sometimes inconsistencies in the way judicial sentencing is meted out. I think the federal Justice minister recently observed the same and commented that perhaps some guidelines would be useful, other than the current guidelines that govern sentencing, which tend to be deterrents, rehabilitation and retribution.

The member for Cambridge was acute, as usual, in his observations until he was interrupted by a point of order from the member for York Mills, who returns to this House from time to time like the prodigal son.

Mr Turnbull: I have a better attendance than you. I've got better attendance than all your members put together.

Mr Winninger: The members opposite, other than the one who's stridently raising his voice at the moment, appreciate many of the progressive steps taken in Bill 136. Noteworthy, of course, is the expansion of the Unified Family Court on a phased basis.

Mr Murphy: I'm glad to have the opportunity to participate in this debate. I'm glad to see that the Attorney General has been here through the course of the debate, and I think that's to her credit. There has been an unfortunate tendency in this Legislature, and to a certain degree among this government, for the ministers who are shepherding bills through the Legislature not to be here.

The Attorney General, I think, has a specific obligation that rises above even other cabinet ministers' in terms of shepherding legislation through the House, in terms of keeping an eye on legislation, that is historically a different one. There is a non-political tradition to the role of the Attorney General, and it's one that it's important to remember.

It's good that the Attorney General is here to listen, because we're hearing not just about this particular bill, which has some creditable aspects to it. It builds on reforms that were commenced under the predecessor in the seat I'm now proud to represent, the great riding of St George-St David, Mr Ian Scott, who as Attorney General put in some of these measures which are now being formalized.

There are some few details I would like to comment on, and one of them is the question about judicial education and standards for judicial conduct and performance evaluations. In fact, I'm glad to see this in here. I know it was in the previous bill. I won't make comment on the particular discipline hearing, but there is a sensitive debate about the issue of discipline of judges, for example. We have a range of ages and experiences among judges and it's important for the standards to be made clear. The degree to which, for example, the private behaviour of judges should reflect on their performance of public duties is an important question, one that has come up, to a certain extent, in a recent discipline. It's important for those rules of conduct to be made clear to judges, both for the judges' purposes and for the purposes of the public at large and other participants in the justice system. Making the rules clear has a virtue for everyone.

I know the Chief Judge was given that role in this system. I'm saying, not so much to the Attorney General directly but through her, on behalf of the public, to the Chief Judge that I think there is virtue in that.

The member for Willowdale, in his comments earlier—it may not have been about this bill—was talking about the role of the Chief Judge and the new powers this is going to give to the Chief Judge and the balance between the Chief Judge and the other judges in the system. I think there is a valid point made there. Whether or not that will be a real problem, I guess only time will tell.

It's something, though, that it's important the Attorney General and her very able deputy keep an eye on for future reform possibilities. There may be some tension there. I have, in conversations with individuals, who for obvious reasons will remain unnamed, picked up some of that tension already. But I'm not sure it's yet sufficient to cause public concern; it's more just a watchword to the wise.

I do want to talk about what's not covered by the bill. There are some good things in here and I think this will go through this assembly without much division, but it does provide an opportunity, it seems to me, to talk about some other issues, some that come from my experience as a lawyer. One of them is that we did have, as the member for London South mentioned, a move towards unifying the courts from the old hodgepodge of the district court and the county court to a more centralized system of justice, where you could get the same no matter where you were and you could go to one place and get access, depending on some jurisdictional issues related to the federal and provincial concerns.

But what we are seeing is a respecialization in the courts. I think about the commercial list, which has a virtue for those people who are conducting commercial litigation. You get very excellent judges who have a high degree of knowledge within those areas and a high degree of skill and familiarity. While that has a virtue, there is a degree to which that is taking away from the intent of the very reforms we had before. In other words, we're creating specialized panels. We may be doing something by accident which in fact we would want to do by design, but I think it's important that we have the debate about that and talk about that.

But I do want to say, while the Attorney General is here, that what is missing from this is a discussion that we need to have about the justice system on one of the things I hear most about, and that is the question of access to the justice system in general. That's a variety of things. One of the things that people say to me all the time is that it costs too much, it takes too long and, at the end of the day, you don't get justice.

The cost comes in two forms. Obviously, there's the cost of lawyers, but there's the cost of the process, the cost to the system itself. I won't reveal the parties, but not long before coming here I was involved in a very lengthy civil matter, a six-month-long civil matter between a number of parties that took up an immense amount of judicial resources, court reporters, the commissioners' time etc.

The question I had, thinking about it, was whether there is a sensible way to have litigants who can afford it contribute to the cost of using the system. This is my own idea I'm just floating at this point. I don't want to be in any way misleading as to that being a position. But it's an idea that came to me as I was going through that very trial, that there is an enormous cost to the system about resolving those disputes. There is obviously a virtue to resolving those disputes, but at the same time, we are finding more and more, in the civil justice system especially, that the time between the filing of pleadings and going to trial is lengthening, the cost in that interim period is increasing and the length of trials themselves is increasing.

We have to find a way. Alternative dispute resolution is obviously one of them. I had expressed one concern about the current court-centred project. I have a concern about the confidentiality provisions related to how and when disputes get settled and who can have access to that. I think it is important for the public to have access to those records.

That being said, I think a measure that would allow or require, for example, the loser in a civil court case to pay some of the costs of using the court—I mean, after a certain threshold—may encourage settlement, first of all, and may encourage access to alternative dispute resolution mechanisms.

I put that out as an idea for the Attorney General. Whether it can work or not is subject to the debate and consideration of better minds than mine, but it's there for the offering.

I think too about the issue of speed of access. There is a real concern among the middle class on this. There is legal aid, which can resolve some of those who don't have the resources, although that is a separate problem in and of itself. People who have money can afford a lawyer, although that is expensive, but there is a broad middle group of people who, in a dispute of significant sums for them but not significant in the grander scheme, cannot get equitable resolution through the courts because it just costs too much.

The classic example is, if your roof repairer does not do the job well and there's a $10,000 cost and you have to replace it completely, you go to a lawyer and the lawyer will say: "I can send a nasty letter, but if you want to sue, it's going to cost you too much. It'll cost you more than the $10,000 to pay me and go through the process, even if you win." There's something wrong with a system that has that happen.

Part of the solution, it seems to me, is the jurisdiction of the Small Claims Court. Some of those steps have been taken. For example, I would argue that we should look to something like $15,000 as a limit on Small Claims Court jurisdictions and enhancing the role of individuals with rules not unlike those we have now even, which effectively discourage participation of lawyers in that process but none the less allow a certain procedural justice to pertain to the process. That's one of the things I think we've got to look at. That isn't being dealt with now.

I know there is a civil justice review project under way. My concern is that is going to postpone looking at these effectively until after the next election. Either the current Attorney General or another member of her party or any of the other two will be left with that task, and in the interim the delays in the civil side of the process may increase.

I do want to talk briefly about legal aid. I think we are heading towards a crisis in legal aid. The Law Foundation of Ontario has traditionally funded it out of proceeds from trust accounts. That is becoming more and more problematic for the law foundation. It's costing more and more and there's less to contribute. Lawyers are frustrated with the process. There's a slow, slow payment. In fact there's quite an arrears from the legal aid plan to lawyers across the province, which is of concern.

There is a debate we have to have at some point, whether it's at this point or later, about how we police legal aid certificates. It's a difficult issue, I agree entirely, because there is an independence we want to allow individuals to pursue claims, but by the same token there is a public desire, and an appropriate one, for accountability for tax dollars spent. It's not all public money, which is important to remember. Lawyers contribute through a reduction in their fees and through the law foundation and other sources, as well as the public purse, so there's a balance to be struck.

There are many times, and I won't point to specific examples, where delays were sought, many appearances, money was poured into lawsuits through the public purse that may or may not have been justified in a broader perspective, but the individual litigant might have thought so. How we strike that balance, how we make sure lawyers make responsible decisions in those cases, how individual clients and the public monitor that is an important debate to have, and I think this does not do it, unfortunately.

The role of paralegals in the system can be and should be another important debate. We haven't yet been having that one, whether paralegals can be part of the resolution of the cost of justice and the slowness of justice and whether they can play a role in the disputes of a lesser sum or of a more minor criminal nature, for example. We should be having that debate as well.

In terms of the cost of justice and access to lawyers, and I'm actually surprised that the Attorney General hasn't moved more on this, I think it's the CAW that had a legal service plan which was in essence a form of insurance through the participants in the Canadian Auto Workers, where they could pay a fixed sum and have access to lawyers for certain services. Those lawyers were put on a salary. Whether that is a model that can be used in some circumstances for cheaper access to justice is something I thought this government might have looked at and moved on.

I also think one of the issues that this doesn't address is the question of diversity in the profession itself. Madam Justice Bertha Wilson wrote a lengthy report on the gender equality within the profession. I practised downtown Toronto, as they say, and one of the concerns I had was that, essentially, the practice of law has not a great amount of diversity at this point in time.

One of the things I'm working on, and in fact I've talked to the law society and I've talked to a number of law firms in the downtown area which have expressed an interest—and I'm glad to see the Attorney General here; she might be interested in this idea. One of the things we find is that some people in certain areas don't think that law's a career they can achieve, especially in some visible minority communities which are not adequately represented in the legal profession.

I would like to see a program that allows people in high school, the bright ones, the opportunity to go and spend some time in a law firm. In fact, I'm working with the law society and some law firms on that very plan. If the Attorney General would like to help me out in that plan, I'd be glad to have her assistance.

I'm concerned too about the family support plan. I know it was raised today in the Legislature, but my experience in my community office tells me that there is a great frustration with the failure of the family support plan out there, that there are incredible arrears, difficulty in collection. There's a problem that needs some kind of fixing. I'm not sure that what the leader of the third party recommended today is any kind of answer to that, but there is a concern there, and it's a valid concern. We need also to address that, and I'm not sure this is doing it.

You have to think about, if you look back on this government from the perspective of a pre-election mode, which we seem to be in more and more these days, what are the achievements of the government within the justice system? The list unfortunately is not very long.

Historically, when you look at the role of attorneys general, they have often been the leaders within governments. I think of Ian Scott and Roy McMurtry, Arthur Wishart, Fred Cass, who have all been strong proponents and advancers of the cause within their cabinets at the time.

I know this Attorney General is placed in a difficult role by not being a lawyer. I think she has done a creditable job in at least keeping out of trouble, and I'll give her that, at least relatively speaking. But I think the list of achievements in the justice system unfortunately is not very long, and that is an unfortunate thing.

I think also about what is not being dealt with within the justice system, and there, right now, we are in the course of a public concern about crime and safety in our communities. That, in the riding of St George-St David, is what I hear every day. I go and talk to my constituents and they're concerned about leaving their homes, concerned about walking in their neighbourhoods, concerned about not just random violence, which has been what has been in the press recently, but what they view and feel is a systematic increase in the amount of violence they are facing in their lives and in their community.

I've mentioned this before in this House and I will mention it again: In 51 Division, which is in the south end of my riding, between July and December of 1993 there were 460 weapons offences in that one division alone. I talked just today with one of the detective sergeants in that division, who said to me, for example, that for weapons offences, especially the guns, there is an almost 100% connection between gun offences and the drug trade involved at least in the crime in that division. I am concerned about that connection and what we can do about it. We need to have that debate and we need to have the opportunity to have that debate, and it's unfortunate.

I know my leader, Lyn McLeod, proposed to the Solicitor General that we have a committee to look into those concerns. We proposed what I thought was a very reasonable list: crime prevention, what the real statistics were, gun control, community policing, and one other thing which slips my mind at the moment. There were five things, a very reasonable list, and the government has said that they don't want to have a couple of things on it because they might come up to criticisms.

For example, community policing. I know the Solicitor General has been saying, "We don't want to discuss that because, well, some people will come and talk about the social contract." I'm not sure that's a valid reason not to come and talk about it, because I know in my community, and I'm sure in the Attorney General's and every other member's in here, if you say, "Would you think it would be helpful to you to have more community-based policing, have foot patrols in your community?" they would all say yes.

It may not always be the most effective way to police in some communities, but it's valuable to have that debate. I think the committee could have had a role and it's unfortunate that the government and the third party are stalling on this. We had expected to be under way by now and we're not. I think that is problematic.

One of the things that recently we discussed—I believe it was in public accounts committee; it was actually the Solicitor General's ministry that came in, but it applies as well to the Attorney General's ministry—is the issue of how we judge whether our justice system is effective. It's a difficult question—more so in the civil context. Ultimately, the measure in a civil context must be public satisfaction, I suppose, but how you measure that is difficult. You can't, obviously, do it by the number of claims that result because you don't know how many claims don't come into the system because there isn't middle-class access to the justice system. Certainly, in the criminal justice system, one of the effective measures of whether it works has to be whether you are preventing crime from happening again by the operation of your system.

I was shocked to learn, as I'm sure most of the constituents in my riding would be, that the Solicitor General's ministry really had no idea that the recidivism rates, which are the number of people who return to prison having been there once or previously, had only recently started being collected and even those were not agreed to be a very effective judge of the system. There was no sense of what was going to work, what did work, what couldn't work.

We need to have a much more effective debate and much more effective policies about what we're going to do when the criminal justice system sends the message that crime won't pay, to use the old cliché and to figure out what is the balance between rehabilitation, deterrence, retribution even, as the member for London South, for example, referred to. Sentencing guidelines may very well be what we end up referring to. There is a real inconsistency, it strikes me, in the sentencing, even within this province.

The study came out, I believe it was, last fall, showing the pattern of sentencing across the country. There was a wide variation from province to province. I can't see how that contributes to a sense of confidence in the criminal
